

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL. Mark xvi. 15.
How shall they preach except they be SENT? Rom. x. 15.

VOL. XXIV.

No. 1.

“My Spirit remaineth with you, fear ye not.”

SUCH was the inspiring language with which Jehovah roused his people, in a time of general discouragement, to a courageous prosecution of religious enterprise. Whoever might be against them, God was for them; and that was enough. However dilapidated their temple and imperfect its observances; however humble, in comparison with the former glory, were the sanctuary and the vessels and instruments of sacrifice, yet the power of the world to come was in the worship. God's Spirit kindled a holy fire on the altar of the heart; and this alone was a guaranty for the bestowment of all other blessings, and for the preparation of their hearts to receive them.

The friends of HOME MISSIONS have a similar ground of encouragement with reference to their work. The Spirit of God is in it; he is moving on the hearts of his people, and stirring up their zeal for the propagation of the Gospel throughout our expanding borders. He descends in reviving showers on the missionary fields; and multitudes, who before were cumberers of the ground, become fruitful trees in the garden of God. Let us welcome this presence of the Holy Spirit as a gracious pledge that our enterprise is accepted of Heaven, and a virtual command to press forward to attempt and to expect still greater things hereafter.

There are many things in the condition of our country which may well discourage us, if we walk by sight and do not look up in faith to the throne of God. The very immensity of the Home Missionary work is appalling. So many hundred thousand miles of territory which we have but just touched with our missions; and so many more upon which the messengers of peace have not yet even set their feet! so many immigrants crowding in, and so degraded, unapproachable and indocile! And then, the piety, intelligence and public spirit which have made the East what it is—and on which we mainly rely for leavening the growing masses of the remoter sections—become too widely diffused when sent out into those interminable fields. Will our evangelism, then, be able to overcome those antagonist influences, and to do at the West, under so many disadvantages, what it did when concentrated at home, in building schools and churches and founding all other wholesome social institutions? If in answering this question we must proceed on merely human principles, we shall be obliged to give a disheartening reply. But we are not abandoned to such a conclusion. “MY SPIRIT,” saith the Lord, “REMAINETH WITH YOU, FEAR YE NOT.” We look abroad over fields, which, ten years ago, seemed as forbidding as any that now remain—as rife with error, as beset with repulsive circumstances—but now evidently subjugated to intelligence, temperance and order by the preached Gospel, made effective by the silent and pervading influence of the Holy Spirit. And the renewal of revival influences, from year to year, assures us that thus it shall be in still more copious and powerful measures in time to come.

Again—many hearts are filled with apprehension by the changes which the increasing facilities of intercourse and the expansion of trade are producing. These multiply temptations and intensify their power. Success in business formerly depended mainly on industry and integrity; now, on enterprise and keen attention, and of course is attended with great excitement. Men will not now pause on the great thoroughfares to keep God's holy day, when the car or the steamboat promises to place them two or three hundred miles further on their journey by Monday morning. A larger number of the people than formerly are away from home—rolling on wheels or floating by steam; they are less under domestic restraint, and more beset by the thousand allurements spread for the traveler. Fireside regularity and sweet family influences, the watchful eyes of neighbors, the church, the prayer meeting, the communion table—are things that do not travel; but every ministry of sin and death—the baits of intemperance, the temptations of the gambler, the nameless dissipations of large towns, thoroughfares and taverns, the corrupting intercourse of godless associates—these are all abroad; their malign effects are felt in every conveyance and at every station and landing place. Will our increasing thousands of migratory population be able to bear such an ordeal without injury? Will there not by their means be a rapid deterioration of morals even in the more retired towns and hamlets of the land? Here, again, our apprehensions are met by the same confidence, that an overruling God can make these very agencies of intercourse and enterprise bear with them the antidote to their own evil. It is probable that moral influences have advanced more rapidly and triumphantly along the rail roads and rivers of our land than in any other portions; and that, although as a first effect many things may change for the worse, in consequence of increasing intercourse, those sections are on the whole in a more hopeful moral condition than they otherwise would have been. And the reason is, the God of the Gospel is also the God of providence. He builds those national highways, and bridges our lakes, and binds the East and the West together with bands of iron; and we may depend upon it, that he has his own ends in view—ends which shall not fail of accomplishment for want of power. And when, on these railways and steamers, many are running to and fro, and knowledge is rapidly increased; and when, also, hundreds of temples are annually rising to his praise, and revivals are multiplied all over the country, we cannot but hear in these results the animating word, "MY SPIRIT REMAINETH WITH YOU, FEAR YE NOT."

But there are other sources of discouragement within the church herself, which are more afflictive to the people of God than any external circumstances. Evils, sanctioned by time and defended by law, lie in the way of the world's conversion. Divisions seem to grow wider; questions of reform are discussed with increasing conviction to all parties that they are severally right, and the others wickedly wrong. A difference in the measures to attain an end is treated as if it were hostility to the end itself. Sectarianism is honeyed over with the name of a proper denominationalism; and the talent and energy that should be spent by the subdivisions of the Lord's host upon the great common enemy of Christ and souls, is worse than wasted upon each other. This, above all things, is adapted to cause the heart of the Christian to fail him, for fear that the Spirit will be grieved away.

Doubtless, he is grieved—not at the imperfection of men's judgments, by which they fail to hold the same views of truth and duty; but by their exclusiveness and want of holy charity. But here, again, he does not deal with us after our sins, nor reward us according to our iniquities; for as the heaven is high above the earth, so far do God's patience and mercy transcend what we might expect. The blessing descends, in a greater or less degree, upon these various tribes of Israel. Notwithstanding their strife with each other, they follow the same pillar of cloud, and the heavenly manna is sent down to them all. Bad as are the internal evils of the church, they might be worse. God does not forsake her; therefore, let us not fear. Instead of being disheartened, because there are diversities of operations, let us be animated by the abundant evidence that there is still one Spirit—the Spirit which is able and has undertaken to work out a victory of truth and love over darkness and sin.

Such cheering conclusions find confirmation in the notices which we group on the following pages, gathered from reports which come to us from different parts of the missionary field. These tokens of God's remembrance sent down from heaven, assure us that the work of evangelization is not ours alone, but eminently his—dear to his heart, guaranteed by his promises and sustained by his power. In this we rejoice, yea, and we will rejoice. Not all the greatness and difficulties of the work, nor the unfitness of the instruments, shall impair our confidence in its accomplishment, so long as, high and clear above the dust of worldly activity and the din of controversy, we can hear the inspiring note, "MY SPIRIT REMAINETH WITH YOU, FEAR YE NOT!"

Revivals of Religion.

IOWA.

From Rev. Williston Jones, Cedar Rapids, Linn Co.

We have enjoyed three seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; one, last spring, in a neighborhood a few miles from our village; another, commencing the last of November in another neighborhood; and the third in this place, commencing with the dedication of our house of worship, at which time we began a series of meetings that continued for two weeks. These resulted in the hopeful conversion of about 30 souls; the other two seasons of interest were attended by the hopeful change of some 35 or 40.

Three young men, connected with our church, have the ministry in view. One of them is a German, not yet two years from his fatherland.

During this winter there has been a revival among the Germans in this vicinity, which has resulted in the hopeful conversion of some 10 or 15. It appears to be a genuine work.

Twenty family altars have been erected the past year, in connection with the labors of your missionary, and more than thirty in the field which he occupies.

Our house of worship is completed in the midst of deep poverty and great discouragements. We have fought and won a great battle in respect to temperance; and liquor is now retailed only by stealth.

What a prodigious alteration must ensue, and what advantages must follow to the community in which sixty or seventy souls, in the judgment of charity, are born anew from above, thirty new family altars set up, the house of God erected, and the life-blood of intemperance no more allowed free circulation! Surely, such results ought to make the year in which they have been granted, a jubilee in the grateful recollections of that people; for, without doubt, in these events is involved the eternal destiny of multitudes, not of the present generation alone, but of those who shall come after, and who will thus receive a training in the right ways of the Lord.

From Rev. Alfred Wright, Anamosa, Jones Co.

Meetings continued for several days were held by the Methodists and the United Brethren; after which, Mr. W. informs us,—

Our own church followed up this effort by a protracted meeting of one week, in which there were several marked conversions. We then united with the Methodists and continued our meetings two weeks longer. During this time, there have been, as we suppose, thirty conversions. Eleven of these have offered themselves to this church. Fourteen have offered themselves to the Methodists. Others are undecided as to their church relations. The United Brethren and the Baptists will doubtless share in the fruits of this work.

From Rev. S. J. Francis, Lyons, Clinton Co.

Speaking of the religious efforts made in this congregation in February last, Mr. F. writes,—

It is with feelings of love and thankfulness to God, and of gratitude to you and the patrons of the Society who have sustained us here to the present time, that I now sit down to communicate the results of our efforts here.

On the 17th of February last we commenced holding daily meetings. We visited through the day till 2½ P. M., at which time we had meetings for conference and prayer, and meetings in the evening for prayer and preaching. Our house was crowded with anxious hearers. The meetings continued thirteen days, and then the cold weather compelled us to stop. We may say that it was the best meeting that has ever been held in Lyons.

Of the results, the following particulars are given :—

The church was greatly quickened. The members prayed, and felt, as they never did before, the power of truth. The Spirit of God went through the community to such a degree that sinners wept, and passed sleepless nights, and, as we trust, gave their hearts to the Saviour. Dead professors were revived. Hardened and bitter enemies quarrelled with themselves, with those conducting the meeting, and with God; and were ill at ease. People generally felt that God was here. There will be fifteen or twenty brought into the churches. Heads of families are learning to pray. One intelligent husband and father told me, when he was rejoicing in the Saviour's love, that had it not been for the disgrace upon his family, he would, with his own hand, have put an end to his life; he felt so miserable.

It was good to be here, and so thought the members of the church, and those brethren who were with us, and preached for us. We think that the people in Lyons will not soon forget that meeting. It has given us vantage ground, and we can now prosecute our work with stronger hope of success.

Conversion of a Lady and her Daughter.

The following cases of unusual interest are mentioned in the report of a revival in this state :

Mrs. — is a woman of more than ordinary abilities. Peculiarly German in her habits of thought, from a German family in Pennsylvania. Owing to the difficulty of getting board, I applied to her family for a home. They had no wish to take a boarder, but to accommodate me they generously offered me a home for a time. Thus, by a kind of particular providence, which neither they nor I shall ever forget, I was introduced into a family where prayer was never offered upon a family altar, whose head and heaven-appointed priest never prayed, or mentioned the name of God to his children; whose mother had never heard a prayer except a public one, till she was thirty years of age. Yet her mind was by no means at rest. She told me that the first moment she saw me, she had a kind of strange, secret impression that I was to be the instrument of a blessing to her soul—that she was the more anxious that I should come to her house to live, that I might exert a greater and more direct influence upon her religious nature.

She had, for a long time, and even always, more or less, a deep inward longing for something she did not possess. Having about her the evidences of a disease which generally terminates in a very sudden death, she felt fearful. In the night she thought of her situation, and would say to her husband, "Oh, I wish I could pray; but I cannot pray.

The words sink back into my soul. God does not hear me." He would coldly turn her off by saying that "it was all nonsense—that she was under hysterical excitement;" and with such like talk.

She told me freely her feelings while tears flowed down her cheeks. She had been a neglecter of religion; had for months stayed away from the house of God; had been a great novel reader; also had read many infidel works. Now she regretted, with bitter tears, what she had read. She would not have her daughter read the same for all the world. They had never satisfied her mind, but only filled it with gloomy and ever-intruding doubts. She admired the simplicity of the Christian's faith; she wished she could believe, but could not. This was the state of her mind and she wished to be rid of these doubts and fears. She had with such confidence committed these religious feelings to me, and also her hopes that I should do her some good, that I felt for a long time a deepening anxiety for her soul. At length I became burdened with a longing for her salvation. Had God committed this soul to me for naught? Will not God hear my prayer and convert her? I fasted and prayed; my bed held me awake. At length she perceived that I was much cast down, and inquired the cause. I frankly told her that it was anxiety for her soul. She seemed much affected. I urged her to give her heart to God at once; told her she must give up all; asked her what held her back. She referred to the opposition she should receive from her husband; told her she must be willing to encounter that and everything else. Her anxieties deepened to a heavy burden. Finally, while reading a sermon on faith, which a kind friend had loaned her, light broke in upon her mind. It was the precious light of Jesus discovered by faith and love.

The opposition and ridicule she had anticipated from her husband was all realized. He persecuted her as much as his own sense of decency and the light of the nineteenth century would allow him. He said it was all priestcraft and morbid excitement; he cursed the day I ever entered his house, and would have gladly turned me away. He said I had spoiled his home.

The daughter (the only one at home) at first felt the same opposition. They both walked as if they were "kicking against the pricks." Their eyes threw daggers at me. At length her mother told the daughter all her experience. It melted her. Yet she said, "If I do become good, Mr. — shall not know it." But she became deeply convicted; her conduct in opposing her mother oppressed her conscience. "What shall I do? Cannot Mr. — come and talk and pray for me?" He did so, and soon had the pleasure of sharing with her the joys of one who has found the Saviour. Her love is as great as was her hatred before.

The Lord preserve them and make them instruments in the salvation of others! The joy I have shared with these in their fresh and glowing love to Christ, would more than pay me for many journeys to the West.

From Rev. D. Lane, Keosauqua, Van Buren Co.

There is now an interesting work of grace in this town. Three individuals, two of whom have been noted for their unbelief, have renounced all their former erroneous views, and have publicly expressed their belief in the great doctrines of Christianity.

Numbers of our citizens are awakened to the great interests of religion; some are enquiring what they must do to be saved,—I do not know how many.

From Rev. B. Roberts, Marion, Linn Co., we learn that some forty or fifty cases of hopeful renewing have taken place there. Fourteen have been added to the church, and others were expected at the next communion. The Methodists, Baptists, and Old School Presbyterians likewise shared in the results of the work.

Revival in Keokuk.

Rev. T. Lyman writes from Fort Madison as follows:

I have been absent for more than two weeks in Keokuk, where I have been assisting Rev. Mr. Williams in a very interesting revival in that place. You will be glad to learn that that church of your patronage is thus blessed.

The work goes on, like all the other great works of God, with little noise. Still, silent, deep conviction, with little or no excitement, but such as is consonant with such conviction, is the characteristic of the work. Many old backsliders are reclaimed ; some are converted from the world. Especially, a feeling of love and confidence is established among church members. This last mentioned is one of the best fruits of a revival in the West. It is so everywhere, but in a peculiar sense in the West, where all come together as strangers, and no one knows the historical character of his brother. These protracted meetings have a very good tendency to unite these stranger elements together.

MISSOURI.

*From Rev. H. H. Hayes, Houston,
Marion Co.*

To the church in Newark 15 have been added on profession of faith. At a protracted meeting held there in September, the Spirit of God was manifest, and deep feeling in saints and sinners gave such solemnity to the meeting, as had not been experienced there for years. We worship in a log school-house that will seat 100 ; but for the sake of more room we moved to a carpenter's shop. On the Sabbath this did not hold more than half the people. Twenty professed hope in Christ. A few of these joined the Baptist and some the Methodist Societies. Newark is an important point. The country about there is filling up, and people come in to church for ten miles around. After our meeting, an effort was made to build a church. Bricks were burnt and the foundation laid, but cold weather set in and stopped the work. It will go on in the spring.

A Sunday School in the Woods.

There has never been a school at Newark till last summer. The good people thought they were too much scattered. An effort was made and $25 raised at once for a library, and to the astonishment of everybody, between 80 and 90 scholars came forward to join the classes. Our house would not hold them and leave room for teachers to move about. So the boys took to the woods. Each teacher went to a fallen tree and arranged his class upon it. These classes were scattered about out of sight of each other. I have never seen a more interesting school, and what makes it so is, that teachers and scholars take so much interest in it. Some come six or seven miles.

From Rev. W. H. Smith, Cross Timbers, Hickory Co.

Speaking of the results of the last year, our missionary says—

God has poured out his Spirit. His people here have been refreshed, sinners have been converted ; and great good has been done, whereof we are glad. Christ has been made to several the "wisdom of God and the power of God unto salvation." This has given me renewed zeal in the cause of my Master. Some are yet serious, and I hope rich blessings are in store for them.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. Chas. Morgan, East Troy, Walworth Co.

Near the last of January, the church began to feel, and expressed the desire for special and protracted efforts for the salvation of souls. We resolved to commence by several successive meetings for prayer and humiliation before God, and family visitation.

On our coming together, it was manifest that God was with us. The hearts of Christians were broken in view of their unfaithfulness ; and for days their earnest prayers went up for the pouring forth of the Spirit upon the multitude of impenitent around us. In view of my poor health, and the increasing desire for preaching, it was thought best, if possible, to procure aid from abroad. A neighboring pastor, Rev. L. Foote, of Delavan, labored with us for several weeks with great acceptance and success. There soon appeared to prevail a general seriousness and disposition to investigate the subject of religion ; and several prominent individuals, hitherto exceedingly sceptical, were brought to the knowledge of the truth. Now was heard, on every side, the anxious inquiry, "What must I do to be saved?" and many rejoicing in the hope of life. Never before, it is said, has East Troy enjoyed such a work of grace—so sweet and precious—so marked, as conceded by all, as the work of the Holy Spirit, with little excitement, and scarcely any opposition.

A peculiar and most interesting feature of this work is, that it has taken hold of quite a number of the most influential men in this community—men well known as Sceptics and Deists, and averse to religion. One of this number, when sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind, said, "I have been for twenty years on board of the piratical ship of Deism, and my prayer to God now is, that I may do as much for Christ and his cause, as I have done to oppose him." Another infidel of talent and respectability, under the power of the truth, bowed upon his knees, and cried in agony: "God of my mother, have mercy on me!" His mother is a devoted Christian in the state of New York.

"God of my Mother!" How much is revealed in that single exclamation; how conclusively it proves that this man had a mother, whose faithfulness left its impress on his soul too deep to be obliterated by time and sin; and how eloquently it pleads with other christian mothers to be diligent in inculcating the religion of Jesus, and encourages them to expect the quickening of the seed which they sow, though it lie buried long.

Of those indulging hope and giving, so far as we can judge, good evidence, there are between forty and forty-five. Of these about twenty-five are heads of families, many of whom have already erected an altar to God in their households, from which ascends the morning and evening sacrifice. The work seems mostly to be confined to our society and congregation. The interest continues, and there are numbers deeply anxious for the salvation of their souls.

This revival will change the face of things very much in this community; and I trust will add somewhat to the strength and moral influence of our little church.

From Rev. M. P. Kinney, Whitewater.

An Extensive and Precious Revival.

The last quarter of my missionary year has been a season of labor, exhausting to my physical energies, but refreshing to my soul. I have found it sweet, indeed, to be called upon to answer the most important question ever propounded by human lips—to feel that souls, immortal in their destiny, were earnestly inquiring after the way of salvation.

How the Work was begun.

The revival commenced with the church of which I am pastor, and I may say with the pastor himself. My own unworthiness, and a sense of the responsibility resting upon me as a watchman on Zion's walls, came home to my heart with crushing weight. I sought relief in communion with my Saviour, and tried to cast the burden upon his willing hands. The ear of God seemed open to my earnest, importunate prayer, and I renewed my consecration to him, and labored with the expectation of meeting a happy result. The brethren and sisters began to feel their responsibility, and to come up to the help of the Lord. Sinners were pricked in their hearts, and cried for mercy. Other christian denominations joined us, and the work moved steadily forward. I cannot, as yet, state the result with any degree of accuracy. Many are still serious. Twenty-five have united with us, and others are expecting to at the next communion season, fifteen with the Methodists, and some thirty with the Baptists. I think at least one hundred have passed from death unto life.

We took possession of our new church edifice last spring, and during this winter God has been pleased to make it the birth place of many souls. We have enjoyed a most precious refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Never has this place and surrounding country been so thoroughly moved by the Spirit of God. The ordinary means of grace were used, and multiplied to meet the demand. Stillness, thoughtfulness and solemnity characterized our meetings, while sinners trembled before the truth and submitted unto God. The middle aged and the youth together wept over their sins, and sought and trusted in the Saviour. Zion here has been made to rejoice at the triumphs of the Redeemer's cross. I can say truly "My soul doth magnify the Lord."

As a consequence of the spiritual strength thus received, it is expected that Further Aid will not be needed.

This quarter closes my engagement with the American Home Missionary Society. It is my conviction that this church and society should now support their own pastor; and I shall try to urge them to bear the burden. I shall, therefore, take leave of you, expressing for myself, and in behalf of the church, our grateful acknowledgments for the aid which we have received from the churches through your hands. I trust it will appear in the judgment, that the means thus given have done much good.

*From Rev. S. W. Eaton, Lancaster,

The Congregational and Methodist churches of this place were simultaneously visited with an increase of spiritual influences, the results of which were about equally shared by the two denominations.

I co-operated with the Methodists as far as I could, and also held separate meetings for prayer and inquiry, some of which were intensely interesting. In one instance, when many both of Christians and the impenitent were assembled, the Spirit was so manifestly present, and with such power, as to make it a truly memorable occasion. The supernatural influence was felt by every one, and all seemed equally overpowered by it. Strong men, whose eyes were unused to tears, bowed and wept like children.

The result of the whole effort is, that about forty persons give evidence of having been converted. Some of them are to be received as members of the Congregational church next Sabbath.

From Rev. Dana Lamb, Alto, Fond du Lac Co.

Mr. Lamb preaches also at Springvale, where he resides. Of the work at Alto, he says :

A revival prevailed, principally among heads of families. Some fourteen family altars have been established, either for the first time, or where they had been discontinued. Of those who had relinquished their hope, or were hopefully converted, there are about twenty. We feel that we have great cause of gratitude for what the Lord has done for us the year past.

*From Rev. John Lewis, Platteville,
Grant Co.*

I noticed in my pastoral visits, during the last of the fall and the first of the winter, a special sense of spiritual desolation. Complaints of unwonted darkness were frequent in our social meetings. These were not cold, heartless, self satisfying complaints, uttered as a matter of course. There was manifestly a growing feeling of dissatisfaction in view of it. The feeling of many hearts was—"We cannot have it so—Oh that it were with us as in months past." I could not but regard this as an encouraging symptom, and began to multiply our social meetings. These increased in interest, and at length preaching every evening was commenced. These meetings, together with meetings in the afternoon, were continued for four or five weeks. The Lord was manifestly present, and made the truth powerful in the reviving of his people, the reclaiming of backsliders, and the conversion of the impenitent. None have yet been admitted to the church, but 60 or 70 are indulging hope that they have passed from death into life. Among them there are some of all ages, from twelve years old up to threescore years and ten. Romanists, Universalists, Moralists, have turned away from their refuges of lies to trust alone in the merits of a sin atoning Saviour. Lips, once profane, now utter the praises of God; and families, once prayerless, have now an altar where God is daily worshipped. I cannot but believe that the standard of piety has been permanently elevated, and that the graces, as well as the numbers of this church will be increased. A tribute of thanks is especially due to brethren who gave us their faithful labors and assistance.

There are still indications of the special presence of the Spirit, and I find myself entirely unable to do all that needs to be done. I am now preaching at one of my outposts, where there are cheering indications. This, together with lectures to young converts, compels me to preach at least once a day on an average. I hope ere long to be able to tell you that the Lord is doing a good work all over this mining region.

Incidents in a Revival.

During the past year we have enjoyed a precious revival of religion. Its influence, to some extent, has been felt on the community generally, although many are not converted. Still they are led to respect religion and religious people.

There were, during this season of interest, some very signal answers to prayer.

There were several members of the church who had impenitent companions, some of whom had not been present at any of our meetings. The minds of the church seemed one day led out in prayer for them in an unusual manner, and the same day two or three, although not present, and knowing nothing of the fact, hopefully submitted their hearts to Christ; one of them six miles away, and, as near as we could learn, the same hour the church were praying for her.

A woman who was impenitent, and had been brought up in an irreligious family, became dissatisfied because her husband spent so much time in serving God, and told him she should leave and go to her father's, five miles off. She had made all the arrangements; the time was set when the carriage should come for her; and no reasoning could lead her to change her purpose. He asked his pastor what he should do, and was advised to request the church to pray for her, without telling any one the facts. The result was, she was in deep agony, crying out, "What must I do to be saved?" and soon found peace in believing.

Another interesting case—a family of eleven children.

We were holding evening meetings in different families. Said a little girl, (whose parents were brought up Universalists, and open Sabbath breakers,) "Pa, why can't we have a meeting here; may I ask Mr. — to appoint one?" Without thinking, he said, "Yes." He left home to be absent a few days; when he came back, the little girl said to him, "We are going to have a meeting here to-morrow night." He was much opposed, found fault with his wife, charged it upon her; (he had forgotten his promise to his child.) His wife remarked they could send word to the minister not to come. He was unwilling, for that might disgrace him.

Sleep that night departed from them. The next morning he went into the woods and there remained, thinking of his guilt and his prospects, until near night, when he bowed his will, and sank sweetly into the arms of the Saviour; and as the brethren and sisters came in to pray, he met them joyfully, saying, "How different you look; how I love you!" And as we knelt, he, for the first time before any human being, bowed his knees and breathed his soul out in prayer for his wife; and she too was soon led to hope in the mercy of God. From that time on, they, with others who united with the people of God, have led consistent and devoted lives, greatly encouraging the hearts of Christians.

It is pleasant to see large families, where there has been no prayer or praise, gathered morning and evening around the family altar, to hear of God and heaven; and to see the children gathered into the Sabbath school. Some ten or twelve family altars have been erected in this place within the last year.

Thirty have united with the church since I have been here; twenty the last year.

Protracted Meeting.

I have preached regularly twice or thrice every Sabbath since my last, and about forty week evenings. As the result, quite a number have been awakened, and there are some twenty or more hopeful conversions.

I have just closed a series of evening meetings. Some thirty or forty came to the anxious room; thirteen have connected themselves with our church; and four or five stand ready to join. Some will join other societies. We feel quickened and encouraged. One young man, who, it is said, was a Catholic by education and a sailor, was a subject of the work, has joined our church, and I think will study for the ministry. One other of the young converts will study for the ministry, if he can get the means.

Prospects of Good.

In reviewing the last three months, I can say, that the kingdom of our Lord is gaining ground in this place. Laborers in different forms have increased on this field, and we believe the whole has been for the advancement of the Gospel. We trust that much will be accomplished by a recent distribution of bibles and religious books. The work of the Lord is evidently revived in the community.

The state of religion has been low in this vicinity for several years, till a few weeks past, when much seriousness began to be felt by many. In December, the Baptist denomination commenced a protracted meeting, which is in progress at this time, and there are quite a number who profess to have passed from death unto life.

Religious Interest among the Germans.

The German population are much interested. They have a meeting by themselves about four miles distant. The awakening is represented to be quite general among them. All denominations of Christians are much revived, and the word of the Lord is attended by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

From Rev. P. Anderson, Chicago.

Revival among the Norwegians.

The Scandinavian Church, as this is called, consists of 150 members, organized on the principle of requiring evidence of conversion preparatory to admission. Last year it lost thirty-five by death and removals to the interior; but the addition of sixty others, mostly new converts, have given it a net increase of twenty-five.

I am happy to say that God's Spirit has evidently been with us, and is with us now; the old foundation of many, and their delusive hopes, such as baptismal regeneration, salvation secured by membership in the church according to a civil code, &c. &c., are vanishing as the morning clouds are carried off by the gentle breeze; and a few are asking seriously what they shall do that they may have eternal life. I expect a goodly number to unite with us at our next communion.

From Rev. W. A. Thompson, Port Byron.

It gives me pleasure to be able to report that the Holy Spirit has come down in his power, and many stout hearts have been bowed. Many family altars are being erected. Some of our prominent citizens are coming out on the side of Christ; many young men and young women are giving themselves to the Lord; and most of the youth in our village are among the inquirers. Eleven have already been examined for church membership. Our Methodist and Baptist brethren enter into the work, and their families are blessed.

A neighboring pastor writing at a later date, gives the following additional statement:

Salvation is flowing up and down this great valley, and all the churches are sharing the blessing. I have just returned from Port Byron, where I have been laboring in the spiritual harvest. The Lord is pouring out his Holy Spirit upon that place in great power and glory. It is hoped that from thirty to forty in that town and vicinity have come to Jesus. This refreshing from on high commenced in a school house, about four miles back from the river in the country, and is now going on in town gloriously.

Death of Pastors.

R. was one of the early stations of this Society. Within a short period, two missionaries, Rev. Messrs. Haswell and Kimball have rested from their labors at this place. The testimony of their successor to their worth and influence is gratifying and instructive.

The preaching of the Gospel here has brought forth good fruit. The place was formerly notorious for its wickedness. Now, a healthy public sentiment exists in regard to temperance, education and religion. The leading business men of the place are either members of churches or regular attendants on the ministrations of the sanctuary. The Sabbath outwardly appears to be well observed. After encountering many difficulties the citizens have erected a good academy, which is under the charge of well qualified teachers and has an attendance of more than 100 pupils. The influence of the school has been very salutary thus far, and it promises to be a rich blessing to this community and to the Church of Christ.

The influence of brother Haswell, a former missionary of your society, is still felt here. Though permitted to labor but a short time in this portion of the Lord's vineyard, his labor was not in vain.

Last Days of Rev. L. P. Kimball.

Brother Kimball, his successor, died on the 29th of Jan., 1851. When I arrived, I found him confined to his room afflicted with a painful spinal affection. His influence here has been most salutary. He had an intuitive perception of men, and he moved among all classes without encountering their prejudices, and made them his friends. Even the impenitent and ungodly always spoke in his praise. He was a "living epistle, known and read of all men." Many visited him during his protracted illness, and I trust were impressed with the power that religion has to sustain and comfort in time of affliction and in prospect of death. He manifested so much patience and such christian resignation that all felt that "the chamber where the good man meets his fate is privileged beyond the common walks of virtuous life, quite on the verge of heaven." Till the day of his death he felt a deep interest in missions, and the Home Missionary was usually upon his table. His last hours were his happiest ones. After he was unable to speak he wrote the following—this was 2 or 3 hours before his death—"I am very happy." To one standing at his bedside he said: "I rejoice, rejoice with me." When asked if he suffered much, he wrote: "Suffer but little; am in great joy." "O the brightness of Christ." "How I feel in view of heaven, only a few hours from glory." He has gone from us to reap his reward. He will long live in the affections of this people.

Recent Awakening.

A general desire for a refreshing from on high led the Pastor to take measures for pressing the interests of the soul upon the immediate attention of his flock.

There were about 45 inquirers during the revival, most of whom are now indulging a hope in Christ. Some were deeply convicted and brought almost to the borders of despair. I never saw a more interesting class of inquirers. They were mostly young, between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. They are of a class that promise to be useful to the cause of Christ. Quite a number of the converts are members of the academy and I hope some of them will yet preach Christ to their fellow men. An unusual degree of harmony prevailed among the members of the church. I had no obstructions thrown in the way by professors of religion. This work has been a great blessing to the church; it has not only added to its numbers, but it has increased the graces of those who formerly belonged to our Zion.

On the 9th of February we had our communion. Twenty-nine persons united on profession of their faith. There are several others who will probably unite at some future time. Thus far the converts appear to be bringing forth the fruits of righteousness. I had organized a Bible class of about 12 members, all young men, previous to the revival. Every one of that bible class, I trust, are members of the invisible as they are of the visible church. The church has never since its organization received so large an accession.

Springs in the Desert.

At this place much faithful labor has been expended and much seed sown; but the husbandmen have one after another passed away and seen no harvest. But God has remembered Zion.

The present state of things will furnish occasion to those who have been interested in our behalf, and to all who love Zion, to rejoice that after so many years of declension and in the midst of deserved wrath, God has made bare his arm to save souls from death and his people from their sins.

The first appearance of special interest was about the first week in January. The church came together preparatory to the communion. The Spirit of the Lord was manifestly present, and his people were humbled. "Was it possible," they inquired, "that we can see a revival?" Sinners were apparently Gospel hardened, and the people of God engrossed in the world. The intelligence of a revival in a neighboring town seemed to strengthen the hope that the Lord was near to bless.

The interest deepened until about the last week in January; it seemed manifestly the duty of the church to devote more time to meetings. There were some that were ready to come out on the Lord's side at once. The church became more deeply interested. The meetings were solemn and delightful, and were devoted to prayer and conference. The young converts were encouraged to take an active part, and they did so with the best results.

For some weeks the pastor was aided by the judicious and indefatigable labors of a neighboring minister, and a powerful revival was enjoyed. It was characterized by a deep feeling and a solemn stillness that were quite remarkable.

It has not been the earthquake, nor the fire, but the still, small voice, that has found its way to almost every dwelling in our community.

The aspect of things has very much changed among us. Before, almost all of our youth were in the broad road, with only here and there one in the straight and narrow way; and now we trust that only now and then one is left in the broad way of death.

The young have shared very largely in this blessed work. The Sabbath school has been signally blessed—the first subjects were from its members. The attendance has nearly or quite doubled since the revival commenced.

Many heads of families have been subjects of this work, and they have set up the altar at home; and many altars that had been undermined by the tide of worldliness, or overwhelmed by floods of ungodliness that sweep through these valleys and over these plains, have been rebuilt, we trust, on broader and deeper foundations. Several of the converts are men of influence.

Some who had long been regarded as hopeless have been brought in, and are sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in their right minds—miracles of mercy—an astonishment to others and a wonder to themselves. May the Lord keep them by his mighty power through faith unto salvation.

It is quite difficult to speak with accuracy as to the whole number of conversions. With those who have been reclaimed from a course of life that seemed to amount to almost if not quite hopeless apostasy from Christ, we have reason to believe there are not less than 60. Still, some of them are quite young, and we hope with trembling. The whole course of instruction has tended to keep down animal excitement, and to bring the great truths of the Bible before the mind, and let them have their legitimate influence, without the aid of artificial stimulants.

Now is the time to work.

The West, as a field of missionary effort, never presented a more hopeful aspect than at the present. True, the spirit of enterprise is stirring up the depths of Western society. But we have reason to hope that the Spirit of God is moving upon the face of the waters—the hitherto and still troubled waters. We hear pleasing intelligence in numerous places, that God is bringing many to a knowledge of the truth.

In this work of grace, two resident ministers, who formerly had charge of the congregation, were greatly useful by their counsels and personal labors in promoting the salvation of souls.

From Rev. J. H. Baldwin, Waltham, Lasalle Co.

Mr. B. labors in two places, Waltham and Prairie Home. In the former, a protracted meeting, held in connection with the Baptists, resulted in increasing the number of believers some twenty-five or thirty. Twelve have united with the Presbyterian Church, and others are expected to make a public profession in a short time.

At Prairie Home the church was in a low state; difficulties among professing Christians, of different denominations, existed in the neighborhood; which discouraged all effort and injured the cause of religion. A day of fasting was appointed. All came together; it was a melting time. There were mutual confessions, and finally a solemn covenant was entered into to bury the past—all that had interrupted their christian fellowship and dishonored religion; never more to give them a resurrection in any particular, unless for further confession. The Spirit of God settled down upon the congregation; the attention of the community was arrested, and some fifteen or twenty were hopefully converted or reclaimed. The work is growing deeper in the hearts of Christians, and the present indications promise much for the future prosperity of Zion.

From Rev. John Ballard, Perry, Pike Co.

In Maysville church (formerly Salem) there has been a revival of religion. The church has been much quickened, the languishing prayer meeting has been revived and a more general interest in the subject of religion is now felt. Though the work has not been as extensive as we hoped it would be, yet much good has been done, and eight or ten have given evidence of a change of heart.

We are now engaged in family visiting, with the ministers of the Baptist and Methodist churches. These visits have a happy influence on our own feelings, and we think they will produce a more friendly and a better state of feeling between the members of the different churches. If God favors the design, we expect to commence a protracted meeting at the close of these visits. We think that He approves of this course and will crown our efforts with his blessing.

Church edifice Completed and Paid for.

Our church is very neat and comfortable. All are well satisfied and pleased. Although not the largest, yet it is the best house in the county. It has been a great effort for us to build it, and in some instances it has cost real self-denial. But it is done; and what is better, it is paid for, and paid for without any foreign aid. Friends in the neighborhood, not connected with our church, have afforded some assistance, for which we feel very grateful.

Those who have been more favorably situated while they were building a house of worship cannot fully sympathize with this church in her present joy. We have been dependent for many years—we have had no comfortable place for worship—we have been exposed to frequent interruptions and were cramped in all our energies. There has been a happy change in all these respects. We now feel at home. Our singing is much improved by the accommodations of an orchestra and a choir is beginning to form. We have a fine melodeon, whose sweet and powerful tones combined with other circumstances to increase the interest of the first Sabbath in our own house. Some were carried back in their feelings to their former places of worship in the East, and enjoyed over again with much deeper interest, happy days which had, long since, gone by.

Can there be any doubt that the moral value of that house of worship is manifold greater than it would have been, if the expense had been supplied from abroad? Have not the sacrifices and struggles of the church for this object gathered around it an amount of personal attachment, of inestimable worth for the upbuilding of the spiritual edifice.

Special Meetings.

During the past quarter, in addition to my regular appointments, I have held three protracted meetings. Two were in the country, and the other in town. The two in the country were interesting, and seemed to be a blessing, particularly to the members of the church, but not very decisive in their influence upon the unconverted. Some few, however, were awakened.

The meeting in the town was more decided in its effects. There were some twelve or thirteen inquirers, some of whom are now indulging in a hope. The members of the church were quickened in their duties. The interest still continues. Although the number of those awakened is small, yet it is very cheering, when we consider the difficulties which surround us.

*From Rev. R. Tenney, Amesville,

Revival.

I found the church in a very low state. They were few in number and divided. Our prayer meeting was attended by only four or five, and sometimes by only two or three, and sometimes by none but myself; and at the close of my first year I could report not a single conversion by my labors, and not one addition to the church. During the busy season of harvest, because none would attend, we were obliged to suspend our prayer meeting for a few weeks.

In the fall I made an appointment for a protracted meeting, to commence on the 10th day of October. At first our faith was tried by unfavorable weather, and the smallness of the number that attended; but soon the weather became fair, and the number of attendants increased. On Saturday evening we saw the first indications of good. On the Sabbath, our house was crowded, and under the morning sermon there were indications that the Spirit of God was exciting the minds of the congregation to the most solemn and earnest attention. It was our communion Sabbath. In the evening I preached again to a crowded house, which gave good attention. I felt that a crisis had come, which would affect, favorably or unfavorably, the cause of Christ amongst us. It was with feelings of the deepest solicitude for the result, that I descended from the pulpit and invited those who felt their need of a Saviour to come forward and occupy the front seats in the house. Five responded to the invitation. On Monday evening, after sermon, thirteen came forward; and thus we went on during the week. Some were entertaining hopes that they had found the Saviour, and new cases of awakening occurred. At one time there were as many as twenty-two that expressed their interest. Thus we went on till the last day of October; some new cases of awakening or conversion occurring under almost every sermon preached.

As the result of our meeting we have received twenty-eight persons into our church, and a few more hope they have passed from death unto life, and have expressed a desire to connect themselves with us. I hope the work of the Lord will not stop till multitudes more shall embrace the Saviour. I could get no assistance; I was alone and single handed. I preached all but one sermon, though it was trying at the time; for I felt that with rather feeble health, I might not live through the effort. I thought, however, if I died in the midst of a revival of religion, it would be a blessed time to die; but I feel stronger and better in health than when I began.

Rev. W. Van Vleck, Fulton, Hamilton Co.,

Writes respecting his charge—

In answer to prayer and personal efforts, the Lord has been pleased to pour out his Spirit, and revive his work among us.

Church built—Revival.

Some fourteen members of the church in Fulton, reside in Jamestown, Ky. One family, rich, not in this world's goods, but in faith and good works, resolved to build a house for the worship of God and for the good of the community in which they dwelt. By their generous contributions and persevering exertions, and by the coöperation of several benevolent persons, who always love to take stock in any enterprise where the Lord is pledged for security, the house was completed in four months from the day it was commenced. It is a substantial brick building, capable of seating 300 people, finished in a plain, neat style, and furnished in a simple, tasteful manner, at a cost of $1000.

The week after it was dedicated we commenced a protracted meeting in it, and a most precious season of divine grace was enjoyed, pervading, more or less, the whole community. Some thirty persons gave evidence that they had passed from death unto life. A church has since been organized of over thirty members, and its future prospects are bright.

*From Rev. L. L. Fay, Lawrence,
Washington Co.*

A great change in eight Years.

In my church, in Lawrence, there is now a glorious revival of religion in progress. Twenty-six are now hoping in Christ, nine of whom are heads of families. The majority of those who have found Jesus precious to their souls are young men and women, some of whom were eminent in sin. The altars of Baal have been broken down; the ball room and the frolic are now changed for the house of God and the prayer meeting. The dark deeds of iniquity, such as Sabbath breaking, profanity, intemperance, &c., are disappearing before the light of Gospel truth. From many of the log dwellings scattered among these wooded hills and valleys, you now can hear the voice of prayer and praise. This part of Christ's vineyard that eight years ago was a moral wilderness, is now, by the aid of the American Home Missionary Society, made to bud and blossom as the rose. During this time how great the change! A meeting house built and paid for, a pastor settled for the first time, and all the institutions of the Gospel which the Puritan Christian loves and esteems are in progress. My people are poor, and nothing can be more true, than that I was sent by your Society "to preach the Gospel to the poor." This enterprise God has blessed, and I trust that more than a hundred souls already have their names written in the Lamb's book of life, and who will give praise through all eternity for what the American Home Missionary Society has done for their salvation.

MICHIGAN.

From Rev. W. W. Atterbury, Lansing.

Our weekly prayer meeting occurred on the evening of the first day of the year. I had anticipated the meeting with a good deal of interest, and I believe that from more than one heart the prayer had ascended, that God would mark the commencement of the new year with the display of his grace. The meeting was attended by more than the usual number, and we felt that God himself was there. There had been like cheering indications at the Methodist prayer meeting the previous evening; and we therefore felt encouraged to appoint meetings for prayer and preaching, the remaining evenings of the week. By the Sabbath, a number were inquiring what they should do to be saved. Led, as we trust, by the Spirit and providence of God, we continued our meetings from time to time for some weeks. The Methodist minister and myself preached alternately each evening; and we had occasional meetings for conference in the day time. The latter meetings were eminently blessed to many of God's people. Christians of different denominations labored together with the utmost harmony, and "roots of bitterness" were removed. Between thirty and forty have been hopefully converted. Among these are some of much influence in the community, who we trust will now become strong pillars of the Church of Christ.

The Path of Obedience, the Path of Hope.

There was one, an intelligent man of middle age, who, though under religious influences in early childhood in New England, has for a number of years been a disbeliever in experimental religion, and part of the time professedly a Universalist. He attended occasionally during the early part of our meetings, impressed apparently more by the earnestness of Christians than by any direct view of truth. At length, one evening, as he returned home from the meeting, he was convinced that there was one obvious duty, (even though there were no such thing as experimental religion,) which he had utterly neglected; and that was, to acknowledge God in his family. This duty he determined at once to perform. Accordingly, the next morning, when his family were all gathered around the breakfast table, he confessed his sin in this respect, and his sorrow that, sustained by the bounty of God for so many years, he had never thanked him for his goodness. He then invited them all to kneel with him around the family altar. When he arose from prayer, as he afterwards told me, he felt willing and determined to do every other duty that God should make known to him. A feeling of gratitude arose in his heart, as he thought of the wonderful goodness of God in sparing one who, for more than forty years, had treated him with such neglect. He no longer felt that God was too strict in his law; it seemed to him that it would be a pleasure to serve God; that whether he were a Christian or not—whether he were forgiven or not, he hardly knew, and scarcely thought; in either case, he meant to serve God. He felt relieved and happy, he hardly knew why; but his predominant feeling was one of gratitude. That evening he made the same statement to the congregation which he had made to his family in the morning.

Conquests of Grace.

One afternoon I chanced to pass the house where lived a Universalist and his wife, upon whom I had not called for a long while, and who never attended meeting. Impelled more by a sense of duty than by any expectation of doing good, I stepped in. The wife was alone, and, after a few moments conversation, I asked her if she loved the Saviour and had a hope in him. She seemed at once affected by the question, and answered that she had formerly believed herself a Christian, but, now, for a long while had had no good hope. I told her of Christ's love, his willingness to forgive, and invited her to come, like the returning prodigal, immediately to Him. She promised to do so, and I prayed with her and left. Afterwards her husband came in, and noticing a change in her appearance, inquired the cause. He then went out and invited some of their young friends to come in and dance at their house that evening, in order to dispel her feelings. They came, but she persuaded them to leave without dancing. I called a few days after, but, finding another lady with her, left a book for her to read, and was coming away without conversing with her on her own condition, when she burst into tears and asked me to pray before I left. On inquiring, she said she had kept her promise, and trusted that she had found forgiveness. The other lady seemed much affected as we knelt, and with thanks to God for his grace, renewedly consecrated ourselves to Him.

"There are diversities of operations," but the same Spirit. Mr. — was formerly a member of an evangelical church, but for a long time past had lived but little as a Christian should live. A few weeks since, he got into difficulty with another man, which resulted in a lawsuit. A number of men, former neighbors of his, attended as witnesses, and testified in strong terms against his character. The trial continued till late at night, and though it terminated in his favor, he was pained at the fact that his neighbors had testified against him. The Spirit of God seemed to employ this as the means of his conviction. He was awakened to a sense of his condition, and, like the prodigal, was met by his Father while yet a great way off. Christ appeared to his soul as his Saviour, with the clearness of a vision. His joy was now so great that he could scarce refrain from expressing it aloud. This was early on Sabbath morning. At the close of the morning service he came forward, and with broken utterance confessed in public his sin in wandering so far from God, asked forgiveness for the evil of his example, and expressed his gratitude for the grace that had reclaimed him. Many in the congregation were deeply moved. None doubted his sincerity. Since then he has been regular in his attendance at all the meetings, and in his prayers and remarks at the conference meetings, and in his general deportment, gives pleasing evidence that the change in him, manifest as it is to all, is indeed the work of the Spirit.

A Mistake Corrected.

Conversing a short time since with one who thinks she has recently given her heart to God, she said that she used to think that, should she become a Christian, it would cost her a great and continual struggle to give up various forms of wordly amusement, of which she had been very fond; but, now, that she loved Christ, she was astonished to find that her fondness for these pleasures had ceased, so that it was not the least self-denial to relinquish them.

From a Missionary Report.

Noise and excitement have been the former characteristics of revivals in this place. But nothing like the present work has ever before been witnessed.

Numbers, formerly, who professed to become religious, have so soon relapsed into open sinfulness, that all church organizations but ours had gone down, and the world seemed to expect that such would continue to be the common result. This was a great obstacle in the way of persuading them to turn to the Lord. They not unfrequently declared that they did not want a religion that would not last. This made it especially necessary for me to distinguish between true and false conversions, and in a pointed manner to expose the false hopes of those who did not adhere to Christ's cause. This created some disaffection. Many were sure that they had once known what religion was, although they had not prayed for years, and were sure that they were sinners now. They seemed horror-struck with the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. Even some good people were afraid that the preaching of the doctrine would do harm. But I am satisfied that it was a word in season, and that it did good. Those who for the first time hope that they are converted, appear well, and eight of them have united with the church. How many more may unite I cannot tell; some are reconversions from other denominations, and I am informed that efforts are made to dissuade the converts from uniting with us. There is still much interest.

One man commenced selling liquor in a tavern, in defiance of the law, and got up two balls or backwood dances, during the meetings. But he was led to abandon his iniquitous traffic, and was found among those who came forward for prayers before the meetings closed. Some of the Methodists cordially united with us in our meetings, and were much blessed. The Baptists also came into our assemblies and were somewhat stirred up.

Various Notices of Revivals.

We are compelled to omit further details, in the accounts of seasons of awakening reported by the missionaries. The following brief notices are all that we can give in the present number.

Rev. Justin Marsh, laboring in Eckford and Teconsha, Marshall Co., Mich., reports the hopeful subjects of renewing grace in the former congregation as numbering eighteen. A season of special seriousness has recently commenced in a distant part of the congregation and among a class hitherto little under the stated means of grace.

Rev. A. Given, under date of March 12th, writes, that "an interesting revival is in progress" at Byron, Shiawassee Co., Mich.

Rev. Samuel Hemenway, in Kent Co., Mich., has been exploring an extensive range of destitute country, and preparing to organize churches. He has maintained six different appointments in four townships. At three of these preaching places the influences of the Holy Spirit have been enjoyed, and twenty-seven are hoping in the newly found Saviour. Four hundred and seventy-six persons have been induced to pledge themselves to total abstinence from intoxicating drinks. As yet, neither house of worship nor church organization exists on this field.

Rev. Louis Mills, of Howell, Livingston Co., Mich., informs us, that that church is enjoying a very interesting revival. "Our meetings," he says, "are daily increasing in numbers and interest; deep solemnity rests upon the community; and while some are yielding to the claims of God, and consecrating themselves to his service, others are making violent opposition to the truth. Several express themselves as decidedly on the Lord's side."

At Cooper, Kalamazoo Co., Mich., the Missionary, Rev. B. F. Monroe, informs us, that about thirty, within about four weeks, have professed to turn to the Lord. "Nearly all of them are waiting for an opportunity to unite with the church." This is the first season of refreshing that people have enjoyed in eight years.

Rev. H. Lucas, says of Royal Oak, Oakland Co., Mich., "God is doing a great work here. Between forty and fifty express hope in Christ, and the work is still advancing. There is a great change in this community. Some of the most hardened sinners have been made to tremble, and, I trust, to submit to God."

In Medina, Lenawee Co., Mich., the pastor, Rev. Geo. Barnum, held a series of meetings in the winter, the fruit of which was the reviving of the spiritual life of the church, and the deep anxiety of a number for the pardon of sin. About fifteen of these may be regarded as having passed from death unto life.

A season of refreshing has been enjoyed at Stamford, Delaware Co., N. Y. A goodly number, including several pupils in the academy, are hopeful converts to the truth. Rev. I. D. Cornwell, the missionary, reports that the seriousness is still in progress.

Some twenty-five or thirty recent subjects of converting grace are mentioned as fruits of an awakening at Strykersville, Wyoming Co., N. Y., where Rev. H. G. Ward is the minister.

In the church in Greensboro', Vt., Rev. W. A. Chapin was for many years the pastor. He was removed by death in November last. During his lingering illness, his faithful and earnest addresses to the numbers who visited his sick room, deeply affected the hearts of not a few; and to his great joy, a few days before his departure he was permitted to look upon the first ripe sheaves of the harvest for which he had so long been laboring. His successor, Rev. James P. Stone, commenced laboring in that church in December, and there has existed more or less of religious concern on the minds of the people up to the time of his report. About forty are reckoned as the fruits of this visitation of grace. Twenty-six united with the church at the last communion, and others are expected at the next.

A revival is also reported as having occurred at Lunenburg, Vt., Rev. J. M. Stearns, missionary. About twenty are regarded as affording evidence of a change. The seriousness was increased by the happy death of a youth of the place just after entering college.

The Spirit of the Lord has recently gained trophies at Burlington, Ct. Rev. J. L. Wright, of that place, speaks of the meetings as exceedingly solemn, and the prospects encouraging.

The foregoing are a portion of the notices which have recently come to hand, bearing witness that the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, nor his ear heavy that it cannot hear. O, let the people of God pray, for it is a time of mercy! His ear is open to the cry of his saints. The means which they employ are attended with blessings which should forever put to shame all misgivings and unbelief. Let them therefore, give and labor; and, PRAY while they labor and give. The conquest of this land for Christ seems but to linger for their asking. His providence and Spirit are going forth, hand in hand, removing obstacles, preparing facilities, and appropriating to his glorious ends the mind, and wealth, and consecrated vigor of multitudes; to be succeeded by other multitudes in still increasing numbers, as the chariot of salvation rolls onward.

Miscellaneous.

Various Facts and Statistics.

FROM REV. J. LITTLE'S NEW YEAR'S SERMON.

The world has advanced more during the half century now closed, than in the previous 500 years. When it was 5,800 years old, it contained 4,000,000 copies of the Bible in 50 languages, spoken by 200,000,000. The last 50 years has increased the Bibles to 30,000,000, in 200 languages, spoken by 600,000,000. Fifty years ago, next to nothing was known about the heathen, few countries were open to missionary effort, and the missionary work had hardly begun. During this period, a knowledge of heathenism has been diffused, $40,000,000 raised, 2,000 missionaries sent, 4,000 churches organized, 250,000 persons received, and as many collected into schools.—As printing, the compass, and other secular inventions preceded the Reformation in Luther's time, we trust that the steamboat, power press, railroad and telegraph are the precursors of some still greater moral event.—The trifling Pope, who, in 1849, amused himself and cardinals with games of chess and billiards at Gaeta, now sits peacefully on his throne, waving his sceptre over 200,000,000. The commission of cardinals have thrown fifty priests into prison for administering spiritual consolation to soldiers wounded in the cause of liberty. They who took advantage of the Pope's absence to publish the Bible, are now fined. France is restricting col-porteurs, and all the countries composing the "seat of the beast," have gone backward. England is provoked because the Pope has sent her a Hierarch. But she makes Papists much faster by turning Puseyite, neglecting to teach half her people to read, and spending $250,000,000 for liquor, when her bread costs only $130,000,000.—The fine for being intoxicated in Sweden is $15; for the second offence $30, and for the third, deprivation of the elective franchise.—On the Sabbath that labor ceased in the English post office, postmasters, in the large towns, went with their clerks to the house of God, and offered public thanks.

The United States in fifty years, have increased from 16 to 31; from a population of 5,000,000 to 23,000,000, and from 25 colleges to 118. Our population rolls West 18 miles a year. We have 11,860 miles of sea and lake coast. Virginia is a third larger than England, and Ohio has 3,000 square miles more than Scotland. The past year has carried to California 100,000, at a cost of $30,000,000.—Though nothing is more false than Papal statistics, we suppose the Pope has, in the United States, 400,000 subjects. One company of emigrants returned to Europe, complaining that the Sabbath laws were too strict. We can spare such settlers. Forty railroad companies have excluded 2,000 miles from Sunday travel. Massachusetts and Vermont are sustaining high toned temperance laws.*

Cost of War.

Baron Von Reden tells us, in a recent work, that the continent of Europe alone now has full four millions of men under arms, more than half its male population between the ages of twenty and thirty; and that the support of these immense preparations for war, together with the interest and cost of collection and disbursement on the aggregate of its war debts, amounts to more than one thousand millions of dollars a year. Let any man try to form an adequate conception of what is meant by these terms, and he will soon give up the effort in despair.

Take the Baron's estimate of war debts now resting on the states of Europe—no less than $9,418,000,000. How shall we realize what this enormous sum means? Shall we count it? At the rate of sixty dollars a minute, ten hours every day, for three hundred days in a year, it would take more than 800 years, some twenty generations or more, barely to count the present war debts of Europe alone.

Let us look, for a moment, at what England wasted for war purposes in 127 years, from the revolution in 1688, to the downfall of Napoleon in 1815. The sum total squandered in actual war, besides all that she spent upon her war system in the intervals of peace, was $10,150,000,000; and if we add the interest on her war debts, contracted in that period, the grand total will reach nearly $17,000,000,000! At sixty dollars a minute for ten hours in a day, or $36,000 a day, and 300 days in a year, it would require more than 1,574 years to count it all! Add an average of $80,000,000 a year for the current expenses of her war establishment since 1815, an aggregate of $2,800,000,000, in these thirty-five years; and we have a sum total of nearly twenty thousand millions! No wonder that the old world is reeling and staggering under the burden of such enormous expenditures for war purposes.

The Spoiled Pie.

A young minister, recently married, had just been settled over a flourishing church. The long years of study and preparatory toil had ended—the ordeal of ecclesiastical examination was passed—the vows of ordination imposed—and full of sanguine hope, with bright prospects of usefulness, the youthful ambassador had entered on his perilous charge. The young partner bride had come from the altar in the fulness of joy yet unblighted, to share with him in the responsibilities of the new vocation. But the roughnesses, the cares, the shocks of professional life were as yet all untried. They had not known the rudeness of vulgar minds, nor the strife of plebeian tongues. Happy in themselves, and in the favor of the people; refined, intelligent, pious, beloved, they enjoyed for a brief day the purest sunshine of felicity. Even the errors and ignorance of the mistress in her domestic empire, served but as amusements and lessons of experience. In such a family, if anywhere, is found the truth of the great poet: Domestic bliss! The only good of Paradise that has survived the fall. But no earthly Eden can long be safe from the tempter, and the fall. A sudden calamity overwhelmed the happy pair in their innocence; a calamity the more afflictive, from its trivial nature and unanticipated source. But it withered every joy; blighted every bud of promise. The people in the exuberance of their kindness, had furnished a supply of their wants beyond the demands of a small family. They had poured in upon them every variety of food, burdening their hearts with gratitude and gladness. But amid this profusion of good things, arriving in the sultry summer season, and requiring a rapid consumption beyond the power of appetite, one gift had lain too long untasted. It was a pie. It had become spoiled. It was the first evil omen that had appeared, and it startled the happy pair with apprehension. What shall we do? In whispers passed the long and anxious consultation. The subject called for a wisdom beyond their experience. At length they decided privately to regale the pig with it, and keep the disposal of the ill-fated pie between themselves a profound secret. But they had a servant girl, that necessary but often most troublesome appendage to domestic life, and bane of domestic peace. She learned the secret, but would not keep it. Soon the news spread abroad that a pie sent from one of the first families, was not good enough for so dainty a minister, but was only fit for the swine! Distressed, and agitated by the rising tempest, the young pastor and his wife explained the cause, and over and over again protested their innocence, and their deep regret. But the angry family and their partisans would receive no explanation, nor credit the true assertion. Their wounded pride demanded a sacrifice. And they waged the war till the young minister was driven from the field, and the church was rent asunder by the contending parties. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! On what trifling grounds is the pastoral relation often dissolved—the solemn ordination vows broken—and the church doomed to long years of spiritual death. What is the cause of all this misery and havoc of the souls of men? In this instance it was a spoiled pie! And when the records of eternity are unrolled, it will be seen that many a faithful shepherd has been expelled from his flock for the merest trifle, expanded, magnified, and enveloped in a mist of prejudice. But who shall answer for this? Who shall meet the responsibility before God, at the eternal judgment? O my soul, come not thou into their secret: unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united.—[New York Obs.]

For the Home Missionary.

MESSRS. EDITORS :

As this is the season for reopening Sabbath schools in the rural districts of our country, which have been closed during the winter, and also the most favorable time to organize new schools, we again remind the Missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society, of the readiness of the American Sunday School Union (so far as means are contributed) to furnish libraries of their publication, as donations to such schools as cannot supply themselves.

In order to prevent confusion or duplicate donations, applications should set forth the name of the place, county and state ; the date of its settlement, number of children of a suitable age to attend Sunday school, the number actually attending, and capable of reading, the means of week day instruction in reading, time when the Sunday school was established, and whether they have had a donation of Sunday school books from the Union or any other source.

This statement should be accompanied with a remittance of as much money as the friends of the measure in the place will contribute, with specific directions how to send the books. A list of the books on hand, if any, should accompany the application.

It has given the Board great pleasure to be able to respond in most cases to the calls of your missionaries, and they hope to do likewise this year. The Youth's Penny Gazette has been found exceedingly popular and valuable as an attraction to the school. We put up a year's supply for a school of twenty-five children and send them to all the accessible points of the West, at low freights, so that the missionary can supply his school every other week with the paper, with very little trouble, and no expense.

Applications for libraries, Question books, or other publications for the Sunday school, designed for Sabbath school teachers, may be addressed to Able and eloquent addresses were made by the gentlemen who severally moved the foregoing resolutions, which were listened to with fixed and unwearied attention by a deeply interested auditory. The exercises were diversified and the impression of the occasion rendered the more delightful, by the singing of two Home Missionary Hymns by the whole congregation, led by LUCIUS HART, Esq., of New York.

Twenty Fifth Report.

[THE narratives of personal labor and trial presented by the missionaries in the columns of the Home Missionary, are, perhaps, better fitted to interest the general reader than the summary of results furnished in the Annual Reports. Yet it is from this source alone that the magnitude of the work is to be learned, and adequate impressions of its importance and claims obtained.

In place, therefore, of the usual variety of intelligence from particular missionary fields, we present our readers in the present number, a general survey of our operations and their results during the year, assured that all who wish to maintain an intelligent interest in the cause, will give these statements a careful perusal, and that they will rise from it with devout gratitude to God for the glorious results achieved, and a new purpose, that whatsoever their hands find to do in this cause, they will do with their might.]

The changes which death makes in a quarter of a century or even in a single year, in the ranks of those associated in benevolent action, are fitted to impress us with the deepest solemnity, as we come together to celebrate the TWENTY FIFTH ANNIVERSARY of the American Home Missionary Society, and to inspire us with a holier purpose to do with our might whatsoever our hands find to do.

More than one third of those who participated in the organization of this Society have, since that date, ceased from their labors and entered upon their recompense of reward. Among them, are the names of RICHARDS, and HILLYER, and PORTER, and WISNER, and BRUN, and BALDWIN, and KEESE, and NITCHIE, and many others, venerable, philanthropic and devoted men; they were burning and shining lights; they scattered blessings around them; and their example shall long inspire others with zeal and self-consecration in the missionary work.

The last year has taken from us, also, the Rev. CALVIN CHAPIN, D. D., and the Rev. DAVID PORTER, D. D., both of them the early and efficient counsellors, advocates and patrons of Home Missions, and Vice Presidents of the Society from its organization; the Rev. HENRY WHITE, D. D., one of its Directors and for four years a member of its Executive Committee; KNOWLES TAYLOR, Esq., for thirteen years its Treasurer, sustaining it in times of need and peril with a most praise-worthy liberality; and Rev. WASHINGTON THACHER, the faithful and self-sacrificing Agent of the Society in Central New York.

Ten missionaries of the Society have, also, been called, during the year, from bearing the burden and heat of the day, to receive, we trust, the recompense of those who turn many into righteousness.

We would humbly and devoutly recognise the goodness and mercy of God, in sparing our lives, and blessing the labors of our hands, and permitting us to record so much that is grateful and encouraging to the christian heart, in the progress of the missionary work another year.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

The number of ministers of the Gospel, whose names are found in the preceding table—together with those engaged in superintending the missionary work, and who are mentioned in connection with the respective Auxiliaries and Agencies of the Society—is 1,065.

Of these, 854 were in commission at the date of the last Report; and 211 have been since appointed.

They have been distributed in 26 different States and Territories as follows: in Maine, 91; New Hampshire, 46; Vermont, 61; Massachusetts, 61; Rhode Island, 7; Connecticut, 45; New York, 170; New Jersey, 11; Pennsylvania, 41; Delaware, 1; Maryland, 2; District of Columbia, 1; Virginia, 11; Georgia, 1; Tennessee, 6; Kentucky, 6; Ohio, 93; Indiana, 59; Illinois, 119; Michigan, 80; Missouri, 29; Wisconsin, 72; Iowa, 41; Minnesota, 4; Oregon, 2; California, 4.

This distribution gives to the New England States, 311; the Middle States, 224; the Southern States, 15; and the Western States and Territories, 515.

Of the whole number in commission, 640 have been the pastors or stated supplies of single congregations; 285 have ministered to two or three congregations each; and 140 have extended their labors over still wider fields—the destitutions of a county, or of several contiguous counties, or those within the limits of an ecclesiastical body.

The aggregate of ministerial labor performed is equal to 853 years.

The number of congregations and missionary districts supplied, in whole or in part, at stated intervals, is 1,820; while many others have enjoyed the occasional labors of the missionaries.

Four missionaries have been the pastors or stated supplies of churches of colored people; and 41 have preached in foreign languages—ten to Welsh, and 29 to German congregations, and two to congregations of Norwegians and Swedes.

The number of pupils in the Sabbath schools and Bible classes connected with the missionary churches is not far from 70,000. Many missionaries in the new settlements organize Sabbath schools at various points in their neighborhoods, supply them with teachers from their congregations, procure for them libraries, make the places of their meeting occasional preaching stations, and have the happiness to see one and another of them becoming the nucleus of an interesting and permanent congregation.

The contributions to benevolent objects reported by 577 missionaries, amount to $21,513 04.

The additions to the churches, as nearly as can be ascertained, amount to 6,678; viz: 3,855 on profession of their faith; and 2,823 by letters from other churches.

The churches have not been visited with the special influences of the Holy Spirit so generally as in some former years; yet on portions of the field—in Iowa, Northern Illinois, Wisconsin and some parts of Ohio, especially, there have been revivals of marked interest and power, resulting, in individual instances, in 50, 60 and 100 hopeful conversions. Seventy seven missionaries make mention in their reports of revivals of religion in their congregations; and the number of hopeful conversions reported by 336 missionaries, is 3,096.

Forty three churches have, during the year, passed from a state of dependence to that of self-support. Sixty houses of worship have been completed; fifty five others repaired; and forty others are in the process of erection. Church debts have been paid; parsonages have been built; schools and academies have been established; and 80 young men in connection with the missionary churches, are reported as in preparation for the Gospel ministry. Such evidences of general improvement, of extensive and permanent good, resulting from these outlays of christian charity, have never been more numerous or striking than we find them in the history of the past year.

During the quarter of a century, since the organization of this Society, the Gospel has been preached by its missionaries at not less than three thousand five hundred stations; and not far from 800 churches, which had been gathered or nurtured through its instrumentality, have passed from the list of beneficiaries and are now supporting their own Gospel institutions; and not a few of these are among the strongest and most influential churches in the land. They are to be found in the chief places of social and commercial power—on the line of our canals and lakes and rivers—along all our great thoroughfares of commerce and trade—at almost every gateway into the distant interior.

There these churches stand—on which a few hundreds of dollars only of missionary funds have ever been expended—and there they will stand, many of them, we may hope, till the end of time, scattering far and wide around them the blessings of the Gospel. The planting of one such church—God's own institution—is a great event: the covering of a territory with them diffuses over it an influence which will educate and evangelize and save. Intelligence, good morals, order and social enjoyment will be there; and there too will be the Sabbath school, and the distribution of the Bible and the Religious Tract, and the Temperance association, and the Common school, and the High school and the College, and the charitable and the humane institution, the sanctification of the Sabbath, the spirit of missions, the visitations of the Holy Ghost—all that refines and ennobles man and fits him for the varied duties of his earthly relations and for a higher life above.

What a work, then, is that which this Society has accomplished, within the last twenty five years, in planting CHURCHES in this land at so many points of commanding influence, and in giving them the ministry of reconciliation!

APPOINTMENT OF AN ADDITIONAL SECRETARY.

The necessity for additional service in the Secretary's department has been deeply felt by the Committee for several years, as the operations of the Society have been extended, and the cares and labors devolved upon its principal officers proportionally increased. From 1840 to 1850, the receipts of the Society were more than doubled, and the number of missionaries in the Western States and Territories alone, who corresponded individually and directly with the office of the Society, was increased more than threefold. Within the last few years, too, the Home Missionary field has been greatly expanded, its frontiers removed to the Pacific, and a missionary work is there to be prosecuted, of no less interest and importance than that in the Mississippi Valley, and attended with much greater difficulties.

To meet this increase of labor—these urgent demands upon the efficiency of the Society, to exercise the needed watchfulness over a field so extended, and to communicate, by correspondence, through the press, and by personal visitation and address with the churches and the patrons of the cause as its interests demanded, the Society, at its last annual meeting, judged it to be indispensable that another Secretary for Correspondence should be added to the number then chosen, and referred the subject to the Executive Committee with power to make the appointment.

In executing their trust, the Committee appointed to the office, in December last, Rev. DAVID B. COX, of this city, who entered upon his duties as Secretary, January 1, 1851; as the patrons of the Society have already been informed through its monthly periodical.

THE TREASURY.

Resources.—The balance in the treasury, April 1st, 1850, was $15,553 69. The receipts of the succeeding twelve months have been, $150,940 25; making the resources of the year, $166,493 94.

Liabilities.—There was due to missionaries, at the date of the last report, $11,935 77. There has since become due, $151,515 41, making the total of liabilities, $163,451 18.

Payments.—Of this sum, $153,817 90 have been paid. The remainder—$9,633 38 is still due to missionaries for labor performed. Towards liquidating these claims and redeeming the additional pledges on commissions which have not yet expired, making in all, $64,906 49—there is a balance in the treasury of $12,676 04—the greater part of which was received near the close of the year, and is available only as a means of cancelling the present indebtedness of the Society to its missionaries.

PROGRESS.

A comparison of the foregoing summary, with those of preceding years, exhibits grateful evidence of the progress of this Institution in the work which God has given us to do. Thirty three more missionaries have been in commission than ever before in a single year, and this increase has been mainly on our frontier line—in our Western States and Territories; forty one more years of ministerial labor have been performed; and two hundred and forty five more congregations have been blessed with the preaching of the Gospel. In comparison with the preceding year, the expenditures have been $8,361 81 greater; the receipts from legacies have been $7,629 71 less—making the total of receipts less by $6,220 53; while the receipts from the churches—the regular channels of contribution—exceed those of the year previous by $1,409 08; and the total of receipts exceeds those of any former year—with the exception of that immediately preceding when the amount of legacies was unusually large—by $5,014 34.

The progress of the Society during the twenty five years of its history, in its resources, in the expansion of its field, and in the results which it has been permitted to record, is exhibited in a statistical form in the Tables which are subjoined.

COMPARATIVE RESULTS.

The following Table gives a comparative view of the amount of receipts, expenditures, number of missionaries, new appointments, congregations and missionary districts, years of labor performed, additions to the churches and pupils in Sabbath schools, for each year since the organization of the Society.

It also exhibits, in the tenth column, the average expenditure, each year, for a year of missionary labor, obtained by dividing the sum total of the expenditures of the year by the number of years of labor performed. And in the eleventh column, by dividing the sum total of the expenditures of each year by the number of missionaries employed, is shown what the average to a missionary would be if the expenditures were equally apportioned among them.

Remarks.—1. From the foregoing Table it will be seen that in each of the ten years, from 1830 to 1840, and from 1840 to 1850, the receipts have been more than doubled.

2. The total of receipts, for the twenty five years, is $2,205,358 16.

3. The total of years of labor is 13,096. These years are reckoned in each report, by adding together the months of labor which the missionaries have actually performed.

4. The average expenditure for a year of missionary labor, for the twenty five years, is $167. This includes the entire cost to the Society of obtaining the missionary, defraying his expenses to his field and sustaining him on it, as well as all the expenses of conducting the Institution. In what other way can christian charity be rendered more productive?

5. The average expenditure to a missionary, for the twenty five years is $122. The difference between this amount and the average for a year's labor, is occasioned by the fact that a missionary is named and counted in a report, though in some cases he may have labored but a fraction of the year.

6. The whole number of additions to the churches in 107,781.

7. The fifth column—that of new appointments—shows how many have to be called in in each year, to supply the places of those whose support is assumed by the people, the vacancies occasioned by death, sickness, removals and other changes, and to make the increase over the number of the preceding year.

* Of these, 24 labored in France and Switzerland, under the direction of the Evangelical Societies of Paris and Geneva.

REMARKS.—1. In explanation of the comparatively large number of missionaries in the Middle States and the increasing number in the New England States for several of the earlier years, it should be remarked that, at the organization of this Society in 1826, the missionaries of the United Domestic Missionary Societies, whose responsibilities it assumed, were transferred to it, and that the greater portion of them were in commission in the State of New York. The New England State Societies, also, became integral parts of the National Society, in several successive years—the Maine Missionary Society and the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society in the third year of its operations; the New Hampshire Missionary Society, in the fourth year; the Connecticut Missionary Society, in the fifth year; and the Massachusetts Missionary Society, in the seventh year.

2. In the New England States, it will be observed, there has been but little increase of the number of missionaries, at any time, since the auxiliary relationship of the State Societies was completed.

Since 1837, the number has diminished, and is, this year, 20 less than at that date. In the Middle States, also, the number the present year, is three less than in 1837.

3. The increase of the Society's labors, the last seventeen years, has been mainly in our Western States and Territories. The last ten years, the increase alone in that portion of our country, has given it 346 additional missionaries.

4. In the table on the next page, will be seen the progress which has been made, year by year, in the newer states of the West, as they have severally come into being, and presented fields of peculiar promise for missionary culture. When this Society was formed, Indiana and Illinois were in their infancy. Michigan was, at that time, and for ten years subsequent, a territory; in 1825, it had but one Presbyterian or Congregational minister, and he was a missionary. Wisconsin remained, eight years after the organization of this Society, the almost undisputed home of the Indian. Iowa was not organized as a territory till 1838.

PRINCIPAL AUXILIARIES, AGENCIES AND MISSIONARY FIELDS.

Maine Missionary Society.

The receipts of this Society, for the year ending March 1st, were $11,116 57, which, with a balance of $163 44 in its treasury at the beginning of the year, makes a total of $11,280 01, which has been at the disposal of the Society. Of this sum, $11,247 23 have been expended in supplying destitute churches and missionary districts within the State. There have been received into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society, from individuals and congregations, $80, making the total contributions to the cause from the State, during the year, $11,327 23.

Ninety one missionaries have been in commission in the State, of whom forty five were pastors, and twenty three stated supplies. Their labor, amounting in all to nearly 67 years, has been bestowed upon 84 missionary fields, comprising 105 churches and more than 25 towns and plantations where no Congregational churches exist. Several of the missionaries have been engaged in itinerant service in the destitute and sparsely populated portions of the State.

The aggregate membership of missionary churches at the date of the last annual report of the Trustees, was 4,413, of whom 318 had been added during the year. The whole number of hopeful conversions reported was 239, a larger number than in any former year since 1843. In addition to these trophies of renewing grace, many incidental results of missionary labor are manifest. The cause of Temperance has advanced, Sabbath schools are generally in a prosperous condition, the Sabbath is better observed, order, decorum, and correct sentiments on moral subjects are gaining ground.

This Society has been in operation forty four years, and has accomplished a great work in the destitute portions of the State. Forty three churches, once aided by its funds, have within 25 years—three of them within the last year—assumed the entire support of the ministry, and are now contributing to send the Gospel to “the regions beyond.” But a great work remains to be done. The Secretary, Rev. BENJAMIN TAPPAN, D. D., says, “Of our 225 Congregational churches, not half can be relied upon to support unaided the institutions of religion. Add to the 365 incorporated towns of the State, those plantations in which a sufficient number of families reside to demand stated preaching, in more than one half of the whole number, no Congregational churches have been organized. And thus destitute will they continue to be until the Gospel is sent to them by those who know its value and can sympathize with him who, beholding the multitudes in his native land, that were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd, had compassion on them and directed his disciples to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest. His harvest—a harvest to be gathered for Him. Upon the Congregationalists of Maine devolves the duty, the privilege of doing their part towards gathering the harvest within their own commonwealth. Here he has much people to be instructed, converted, sanctified, saved. Let not the good work linger.”

New Hampshire Missionary Society.

Forty six missionaries have been in the service of this society during the year, and have performed nearly thirty seven years of labor, in forty eight churches and congregations. Since the organization of the Society, fifty years ago, forty churches have become independent of missionary aid, thirty seven of them within twenty five years, and two of them within the last year.

The receipts for the year have been $6,558 10, of which $883 91, by direction of the donors, and $1,000 by vote of the Trustees, have been paid into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society; leaving for the use of the auxiliary $4,674 19. The expenditures on the field have been $4,338 53. There have been received into the treasury of the Parent Society, from congregations and individuals, and in payment of legacies, $1,888 43, making the total receipts into the treasury of the National Society $3,772 34, and the whole amount of contributions to the cause of Home Missions, $8,446 53. This is an advance upon the contributions of the previous year of $1,875 45.

The past year has not been signalized by powerful revivals, yet upon several of the churches the dews of the Spirit have fallen, and some precious fruits have been gathered. A commendable spirit of liberality has been exhibited in the missionary churches, the average of their contributions to charitable purposes being equal to the general average for the whole State.

The Secretary of the Society, Rev. BENJAMIN P. STONE, after presenting the "lights and shades" of the missionary work in this State, concludes as follows: "In view of the spiritual benefit conferred both on saints and sinners by the everlasting Gospel, we learn what has been and still is the glorious mission of this Society. It has been one of holy commiseration to the needy. Every joyful subject of its favors will be an eternal witness before God of its necessity and profitableness as the instrument of enlarging his kingdom on earth."

"Standing as we do this day in the midst of the monuments of Home Missionary agency, within sight of the desolations of many generations, and hearing even the voice of supplication for the bread of life from thronging millions of our land, to what other conclusion can we come than that we are called to a still greater measure of devotion to the salvation of our State and country? "With the conviction always abiding, that the light of our good works cannot be ephemeral, but will continue to shine, though upon other standards, long after we have ceased from the living, we cannot but rejoice in the glorious opportunity now afforded us of contributing something to render the destiny of our country a blessing to all mankind."

Vermont Domestic Missionary Society.

The receipts of this Society for the year have been $7,004 80, of which $6,155 45 have been expended within the limits of the State. There have also been received into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society from individuals and congregations $358 20, and in payment of legacies $850, making the whole amount of contributions from the State $8,213, which exceeds the contributions of any previous year by more than $2,000.

The number of missionaries commissioned on this field is sixty one, the aggregate of whose ministerial labors is forty nine years. They have ministered in sixty five churches, and four missionary districts where churches have not been organized. Several of the congregations have been visited by the special influences of the Spirit of God, and from many fields in which there has been no revival, facts are reported indicative of a steady and general progress. The morals of the community have improved; the Sabbath is better observed; there is an increasing attendance upon public worship, and more serious attention is given to the preached word; and much seed has been sown, the harvest of which is yet to be gathered.

Thirty churches in this State that have been aided during the last twenty five years, have assumed the entire support of the ministry. A few of these are still feeble, and may, in consequence of emigration and other changes, become again beneficiaries of the Society. But most of them are stable and efficient churches, the precious fruit of missionary toil in other days, and liberal contributions to the cause to which they owe their existence. And in the case of the few which have become, or which may become dependent a second time, the missionary culture bestowed upon them has not been in vain. Not only has God gathered from them much fruit for his heavenly garner, but, says the Secretary, Rev. JOHN F. STONE, "they are nurseries in which trees of righteousness are being reared to be transferred to other ground where their fruits shall abound to the glory of God, and the salvation of many. From some churches a number greater than the present number of resident members, have gone to the West, and to other parts, where they are helping to build up the church and sustain the Gospel. The fountains must be purified in order that the streams may be pure. How then can the friends of Christ in Vermont so effectually subserve his cause at large, as by bringing the Gospel to bear upon her own population?"

Massachusetts Home Missionary Society.

This Society has had in commission, during the year, sixty one missionaries, who have performed forty nine years of ministerial service. The number of churches assisted is fifty two, of which five have, within the year, taken their leave of the Society as beneficiaries, and will be found henceforth only in the list of donors. Four others have been received, so that the number of churches aided is one less than was reported the last year.

The receipts of the Society for the year have been $27,880 74, of which $7,421 75 have been expended within the State, and $19,000 remitted to the Parent Society. There have also been paid into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society the following sums, viz.: from the Hampshire Missionary Society,

$1,963 06; from individuals, congregations, and auxiliaries, $2,735 47; and in payment of legacies, $2,542 75; making a total of contributions to the cause of Home Missions from the State, of $34,122 02, of which $26,241 28 were appropriated to the supply of spiritual destitutions in the West.

Of the 175 existing churches which have shared the fostering care of this Society, 121 have risen to the stature of self support—117 of them within the last 25 years. Many of these churches are now among the most liberal and efficient supporters of the Society. Of the churches now receiving aid, six are reported as having made their last application.

The last report of the Executive Committee, prepared by the Secretary, Rev. JOSEPH S. CLARK, states that, "in addition to the five discharged churches already named, whose last appropriations amounted to $450, eleven others have assumed an increased proportion of their ministers' support, and by so doing have manifestly increased their power of self reliance. A still more hopeful indication is seen in the fact that, while nine new churches of our faith and order have sprung into life the past year within the bounds of Massachusetts, and are all supplied with the means of grace, only one of the nine is dependent on missionary aid."

"The Executive Committee have long looked forward to the time when the old Puritan State of Massachusetts will have so far regained her primitive character, as to present no moral waste within her borders—no house or village unsupplied with the institutions of evangelical religion; a time when God shall 'restore her judges as at the first, and her counselors as at the beginning,' and all her population 'shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree,' in the quiet enjoyment of religious ordinances upheld without missionary aid. The patrons of this Society have been encouraged to expect such a time as the result of their prayers and alms. Nor can we deem it an idle expectation, when we survey the wide wastes that have been already reclaimed. The places now occupied by two fifths of the Evangelical Congregational churches in Massachusetts—many of them among the largest and most influential—have been so many fields of hard, but successful missionary toil. The 'templed hills' which, in these several places, are trodden by the feet of devout worshippers every Lord's day, testify that this is not an idle expectation."

Rhode Island Home Missionary Society.

This Society has had in its service during the year, seven missionaries, who have labored in connection with six churches. For their support $625 have been contributed within the State, and an appropriation of $1,000 has been received from the Connecticut Missionary Society. Contributions to the amount of $591, from individuals and congregations in the State, have been received into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society.

The Secretary, Rev. THOMAS T. WATERMAN, states that "a debt of nearly $400, incurred two years ago, has been extinguished, and that the missionaries have been laboring under various discouragements, but with great self denial and with the ordinary measure of success. The manufacturing districts of the State suffer by the depression of business, and the removal of individuals and families; still the field of labor and usefulness is important, and must not be relinquished at a single point. We cannot afford to have our population without an evangelical ministry."

Connecticut Missionary Society.

The receipts of this auxiliary for the year ending March 1st, were $7,664 43, of which $4518 08, have been expended within the limits of the State. An appropriation of $1000 has been made to the Rhode Island Home Missionary Society, and $1,200 have been transmitted to the Parent Institution. The receipts into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society from individuals, congregations and auxiliaries, have been $12,253 93, and in payment of legacies $2,680 26, making the total amount of contributions to Home Missions in the State, $22,598 62. Of this sum, $16,134 19, have been applied through the Parent Society to supply the destitutions on the Western field.

Forty five missionaries have been in commission in the State during the year. One church has assumed the entire support of its pastor, and two others are understood to have made their last application for aid. Since the organization of this Society in 1816, seventy of the existing churches of Connecticut have been aided by its funds—twenty seven of which have within twenty five years become independent of foreign aid. Twenty three of these churches, the statistics of which have been furnished, received from the Society $14,419. The average period during which these churches received aid, is nearly 7 1-2 years, and the average annual appropriation to a church $84 32, or $627 for rearing up an infant church of Christ to the stature of self support.

Most of the churches now aided are in a condition of healthful growth, and will ere long become more than able to sustain themselves. But causes are in operation which must not only perpetuate the feebleness of others, but may bring some that are now vigorous upon the list of beneficiaries. While, therefore, this auxiliary is contributing liberally to supply the destitutions of the new settlements, it has still a great work to do on its own field. Says the Secretary, Rev. HORACE HOOKER, "The two main obstacles we have now to meet are, the fluctuations in manufacturing interests, and the drain on old worn out towns, to build up new villages in this State, and to people the great West. These are serious difficulties, and they will long continue. To say nothing of fluctuations in manufactures—which deeply affect no inconsiderable portion of the feeble churches on our list—there will be new centers of business constantly springing up, both for manufacturing purposes, and along the line of Railroads. These are now checkering over our little State in every direction, and gathering the population around centers often far distant from the rising ground so commonly chosen in former times for the erection of churches. Taste may choose the well rounded hills, but Expediency, who now rules the day, chooses the valleys. Says a missionary of our Society, "It is not more certain that our living springs, gushing from our mountain sides, will send their contributions to drive the machinery in the lower towns, than it is that our youth will be in attendance to aid in the manufacture of the fabrics which are the staples of their wealth."

"But emigration is not the sole discouragement; immigration is often little better in its influence. The places of the youthful energetic emigrants are often supplied, if supplied at all, by others of less industry and moral worth, who are drawn thither by the low rents and cheap lands, which are the necessary result of the removal of the former owners. These new comers, too, are often of different religious sentiments from the old inhabitants, or indifferent to all religion. Our State is gradually becoming more heterogeneous, and in this respect more like the West. Unless the soil, which the rain and tempests thus sweep down into the valleys, and bear away into the Ocean, is replaced by Home Missionary operations, a few years would suffice to prostrate such congregations in hopeless ruin."

Philadelphia Home Missionary Society.

The field occupied by this Society comprises the States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, and the District of Columbia. Within these limits there have been in commission the past year fifty seven missionaries; viz.: eleven in New Jersey; forty two in Pennsylvania; one in Delaware; two in Maryland; and one in the District of Columbia. Seven new missionary fields have been entered during the year, and six churches have undertaken the entire support of the ministry. More than forty churches, once aided by the Society, have risen to the condition of independence, and many of them have become liberal contributors to the cause of Home Missions.

The receipts of the Society for the year have been $8,185 40, of which $7,747 08 have been expended within its own limits, and $100 paid into the treasury of the Parent Society. In addition to this there have been paid into the treasury of the American Home Missionary Society, from individuals and congregations, and in payment of legacies, $3,016 22, viz.: from New Jersey, $2,236 72; from Pennsylvania, $699; from Maryland, $0 50; from the District of Columbia, $80; making the whole amount expended through the American Home Missionary Society, $3,116 22, and the whole amount of contributions from this field $11,101 62, which is an advance upon the contributions reported the previous year of $631 80.

To the churches under the care of this Society, the past year appears to have been one of more than ordinary prosperity. The last report of the Executive Committee, prepared by the Secretary, Rev. ROBERT ADAIR, states, that "the special influences of the Holy Spirit have been enjoyed by several of the churches, and the members of the Sabbath schools have shared largely in this blessing. In places where these special visits of mercy have not been enjoyed, there are other decisive indications of progress. The means of divine appointment are better attended than formerly, and larger numbers wait upon God in the sanctuary. The inebriate has been reformed; the profane swearer has been brought to reverence the name of his Maker; the Sabbath breaker has been led to visit the place of prayer and religious instruction, and a great moral change has been effected. But much remains to be done in occupying new and important fields of missionary effort. The public improvements, the Central Railroad, and the New York and Erie Railroad, will give existence to many villages in the center and north of the State, where, in a short time, there will be a thriving, enterprising population. To these points our eyes must now be directed. We must not wait till the population is gathered. We must act with promptness and energy in taking possession of these places, and lay the corner stone of Christian institutions there, before infidelity or superstition gains the ascendancy."

Central Agency, New York.

This division of our field has been again bereaved, and our work retarded, by the hand of death. The Secretary and Agent, Rev. WASHINGTON THACHER, rested from his service on earth on the 29th July last. His health had been declining for many months; but his fervent desire to be employed in promoting the kingdom of his Lord and Master led him to continue his personal efforts, after it became apparent to others that he must speedily exchange this scene of toil for one of heavenly triumph. His associates in the Agency testify of him, that "he enjoyed not only the love of his brethren, as an humble and devoted laborer in the spiritual vineyard, but also their confidence in his ability to guide and direct in the progress of the cause of Christ." He filled his last post of responsibility and labor for three years, having been appointed to it in July, 1847. His piety, prudence and zeal were displayed in this position in labors which were limited only by his strength. "He descended to the grave with his armor on, and his last anxieties and prayers were for the progress of Home Missions."

In August, the Rev. RICHARD F. CLEVELAND, of Fayetteville, N. Y., was, at the suggestion of the Central Agency, called to this work; and for the remainder of the missionary year, has labored with great diligence and success in re-arranging and prosecuting the plans which had been broken off by the death of his predecessor.

Notwithstanding this interruption, the total receipts of the Agency amounted to $3,918 32, being only $340 less than the income of the year preceding. In addition, $2,044 32 were remitted from this field directly to the office in New York; making an aggregate of $5,962 64 from the territory of the Agency.

Forty five ministers of the Gospel have been commissioned through this board, and have labored in more than fifty feeble churches and vacant districts. The average cost of this labor, including the incidental expenses of the Agency, has been about eighty eight dollars for each missionary; an amount scarcely worthy to be named in comparison with the results secured. Six of the churches assisted, have during the past year ceased to be beneficiaries, and others have made advances toward the point of self-support. Houses of worship built or repaired, churches organized or resuscitated, divisions healed, debts paid, and numerous other solid benefits acquired, and—more and better than all—the reviving influences of the Holy Spirit bear testimony to the continued approbation of heaven; and abundantly compensate for the money and labors expended."

Of the 200 feeble churches on this field, which in former years have received missionary help, 42 are no longer dependent.

Some persons, not apprised of the peculiar relations of this section of the state, have found it difficult to understand why a region so rich in physical resources should furnish so many examples of protracted dependence. This is well accounted for by the Secretary in his Report. "The ground occupied by this Agency has been for years past, and may be for years to come, a half-way house for emigrants from the East—a seed plot, a recruiting post—furnishing the constituents of future society in the West." In support of this statement, one example, from many of a similar bearing, is presented. One church, since its organization, has furnished not far from a hundred members for churches at the West; and from the community a still greater number, whose characters had been formed under its influence. Six young men from that church have entered the ministry, four of whom are now laboring at the West. A church, in another part of the same town, has dismissed since its organization about thirty members on their removal to the West. Probably more than twice that number have gone in the same direction from the community associated with that church. Five young men converted under its influence have entered the ministry; and three of these also are fulfilling their mission in the Great Valley. Within two years, a single family of that church has contributed four of its members, hopefully pious and educated, as teachers at the West. It is in this way that this church repays to the cause of christian evangelization the eight hundred dollars assistance which it has in time past received; and it is in this way, also, that the protracted debility of congregations on this field is explained.

Besides these considerations, a new feature of this field is revealing itself, and accounts for the continued need of missionary aid. A large portion of the territory of this Agency, comprising most of St. Lawrence, Franklin, Hamilton, Clinton and Warren counties, "has remained in nearly primitive seclusion, while emigration from the East has passed by and around it. It exhibits few of the attractions which draw agricultural adventurers towards the fertile prairies of the West. Yet its rocks and streams, its forests and minerals furnish the material and the productive agencies of a commerce without which no branch of industry can permanently prosper. Attention has of late been drawn to this tract from various quarters and for various reasons; and already have important and promising stations for missionary effort been suggested for the consideration of the Board. Civilization is urging its way into the wild and picturesque regions from which issue the St. Regis, the Racket, the Grass and the Oswegatchie." Immense resources in lumber and iron, which have been but partially developed, and water power in inexhaustible abundance, are attracting the energies of a large population. Schools and academies, rising at the same time with forges and manufactories, give promise that intelligence and order will advance by the side of enterprise, economy and thrift. Here, then, where the missionary call has hitherto been scarcely heard, a field of effort and promise is opening, whose claims are likely to be as interesting as they are urgent.

Western Agency, New York.

Seventy two missionaries and eighty three churches, on the field of this Board, have sustained the relation of beneficiaries the past year. Five of these ministers have been sustained by funds furnished by the churches in the Presbytery of Rochester, and applied under its direction. Four new fields and ten missionaries not before in commission have received assistance. Two houses of worship have been finished and consecrated to the service of God; three have been repaired or enlarged; and measures are in progress for the erection of six others. Parsonages are now, for the first time, secured in four parishes. Six ministers, heretofore dependent on the Society for a part of their support, will from this time be sustained by their people. In all the missionary churches, it is believed without exception, Sabbath schools or Bible classes are organized; and all the ordinary efforts for the instruction and salvation of the people may be said to be enjoyed. The influences of the Divine Spirit have not been withheld; conversions have been frequent, and on eight of the congregations special revival effusions have been granted.

The receipts of the Agency for the past year have been $8,764 75, besides $3,554 36 which were paid directly into the treasury of the Parent Society, making an aggregate from this portion of the State of $12,319 11. Of this sum the churches aided have refunded $1,017 41—a pleasing illustration of the training in benevolent habits which grows out of the manner in which aid is ministered to those churches, and which has produced such a generous revenue from those congregations which in times past were dependent on the Society. No less than 36 of the churches aided on this field during the four years' operations of the United Domestic Missionary Society, (from 1822 to 1826) are now among the efficient helpers of this cause; and in the twenty five years which have succeeded the formation of the National Society, 122 such examples of the transfer from the list of dependents to that of helpers, have been recorded, within these limits. During the same quarter of a century, this field has yielded for the purposes of this Society, $204,500; of which, after supplying the current demands of the region, a surplus of $85,000 has been left for the general purposes of the Society in other sections of the vineyard.

The multiplication of churches in Western New York has been remarkable. In 1800, there was scarcely a Presbyterian or Congregational church in this whole section. The Secretary of the Agency, Rev. JOHN A. MURRAY, states that "in 1826, there were 191 Presbyterian churches, and 10,000 communicants. In 1836, there were 280 Presbyterian churches, and 25,000 communicants. In 1841, the Presbyterian and Congregational churches had increased to 380, and the communicants to 30,000. Now, there are 400 such churches, 336 of which have been aided by this Agency. There have been, it is thought, 60,000 different persons connected with Presbyterian and Congregational churches in this part of the state; half of the survivors, it is supposed, being now in the West, or in other parts of the land, doing much for the evangelization of our country. Thus, the kingdom of God has come and spread over this region. Thus has Western New York been saved to the cause of Christ, and will send forth, in coming time, streams that will make glad the city of God, and bless a dying world."

Western Reserve Agency.

The number of missionaries sustained by the funds of this Agency, during the year ending March 1st, was thirty. Eleven others were commissioned by the Society to labor within the same limits. These labors were distributed among 57 congregations.

The income of the Agency for the same period was $3,177 34. Add to this, various remittances of individual churches and donors from within The Reserve, to the office in New York, and the aggregate of contributions from that part of Ohio, is $3,740 12—more than $800 above the same items of the year before.

How great a share Home Missions have had, and must still have, in introducing and establishing the Gospel in new settlements, is manifested by the following facts which are contained in the Report of this Agency. Of seventy-eight churches, lying East of a certain line in Northern Ohio, which assume the support of their ministers, sixty have been aided by the American Home Missionary Society. And of the remaining eighteen, six are known to have received assistance from the Connecticut Missionary Society; and all, (with two or three exceptions) were planted and nurtured in their infancy by the missionaries of that Society, while pursuing on this field, during its early history, their system of itinerant labors. West of the line referred to, there are 98 townships in which are 19 churches of the denominations co-operating with this Society; and in all these, so far as we are informed, there is no minister laboring but those employed by this Committee. It would seem, therefore, that, except in the aggressive action of Home Missions, there is little prospect of supplying with the Gospel the 140 townships in which no churches sympathizing with this Institution are found.

In addition to the motives thus furnished for evangelization, we have the encouragement which a review of the past affords. It is eight years since the Agency on this field was committed to Rev. MYRON TRACY. "Although," he remarks in his Report, "these have been years of spiritual dearth, and it has seemed, much of the time, as if religion were making almost no progress in any of our churches; yet I find on review, that seventeen of the churches which at the commencement of this period were dependent on the Home Missionary Society, have now assumed the entire support of their own ministers. Two or three of this number, however, may be compelled again to seek our aid. Four of these churches have undertaken to sustain their ministers within the past year, with fair prospects of being able to support their own Gospel institutions for all coming time." "That, under the circumstances of discouragement which have attended these eight years, the American Home Missionary Society has been able to accomplish so much for the good of those churches, I cannot but regard as greatly to its praise; showing it to be an institution of unmeasured value. It has exerted, and is still exerting in all this region, an influence for good, which none can fully know."

Marietta Agency, O.

Thirteen missionaries have been on the list of this Agency during the year; and towards their support $522 33 have been contributed on the field. The past year, God has visited the churches in a larger measure than usual, with revivals of religion. Of the twenty churches to which those brethren have ministered, six have enjoyed seasons of special interest. "The Lord has put his seal upon them as his own churches, giving them the same testimony that convinced the Apostle Peter, that God had granted repentance also to the Gentiles."

The ten counties now embraced in this Agency are assuming new relations to the rest of the state and the country at large, which add greatly to their interest as fields of evangelical effort. Although this is the portion of Ohio which was first settled, its comparatively broken surface did not allow it to compete in agricultural attractions with more favored districts; so that emigration for the most part passed it by, and created in other sections its lines of transit and marts of commerce. The rugged soil of these counties, however, contains immense resources of coal, iron and salt; and these mineral treasures are but just beginning to be developed. Rev. THOMAS WICKES, the Secretary of the Agency, estimates "that the coal field of Ohio, underlying the surface of 28 counties, has an area of 12,000 square miles, of which the portion that can be wrought is four times as great as the workable coal field of England. Ohio has coal enough to supply all the fires and machinery of the United States and Great Britain for ages to come. The iron region is much narrower, but still is of great magnitude." Four of the counties of the Agency are peculiarly rich in this mineral. The valleys of the Hocking and the Muskingum are also the chief deposits of salt.

From these physical causes it is reasonable to expect great manufacturing activity and a dense population, when capital and the increasing facilities of commerce shall have developed the capabilities of the country. How this process is likely to go on may be inferred from these facts: "In 1840, the population of those ten counties was 131,380; in 1850 it was 191,156—an increase of 46 per cent., while the increase of the four mineral counties was 50 per cent., and that, without any large towns, without rail roads, and with very little capital and commerce." In view of the future which awaits such a region when those advantages shall be supplied, does it not seem a gracious arrangement of Providence, that the early settlers on this rugged soil should have been of the Pilgrim stock, whose projected institutions involved the ideas of religion, intelligence and order; who thought deeply and looked afar, to the best interests of generations yet to come?

The churches planted amid those hills, though feeble in wealth and numbers, already exert a power as the conservators of christian truth, and in exemplifying the morality of the Gospel. "Their influence," adds the Report of the Secretary, "is not confined to their own immediate communities; nor is it to be estimated alone by the number of converts added to them. They exert a powerful influence on other denominations, in restraining them from fanaticism and error, and elevating among them the standard of doctrine and practice; while they take the lead in those great and comprehensive moral enterprises which can alone secure the permanent welfare of society."

Cincinnati Agency, O.

Forty four missionaries received assistance through this Board, during the year past. The receipts into its treasury in the same period were $3,769 38. This, with a previous balance of $1,541 19, made the resources of the year $5,310 57, which has all been expended on the field, except a remaining balance of $786 87.

A large proportion of the beneficiary churches within this agency have been richly blessed with revivals; and nearly all have made important progress in other respects. That this progress is not more marked arises from the fluctuation of the people, and the repeated migrations towards the states and territories successively opened beyond them. Hence, even with a laborious and productive ministry, those churches have not made so much advance towards self-support as the yearly additions would have led us to expect. Still, some churches are every year arriving at independence of foreign aid; and a still larger number annually require a diminished amount of help. In remarking on the results attained in a series of years, our Agent, Rev. HENRY LITTLE, reports as follows: "In the infancy of Ohio and Indiana, this Society and its present auxiliaries assisted nearly all the churches which received aid from any source; so that I should hardly speak too strongly if I should say, that all the Congregational churches and all the Presbyterian churches of both schools, have been directly or indirectly aided by it. Very few of the old churches were not thus aided; and even of those in the Old School connexion which have been formed since the division of 1837, the most were organized out of such as had been previously brought into existence or materially assisted by the American Home Missionary Society. Your records will show, that such churches as those of Granville, Circleville, Athens, Belpre, Warren, Newark, Jersey, Piqua, Hamilton, Mount Pleasant, New Richmond, Georgetown, Portsmouth, and many others in Ohio; and Madison, New Albany, Evansville, Delphi, Dayton, Lafayette, Rockville, Peru, Danville, Greenwood, and many others in Indiana, which now sustain the Gospel without extraneous aid, have been indebted to the timely and continued kindness of the Home Missionary Society."

The Committee are constrained to refer, as in former Reports, to the extensive settlements going forward in the more retired portions of Ohio and Indiana, and which will soon cease from their comparative seclusion by means of the progress of internal improvements. There seems to be no alternative but a speedy increase of Home Missionary labor, or great disaster to the cause of evangelical religion and to every social interest, in those fertile and populous regions.

Missouri.

Twenty nine missionaries in this state have borne the commission of the Parent Society since our last Report; two of them receiving a portion of their support from the Missouri Home Missionary Society. The income of this Auxiliary was $766 15.

These missionaries report pleasing evidence that they have not labored in vain. Not only in temporal prosperity, but also in the presence of the Holy Spirit, a number of churches have occasion for thanksgiving and encouragement. Several houses of worship are in the process of erection or repair. There is an apparent reaction on the subject of emigration beyond the mountains, many persons having returned from California with no disposition to repeat the adventure. It is probable, therefore, that the public mind will be less distracted by this and other causes, than in previous years. It would appear to be a peculiarly auspicious time for ministers of the Gospel to commence laboring in this state; and surely a more urgent call for evangelical labor can hardly be presented by any portion of the Home Missionary field than is heard from this. The Secretary of the Missouri Home Missionary Society, Rev. EDWARD WRIGHT, testifies as follows: "The prospects as to internal improvements and the development of our agricultural and mineral resources, have brightened within the past year. Our position in relation to the two oceans and the surrounding states, is as central as ever; and the conviction is forced upon us, that, at no distant day, our more than 600,000 people will swell to a million twice told. They will spread over our vast territory, levelling our forests and converting our prairies into fruitful fields. But will these fields become as the garden of God? It still holds true, with an emphasis, that 'more than one third of the 96 counties in our state are without any preaching by our denomination, and but poorly supplied with any evangelical instruction.'"

We repeat this testimony, and would hold it up before the eyes and the consciences of the ministry, hoping that the Lord will qualify many to labor in that field, and dispose them to consecrate themselves to its cultivation.

Michigan.

Eighty missionaries have received aid in proclaiming the Gospel in this state, since the last Report. Their labors were greatly embarrassed in the former part of the year, by desolating sickness, which for some time almost broke up the public services of religion. The pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noonday, raged with violence and swept multitudes into eternity. "For fifteen years," says our Agent, "I have but once witnessed a time of such prevailing affliction." The claims of the sick and dying, the burial of the dead, and comforting the bereaved, imposed upon the missionaries an unusual amount of exhausting labor; and many of them were themselves for weeks prostrated by sickness. Four ministers, three of whom have been in connection with this Society, have during the year finished their work and ascended to their reward.

Notwithstanding these unfavorable circumstances, the movement of the churches has been, as in former years, steadily onward. In several congregations precious seasons of revival have been enjoyed; particularly at the close of the year. An increased attention is observable to the erection or improvement of houses of worship. Some noble examples have been presented of sacrifice to attain this object without seeking foreign assistance. Sabbath schools have received an impulse, and are more systematic and efficient, in consequence of the presence of an Agent laboring for this specific object. Habits of benevolent contributions have been inculcated on the pupils; many of them have become the hopeful subjects of renewing grace; and in general, the churches are more justly appreciating the value and duty of religious efforts for the young. Many churches which once received the aid of this Society, now sustain themselves, and contribute not only to spread the knowledge of God throughout our own wide prairie, but also to send it to foreign lands. The last Report of the American Board of Foreign Missions, showed about $2,000 received from this state; while $2,400 have been raised for Home Missions besides liberal donations to the B. M. T. and Sunday school Societies.

Among the churches which were formerly dependent on missionary assistance, but now sustain their own institutions, are those of Pontiac, Flint, Romeo, Mt. Clemens, Monroe, Tecumseh, Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, Jackson, Adrian, Hillsdale, Jonesville, Coldwater, Albion, Marshall, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, &c. These churches have become what they are through Home Missionary aid. "Some of them," we are assured, "give yearly $100 or more for the same object; and they can never forget their obligations to the institution by which they were raised and nurtured as with a mother's care." "Indeed," says our Agent, Rev. CALVIN CLARK, "it might be a matter of interest to know how many of all the churches in Michigan have not received missionary aid?" He then enumerates eight or ten existing churches that were never thus dependent, leaving some 200 other places that have been aided, a large majority of which are living witnesses of the value of this natural and efficient mode of church extension.

The blessings thus conferred on Michigan are illustrated by the following report of a single case. "On the banks of a beautiful stream, stands one of the pleasantest villages in the state. Many of the early settlers were destitute of piety, and some of them drank deep of the spirit of infidelity. One of our early missionaries had an interview of four hours with two prominent infidels of that place, who boasted that more than twenty of their neighbors embraced substantially their views. When the servant of Christ proposed to fix his abode there, no house could be obtained for his family, and scarcely a place for the sole of his foot. In that field he toiled on for years; and his labors were not in vain. A blessing attended him; the Holy Spirit came down, souls were converted and accessions made to the visible church. Now, in that village, there are two churches congenial with those who sustain this Society, averaging nearly 150 members each. One of these churches has during the past year contributed $160 to the American Board, $90 to this Society, and liberally to other benevolent objects; while its flourishing Sabbath school pours some $60 or $70 into the treasury of benevolence."

It is painful to repeat the statement of former years, that the unsupplied portions of the state are wide and numerous. In St. Clair county there are three vacant churches; in Saginaw county, our churches have no minister, the county is rapidly settling, plank roads are in progress, a house of worship will soon be completed at the county seat, and other churches might be immediately formed if they could be supplied with ministers. The same is true of Livingston and Shiawassee counties. The churches of Clinton Co. have been vacant for two years; one or two are destitute in Ionia; the emigration to Montcalm ought to be accompanied by missionaries. In the older sections of the state, also, several important points are unsupplied. These growing wants are arousing the churches to the duty of providing a ministry for their waste places; and candidates are now in training in connexion with most of the ecclesiastical bodies of the state.

Illinois.

One hundred and nineteen missionaries have in the last twelve months preached the Gospel in Illinois, under commission from this Society—a larger number than was ever before reported in a Western State. The receipts from this field, during the year, were $3,479 15.

Rev. ARATUS KENT has in this period visited all the 23 counties composing his Agency in Northern Illinois; superintending the application of missionary aid, and stimulating the feeble and destitute churches to the use of their own resources for obtaining the means of grace. The spiritual mercies of the year have been unusually precious. On all parts of this field revival blessings have descended. In the North Western portion, 12 Presbyterian and Congregational churches have been thus visited; and five of them have received large accessions to their numbers and strength.

In Central Illinois, Rev. WILLIAM KIRBY reports, that the great work, which the Society has been so long prosecuting, has this year made encouraging advancement. "Nine churches have experienced interesting revivals. Wherever the Gospel has been preached, decisive results have followed; the truths of Christianity have entered deeply into the very organization of society; and a distinctive christian civilization has been developed. It is my privilege, for the first time in more than five years, to report that the more important fields within my Agency are now supplied with the ministrations of the Gospel."

In Southern Illinois, the Society has had sixteen missionaries; and another, formerly under its commission, has been sustained wholly by the funds of the Presbytery of Alton. This Auxiliary has raised for missionary purposes $436 44. Arrangements are made to secure the entire services of another missionary among the destitute in the extreme Southern part of the state.

In glancing at the missionary condition and prospects of Illinois, as a whole, we see a continuation of the same divine favor through the past year, that has rested on our operations from the beginning. The rapid progress of that state in population—now more than 800,000—is even outstripped by the proportional additions to its missionary laborers. The late census showed an increase of the people, in ten years, equal to 78 per cent., while the missionaries have received an addition of 183 per cent. Of the more than forty New School Presbyterian and Congregational churches which now enjoy their privileges independent of aid from abroad, only some half dozen are recalled as having achieved this distinction without direct assistance from this Society. And this account of the past plainly indicates what the future will be. If seven eighths of the churches which are yet to belong to our branch of the great Calvinistic family, must owe their existence, instrumentally, to the planting and training of our missions, what a vast work remains still undone in this single State! For, as yet, there is but an aggregate of about 200 ministers of Congregationalists and Presbyterians of both schools, while twice that number are needed to give only four to each county. But this is not all. The recent movement for building a great Central trunk of Railroads, from Cairo in the South to Galena and Dubuque in the North, with its East and West connexions, will bring the hitherto neglected interior into the enjoyment of both a Southern and an Eastern market, and will give an immediate importance to vast tracts which are now but partially available. This must introduce a large population along these lines of transit. Mr. KIRBY says, that no less than 57 counties will be crossed or nearly approached by these highways of commerce; and some of them traversed twice in different directions. The scarcity of timber and remoteness from the natural channels of trade have been the great obstacles to the temporal and religious interests of the interior counties which will be reached by this vast chain of iron roads. These obstacles will now be removed. The timber and coal of the Southern counties will supply the deficiency of the Middle and Northern; and the ease of finding the best markets will allure emigrants of every description from the older states. This quickening of the stagnant mind on so large a portion of the state, cannot but operate favorably to the spread of religion. "Christianity never engrafts itself upon dead and lifeless stocks; its principles demand life and vigor. The stupor of slumbering hearts is more hostile to its progress than the vices which it subdues. Enterprise is both the result and the harbinger of its triumphs."

In these views of the importance and promise of the field thus laid more open to the public view, Mr. KENT concurs. "The prospect is that, in my Agency, every acre of our fertile prairies will be within six hours of a good market, and every person within fifty hours of the Atlantic, and less than that of travelling time from the Gulf of Mexico. How rapidly will this region be peopled; and what numbers of villages and cities will start up, almost as suddenly as the landscape is transformed into an ocean of flowers and verdure at the voice of Spring! I allude to this to show the Church's responsibility to lay broad, deep and quickly the foundations of civil, literary and religious institutions." And Rev. A. T. NORTON, Secretary of the Missionary Committee of the Presbytery of Alton, assures us, that "within two years, we shall need a minister at least every 20 miles, for 150 miles on that road, beginning with Cairo. Never before has there been laid upon us such a necessity to make haste in our work."

Wisconsin.

Since the last anniversary, it has been deemed important to the efficient and economical administration of missionary affairs in this state, that an Agent should be employed to represent this Society in communicating with the needy churches, and to be its organ in dispensing relief. The services of Rev. DEXTER CLARY, for several years pastor of the church in Beloit, have been secured for this object, to the evident gratification of the friends of the Society in that region; and greatly, we trust, to the advantage of the Home Missionary cause. Mr. Clary entered on the duties of his appointment, August 1st, and has, thus far, been principally occupied in becoming acquainted with the details of the field, and the work entrusted to his superintendence.

Seventy two missionaries have borne the commission of this Society in Wisconsin, within the past year. Revivals of religion, of great interest, have been enjoyed by some 12 of the churches, in which, it is supposed, about 400 were added to the number of those hoping in Christ. Besides these, about 200 have already been admitted to a profession of their faith, since the year began.

In Wisconsin, the progress of settlements, towns, roads, public and private edifices, institutions for education, and similar improvements of a secular nature, have been attended, with equal pace, by an increase of churches, ministers, and the various subsidiary means of grace, to a degree unequalled in any other Western state. Although, so lately as 1839, there were but about 30,000 inhabitants, and not more than ten ministers in our connexion, there are, now, some 320,000 people, with 85 ministers and 112 churches of the denominations co-operating with this Society. Comprised in these churches, are about 4,000 members; one eighth of them having joined during the year. In the same time, five houses of worship have been dedicated. The whole number is now 38; and seven new ones are in progress. Since the accomplishment of almost the whole of this good has turned on the timely and judicious application of Home Missionary aid, it is not strange that Christian men, in Wisconsin, should feel a filial attachment to the institution which has thus blessed the home of their adoption. "Your missionaries," says one, "were among the first to explore this field, and mark it as a land of great promise for Messiah's kingdom. Through their early and energetic efforts, the cords of our beloved Zion were extended, and her stakes firmly set in every town, village, prairie and grove. By them, churches have been planted and watered, in which a pure evangelical Christianity has had able and fearless advocates." To gain these results, the cost to the Society has been about $65,000; a part of which is already returning in donations from the assisted churches.

Meanwhile, over all parts of the 54,000 square miles of this noble state, there is a simultaneous incoming of people. The 14 additional ministers who have gone in during the year, are not enough; twenty more, at least, ought to be added without delay. For, while the older counties are forming more compact settlements and subdividing the larger missionary fields; while the mining region is calling still for additional helpers; while the crowds of emigrants are outrunning the government surveys, and pre-occupying the tracts which skirt the chain of waters from the Wisconsin to Green Bay,—there is still a vast region in the North West, where the scattered lumbermen are rapidly condensing into settlements amid the forests of the Pinery, and adjacent to the region of the St. Croix. Towards these, and similar openings of urgency and promise, we turn with deep concern, and exclaim, "Whom shall we send, and who will go for us?"

Iowa.

During the past year six additional missionaries have been commissioned in this State, making the number under appointment forty one. Six fields of labor, formerly aided by this Society, now sustain the ministry from their own resources. The pastoral relation has been established in eleven cases. Within the year two church edifices have been completed; and one congregation has erected a house to serve both for public worship and for a school. The whole number of church buildings belonging to those acting with this Society is 25; and five others are in the process of construction.

The amount pledged by the beneficiary churches towards sustaining the preaching of the Gospel exhibits a steady increase, notwithstanding their losses by migration to California; and they have also during the year given some $1,500 to various purposes of benevolence.

But the crowning mercy which it is our grateful duty to record, is the bestowment of converting grace in unwonted measures. About one fourth of the churches have been thus cheered and strengthened, and the number of souls gathered to the people of God will about equal a tenth of all the previous members of the churches. New life has been infused into the feeble; ministers who were ready to faint under their burdens and whose hearts were sick with hope deferred, now thank God and take courage to press on.

During the year, the Society's Agent, Rev. JULIUS A. REED, has made extensive explorations of the remoter counties of his field, including the portions lying on the Missouri River, in the vicinity of Council Bluffs. The leading particulars of this tour have already been laid before the public. It is needful to recur to them here, only as disclosing the vast amount of yet unattempted work, which the Society has yet to perform. Of the 50 or 55 counties which are settled, so far at least as to demand spiritual culture, only 25 have resident missionaries, and but 4 or 5 others are touched even at a single point by the regular services of one of our laborers. Sixteen counties are rarely, if at all, visited by them; eight are now in exceeding need of ministers; and in five already partially occupied, additional supplies are demanded by the increase of the people. An adequate scope of effort for four or five evangelical German missionaries would be afforded among the settlements in those new counties. Indeed, when we see the sweeping current of emigration moving on with equal steadiness and strength, whether the Church wakes to her duty or slumbers at her post; when the sickening apprehension comes upon us, that possibly we may fail, after all, to meet the moral exigencies of those wide and beautiful frontiers—remembering, too, that if we do not occupy them at once the enemy will—we feel that the word of one of England's master spirits was scarcely too strong, "One half of your male members should become ministers, while it should be the chief business of the other half to support them!"

Oregon.

No additional laborers have been commissioned for this field during the year. The two already there have prosecuted their work with encouraging success.

Rev. Horace Lyman is stationed at Portland, which is situated at the head of ship navigation on the Willamette. This village, which contained, one year ago, but a few scattered houses, has now a population of about 1,000, and promises to become one of the most important business locations in the Territory. A house of worship is nearly completed, the expense of which has been chiefly met by the citizens of the place. At the time of Mr. Lyman's arrival, Oregon was nearly depopulated by emigration to the mines of California. In consequence of the scarcity and high price of labor, he was compelled to work with his own hands, till his health became impaired, and his labors were interrupted. In February, another severe attack brought him to the brink of the grave. At the last advices he was slowly recovering.

Rev. George H. Atkinson continues his labors at Oregon City. A church edifice has been erected at an expense of $3,550, and the truth has produced a manifest effect in checking prevalent vices, and elevating the tone of public sentiment in regard to all the interests of education, morals and religion.

These brethren apply in the most earnest terms for a reinforcement of missionary laborers. The Committee fully accord with their views and hope soon to be enabled to respond to their appeal.

A new era in the history of this Territory is at hand. The reflux of the tide which was set in motion by the discovery of gold in California, has commenced. Multitudes, too, who were attracted to the mines from the Eastern States, but failed to realize their golden visions, are seeking to repair their health and fortunes in Oregon. There will also be a rapid increase of population by direct immigration from the East. A recent act of Congress provides for the removal of the Indians from the country west of the Cascade Mountains; and another makes liberal grants of land to actual settlers. The missionaries confirm the accounts received from other sources, that the country presents a rare combination of natural advantages, which must attract attention and immigration. These ancient solitudes are at length to be peopled. Already an industrious and thriving population is overspreading these beautiful prairies. Along the river courses, and around the waterfalls, bustling villages are springing up, and will rapidly expand into populous cities. The importance of supplying them early with the means of grace can hardly be overstated. If the institutions planted two centuries ago on our shores, are to be transplanted on the shores of the Pacific, the seed must be scattered there, as it was here, before the enemy shall sow tares. To this work Providence now calls us.

California.

The Society has four missionaries now laboring in this State. Rev. John W. Douglas, who, at the date of the last Report, was stationed at San José, resigned his charge in August and performed an extensive tour of exploration in the Southern mines. He has since been laboring at Los Angeles, but has received no aid during the year from the treasury of the Society.

Rev. Samuel H. Willey commenced his labors two years ago at Monterey, then the Capital of the Territory. In consequence of the removal of the seat of Government, and the emigration of a large part of the American population, the place lost its relative importance as a field of missionary labor. In accordance with the views of his brethren, Mr. Willey transferred his residence to Happy Valley, the southern portion of San Francisco. During the autumn, his labors were suspended for three months, in consequence of sickness. Since that time they have been prosecuted with much success. A house of worship has been erected, and a church and Sabbath school organized. Mr. Willey expects that before the close of the present year, the congregation will assume his entire support.

Rev. Isaac H. Brayton arrived in California in July, and took charge of the congregation gathered by Mr. Douglas at San José. A house of worship has since been erected which was dedicated in February last. In consequence of the depression of business and the removal of the seat of Government to Vallejo, the outward prosperity of the congregation has suffered a temporary check, and Mr. Brayton has drawn upon the treasury of the Society for a portion of his support. He expects to be sustained hereafter by the people to whom he ministers.

Rev. William W. Brier, whose departure for California was announced in the last Report, arrived at San Francisco August 8th, and in the following month commenced his labors at Marysville. This city is situated at the junction of the Yuba and Feather rivers, forty five miles north of Sacramento City; and, though but about one year old, contains 2,000 inhabitants. A church and Sabbath school have been organized, and measures are in progress for the erection of a house of worship. Large and attentive congregations listen to the preaching of the word, and already a very striking change has been effected in the moral aspect of the community. Mr. Brier now derives his entire support from his people.

Rev. James H. Warren, from Dubuque, Iowa, an alumnus of the Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., with Mrs. Warren, arrived in California in October. He has since been engaged in ministering to the 1st Congregational church in San Francisco in the absence of the Pastor, Rev. T. D. Hunt. He was expected, on the return of Mr. Hunt—which has already taken place—to turn his attention to Sonoma and Napa Valleys on the northern side of the Bay of San Francisco, where there are several growing settlements composed chiefly of American families.

The changes which the past year has wrought in the condition of Californian society, have been mostly favorable to missionary operations. The tide of population, hitherto borne as by a whirlwind to the ravines of the Sierra, is now returning and spreading itself in natural channels over the country; and the various branches of industry are beginning to receive their appropriate attention and reward. Multitudes, finding in the rich mold of the valleys the treasures which the river beds of the mountains denied them, are gathering their families, establishing schools, and arranging all the elements of well ordered society. The friends of religion, thus brought into permanent relations to each other, are enabled to co-operate more and more in evangelical effort; and the missionaries are exerting no inconsiderable influence in determining the forms which these chaotic elements shall assume. But the laborers are few. In earnest tones they ask for men to occupy the destitute and inviting fields that are multiplying around them. The Committee will gladly respond to these appeals according to the means placed at their disposal. They regard the responsibility of the churches in reference to California, as one of no ordinary character. Overleaping the period of her minority, and starting in her career, Minerva-like, a full-grown State, she cannot wait to be supplied with the Gospel by tardy movements. The seed time is now; and rarely has the church of Christ scattered the seed of the kingdom on a soil promising so speedy and abundant harvests. Such various, yet active and forceful elements were, perhaps, never combined in any other community. Let them be assimilated and controlled by the power of christian institutions; let all this talent and energy and enterprize become tributary to the cause of Christ, and from that Golden Gate shall go forth influences which shall bless not only the nations that line that coast, but the thousand Islands of the Pacific, and the dark Continent beyond.

CONCLUSION.

In closing this record of the labors of another year, the Committee would erect their memorial of gratitude to God, who has crowned the year with his goodness. In the spared lives of the officers of the Society, and so many of its missionaries—in the continued interest manifested by the churches in its plans and objects—and in the plenteous effusions of the Spirit upon a large number of missionary fields, we recognize the tokens of divine favor which call for our grateful acknowledgment, and which are earnest of future good. These impressions are deepened when we extend this review over the quarter of a century which has elapsed since this Society was organized. It has been a brief but eventful period. How great and manifold the changes it has wrought. How has the field of our operations widened, and our work increased. Seven new States, covering a vast territory then scarcely reached by the adventurous pioneer, have been added to our confederacy. Our frontier has retreated from the banks of the Ohio to the shores of the Pacific. Our population has increased from 11,000,000 to 23,000,000. In wealth, in power, in all the elements of national importance, our progress has been such as has no parallel in history; and the work appropriate to this Society has increased in like proportion. To diffuse the light and blessings of the Gospel over this expanding domain—to bring these multiplying millions of our population under the influence of christian institutions, and thus train them to be a generation for God's praise—this has been the work entrusted to our hands. That it has been performed to the full measure of the means afforded, is more perhaps than we ought to claim. Yet when we survey the wide fields where it has bestowed its culture and gathered its abundant harvests—when we reflect to what furnishing multitudes in the forests and on the prairies of the West it has distributed the bread of life—when we call to mind the 3,000 feeble churches nurtured under its care, and the 107,000 members gathered into them—when we trace the fountains of holy influence it has opened, expanding in their course into streams which make glad the city of our God, we rejoice, yea, and we will rejoice, that with means so feeble he has achieved results so vast.

We enter upon another quarter of a century under cheering auspices, yet under accumulating responsibilities. Unless God shall blight this nation with his judgments, and thus arrest its career, its history for the next twenty five years must be fraught with an interest pertaining to the progress of no other nation. The wars and revolutions which shall convulse the kingdoms of the old world will be matters of trivial moment, compared with the peaceful but majestic march of a free Christian empire over a vast continent. But commensurate with the progress of the country in extent and importance, is the responsibility of the church in regard to its evangelization. While in the older states she must "be watchful, and strengthen the things that remain, that are ready to die," she must also go forth "bearing precious seed," with the advancing tide of emigration as it rolls towards the setting sun. In the vast central valley, which is henceforth to hold the scepter of this continent, and on the shores of the Pacific, where a nation has been born in a day, a work is to be done for Christ—and done by the present generation—such as God has entrusted to no other people. To this work let us gird ourselves anew in the strength and with the spirit of our glorious Leader. Let the past tokens of his favor encourage us, his promises inspire us, his love constrain us to prosecute this enterprise with increasing ardor, and on a more extended scale. As we survey the present spiritual destitutions, and anticipate the future advancement and glory of our country, let the Prophet's spirit of mingled piety and patriotism impel us to adopt his noble purpose, "FOR ZION'S SAKE WILL I NOT HOLD MY PEACE, AND FOR JERUSALEM'S SAKE I WILL NOT REST, UNTIL THE RIGHTEOUSNESS THEREOF GO FORTH AS BRIGHTNESS, AND THE SALVATION THEREOF AS A LAMP THAT BURNETH."

IOWA.

*From Rev. D. B. Nichols, Warren,
Iowa.*

Time reminds me of the duty I owe to the Committee of the H. M. Society, to give to them an account of my labors in this field, for the third quarter of the current year. The third quarter of my missionary year was one of no ordinary interest. For a number of weeks there has been more than common attention to the preached word. About New Years', this attention seemed to be greatly deepened; some individuals were noticed at meeting who had for weeks, yea, for months, absented themselves from the worship of God on the Sabbath. In one of the neighborhoods where I have been accustomed to preach for the last two years, I noticed upon the Sabbath evening preceding the New Year, that quite a full house were in attendance. I had not advanced far with the religious services of the evening, before there were the most undeniable indications of the work of the Divine Spirit. The truth seemed to sink into the heart. Deep seriousness pervaded the congregation; now and then the emotion could be discerned by the deep drawn sigh, or the tearful countenance. The meeting closed; and I felt that the finger of Divine Providence clearly pointed to the propriety of making a special effort for the salvation of sinners in this neighborhood. I accordingly announced that I would preach upon the first evening of the New Year. Quite a number were in attendance. The seriousness seemed to increase. I called upon those who were anxious about their souls, to manifest it; there were six young people that answered to the call. I thought the indications sufficiently favorable to give another appointment upon the next Friday night. Upon this night, also, the interest seemed not in the least to subside. The number of inquirers increased. Brother G. came over this evening. We both thought the interest sufficient to justify preaching again on Sunday night.

On Saturday we left for our other appointment, four miles distant. Some feeling among the people of God. We had a refreshing time also upon the Sabbath, as we came around the table to commemorate the dying love of the Saviour. We had an addition of two by letter. Thus, you see, the Lord is remembering our feebleness. In the evening we returned again to the neighborhood before spoken of; a crowded house and deep seriousness were the visible tokens. We spent Monday in religious conversation and prayer, as we visited from house to house. We found that the impenitent had had their attention called to the subject of consecrating themselves to God. But a part of this community seemed to view our operations with a jealous eye. You may judge of this by a simple incident. Brother G. announced that we would visit in a certain part of the neighborhood, specifying at the same time the object of the visits; but for all this, some seemed to think that there was some unseen object that lay concealed under the declared one—that we were either going to make an effort to bring them over to the Congregational faith; or that we wished to collect some money of them. We had appointed a meeting for those who were anxious, but a few attended, because of the fear that they did not know our object.

We plainly saw that our way was effectively closed up here, to do them good, until this prejudice could be removed. We accordingly concluded to make our immediate efforts for the salvation of sinners in the neighborhood of our church. Our infant church has participated largely in the benefits flowing from this season of grace. The church seems to have taken a more elevated position before the world. The tone of their piety seems greatly improved. My prayer to God is, that it may be of a lasting character.

THE SOUTH WEST.

Prejudices—Distracted Meetings.

Descriptions of the nature of the following may be regarded as not in the best taste; but as they are sad—if not sober—realities, which the missionary has to encounter in certain sections, they who undertake to sustain him by their sympathy and prayers, ought to know how it fares with him and his message, and what obstacles have to be overcome.

The mass of the people are made to believe that the Presbyterians think themselves above them, and hence they treat us much after the same manner as they do most of the modern improvements in agriculture and mechanics. They go to hear the "larned" preacher, and to see the new-fashioned plow, and the deep furrows which it makes; and then they return home, and partly from sloth, and partly from envy, cling the tighter to the old rickety plow, and to the see-saw, hum and spit preacher, feeling that improvements are for others. They seem glad enough to hear Presbyterian preaching, provided it costs them nothing; but when it comes to "jinin" the church, why, to-be-sure, that must take place at a "big meeting," where there is a great deal of shouting and "hallelujah singing a going on." And then to see the way they "get religion," as they call it! After a passionate appeal, (which is evidently intended to reach the weaker part of the congregation first,) about departed friends, and a vindication of shouting, the mourners are called for. And then the singing and shouting commences, and the mourners are brought in, and required to kneel down. In this, often painful position, they are sometimes kept for hours at a time, until wearied out, they sink down and stretch themselves upon the floor. This is considered a favorable symptom, and the news circulates throughout the country, that "they have got Mr. — and Mrs. —, and Miss — down." After a while, through suffocation and exhaustion, a profuse sweat breaks out upon them, and they are made to feel as they "never felt before." This, they conclude, is the "witness of the Spirit," and then, as it is expected, they relieve themselves from their procumbent situation, by springing upon their feet, and hopping about, and clapping their hands, and screaming out with loud percussive emphasis, "Glory, glory, glory, hallelujah, I've got it, I've got it," &c., and then all say that such a one "has got religion," and then there is a great deal of religious laughing, and shaking of hands, &c., &c. It is painful to write of these things, much more to be compelled to witness and endure them. It became quite fashionable for the zealots at these meetings to see God and their departed friends in glory. Specifications, too painfully absurd and offensive to relate, might be given in abundance.

The error which sustains all this bodily excitement, is that there is a merit in it, and that God is made propitious thereby. We have many better informed people among us, and I still live in hope that there is a better day a coming.

Tranquil Triumph in Death.

Mrs. F. has died of consumption. When she had evidently gone some distance into the river of death, just at the time when, if death be an eternal sleep, we should have looked to see her sink into darkness and silence, suddenly she seemed to catch a glimpse of the gold-lit summits of the promised land. A heavenly radiance now rested upon her pale countenance, and in a low, soft whisper she said, "Glory, glory, glory!" After a little she repeated "glory," twice, and her spirit took its flight to that mansion prepared for it, in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

The spectators of this triumphant scene felt as if they had been privileged to behold a dying saint, while she was looking into the glories of the celestial city. It was as if one had been sent to them from the other world, and the impression made upon them was of a very solemn, and it is to be hoped, lasting character.

Thus have death and removals continued to thin our ranks as fast as they are recruited.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. W. E. Holyoke, Farmington, Fulton Co.

Support Assumed.

The number of members uniting in the formation of this church, a year ago, was twenty three. We have since that time held four communion seasons, at every one of which some persons have united either by profession or letter; so that at the present time the church numbers forty five, besides one lately dismissed. We have a Sabbath school of about fifty scholars, and a library of something more than 400 volumes.

The Sons of Temperance had an order here until recently, but it is now abandoned, and there is no active temperance society now here, from the fact that all are temperance men, and do not feel the need of it. I believe there is no ardent spirit sold in the town but at the druggists'.

I have now to announce that the church have lately assumed the entire support of their minister; so that, with many thanks to God and your society, I may relinquish my commission, and inform you we shall need no further aid.

Our new brick church edifice, 37 by 67 feet, is going steadily on, and we hope it will be completed early in the summer. The review of the year to the church is full of hope, and as an ex-member of our State Assembly said, "its prospects now, compared with what they were two years ago, are as noonday to midnight." And I cannot but hope myself, that the foundation for great future good has already been laid; and that the year '51 will not close without a harvest of souls.

From Rev. L. P. Estjorn, Andover, Henry Co.

First year of the Mission to the Swedes.

The church to which Mr. E. ministers, have taken positions on the leading points of christian doctrine and church fellowship, which bring them into intimate sympathy and cooperation with their Congregational and Presbyterian brethren. The Spirit of the Lord appears already to bless their infant organization. We cannot but think great good has resulted from the lively interest for their welfare shown by the neighboring ministers and churches; and that a similar readiness to extend a fraternal and helping hand to groups of foreigners coming among us, would often win them to the adoption of better opinions and customs than might otherwise obtain among them.

When I now look back upon the past year, I rejoice in the Lord, whose grace has been with us. The aspects were not altogether encouraging a year ago, when I began to labor among a poor population of wandering emigrants, many of whom were compelled to go around to work for other people—a population, too, that were unacquainted with the language, customs, religious peculiarities, &c., of this country. But I trusted God would help his poor servant—and my face has not been ashamed. By the christian zeal and liberality of your Society, I have been enabled to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, instruct in the Sabbath school, &c. God has blessed his word by the power of his Holy Spirit, so that one after another have felt their sins, believed in Christ and taken his reproach upon themselves; although we have had to struggle with many hindrances.

At the last communion season here, we had five public professions, and at the former one, nine; and the whole number of communicants in our church is forty six. This summer several multitudes of our countrymen have arrived, and my home has from time to time been crowded by poor shelterless people, that often were sick, and in need of all kinds of help. Two weeks ago between fifty and sixty arrived, of whom I have now sixteen in my house, where a small school also is kept up by one of my sons. It is easy to understand what labor and toil such things will give, not only to me, but to my feeble wife, who very often feels entirely tired out by administering medicines, and numberless other services, in addition to her daily labors.

I have regularly preached here, and at Galesburg, and sometimes at Henderson, Berlin, Rock Island, and Moline, and in all places God has more or less blessed his word. A small church will soon be organized at Henderson, and branches of our Andover church are located in Berlin and Moline. We have not this year been blessed with what properly would be called a revival, but still the Spirit evidently has worked repentance and faith, and strengthened the believers to go on in the narrow way. Had not the Home Missionary Society helped us, this mass of immigrants, and their children, would have grown up in the dark ignorance of the natural heart. But now they have been more or less influenced by the power of the Gospel. I therefore give my most humble thanks to the Committee for the aid of the preceding year, and dare to beg them to help us a year more.

Every contributor to the Society must rejoice in the privilege of having had some share in the ministration of assistance to these strangers. We earnestly bespeak for all settlements of foreigners scattered through our country, and especially in the West, the kind attention of neighboring ministers and churches. Let pains be taken to inquire into their spiritual condition, and to procure for them suitable instruction in divine things. Several instances of great good resulting from such a course have come to our knowledge.

MICHIGAN.

The Devolution of Unholy Fires.

A missionary thus feelingly laments the irreparable injury done on his field by fanaticism and contention.

It is astonishing to mark the evils of injudicious conduct here, in those professing to preach the Gospel. Most of the present generation will, in all probability, perish forever, in consequence. They have been imposed upon, and they now impose upon themselves. The rubbish must be removed before we can build. How slow the process; how laborious the task! God must help, or multitudes must perish. Romanism, bad as it is, is not our chief danger in our new settlements. The fires of fanaticism and sectarianism, that burn over those parts of the country where there is nothing to hinder, is more destructive to religious principle, and more corrupting to society than can be conceived without personal observation. Oh, if the ministers and churches of our land, who sustain your Society, could see what I have seen, and feel what I have felt, they would thrust their missionaries and their money upon the advancing wave of population as it foams towards the setting sun. A few years' delay, and how many must perish; what mountains of difficulty must be removed or overcome. The mass of the community in this county can be won by no kindness, induced by no courtesy, and awakened by no considerations to attend on the means of grace. They are not gospel-hardened, but worse; they have, multitudes of them, received and rejected another gospel, which is not the Gospel, and stupidity, presumption, and fanaticism now characterize their conduct. They have no Sabbath in their year, and no fear of God before their eyes. In these circumstances our hope is principally with the young, and these it is most difficult to reach, in by far the greatest number of cases.

Evils of waiting too long.

These societies are now sensible of what was their principal mistake. It was waiting to be stronger when they were actually growing weaker every year of delay. Now the very materials with which they might have built, are corrupted and destroyed, and still they are in the way of other materials, and can be displaced or assimilated only by the most laborious process, and the greatest prudence. Nor is this all. They exert a depressing and discouraging influence over too many who profess to be Christians. These difficulties might be avoided were the children of light as wise in their arrangements as the men of this world. There is only one redeeming consideration, and that is—the perfect illustration that is given of the power of truth, and the value of permanent religious influences. This has been a mighty encouragement to me, while it has increased a hundredfold my attachment to those principles and institutions that the American Home Missionary Society is laboring to establish.

From Rev. E. P. Marvin, Coldwater, Branch Co.

The Church edified.

Here is another grateful evidence of good accomplished, which we hand over to our patrons as a reward of their patient continuance in giving and praying for the upbuilding of the waste places of Zion.

During the two years in which I have received your indispensable aid, this church has been very greatly built up of the Lord. Seventy two have been added to what was before a feeble church. The congregation has been doubled, and I have every reason to believe the advancement has been of a permanent and healthful character, and consequently only the beginning of growth in grace, in numbers and prosperity.

Resolved to go alone.

The Society held its annual meeting last evening, and seemed greatly encouraged, and fully resolved, by the grace of God, not only to support the means of grace without further aid, but also to contribute liberally to the support of your beloved society in future years.

In taking leave of your society, we feel that we must not only throw aside our leading strings, but also go forward and manifest our sincere gratitude and love to you, by our contributions, and repay you by aiding you to render to other feeble churches that aid which has so greatly blest and built us up.

My society are kind to me, prompt in my support, and give good proof of being in deed and in truth a church of the Lord Jesus.

May the Lord prosper you and the churches and ministers under your patronage, so that, in the blessed day coming, millions of sanctified ones shall rise up, clothed in white, with the harps of God in their hands, to call you and your patrons blessed. O! that will be a glorious day, when we all meet to renew and perfect our acquaintance, and to recount our toils.

Miscellaneous.

Papal Countries in America—Why are they shunned by European Immigrants?

President Herrera, on retiring from his office, as the Chief Magistrate of Mexico, issued a farewell message, in which he spoke of the vast undeveloped resources of that country, and dwelt on the desirableness of immigrations from Europe, to enrich the nation by bringing them forth. He desires to see the tide of emigration turned from the United States to Mexico. Vain wish. And why so? The undeveloped resources of Mexico are as great as he would represent. Her mines, and her tropical climate and fruits, one would think, might draw thither the tide which flows in upon us.

But there is a grand repellant there. There is no freedom secured for conscience or persons by Mexican institutions. Mind is stagnant, industry has no spring, commerce has no encouragement, life has no security, and little value. And all this springs from a single cause—the ROMISH RELIGION. In Mexico, Romanism exists in its purity—that is, without a limit to its corruptions. Without let or hindrance, it has done just what it has desired to do. It has made just such a people as it would make anywhere else where it should work without restraints. And what is true of Mexico, is true of the whole of Spanish America. The sun never shone on better land than those Spanish colonies have overrun. They have been delivered from European despotism, and have acquired the name of republics. And they are in fact, as much republics as they can be, under the dark dominion of a Romish priesthood. Yet they are the last places to which European emigrants would go.

It is a remarkable fact, that even the Romish emigrants, prefer a Protestant country. In avoiding those delightful gardens under tropical suns, where the very perfection of Romanism exists, they show that they are unwilling to eat the fruit of their own ways, and to be filled with their own devices. In other words, Romanism so curses the ground—sends such a blight and desolation over it, that the throngs of men fleeing from the desolations which it has made in the land of their birth, are very sure to avoid the other lands which it is desolating, and seek a home where the genius of Protestantism—where the great antagonist to this curse of nations is at work.

Here is a fact, that one would think might open the eyes of even the Romanists themselves. One would think that they must be convinced, that a religion that profits no one but its priests, and carries a blight to the main secular interests of men, cannot be from God—cannot be that religion which its authors declared to have the promise of the life that now is; and that which is to come—cannot tend to elevate men to heaven unless it be needful to make a purgatory of this earth, in which to qualify men for heaven by tortures and consuming fires. If Romanism could everywhere have its way, and without hindrance curse the human race in every form that it could, its dream of a purgatory under ground would be realized above ground.—Puritan Rec.

Characteristic of an Earnest Ministry.

“One thing I do.”—Phil. 3: 13.

The minister for the times is a single minded man. He has settled the matter fully and for ever, that oneness of pursuit is indispensable to distinguished success in any important enterprise. Salvation is his one sublime purpose, as it was the purpose of his great Master. Here is the goal toward which all his energies tend. He takes no step, touches no book, holds no conversation, writes no line, indulges no recreation inconsistent with this all controlling point. A hundred things which many good men and many ministers allow in themselves, this minister cuts off entirely. His meditations are upon the things of his ministry. He gives himself wholly to them, and continues in them.—He determines not to know anything among the people save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. His eye looks right on, and his eyelids straight before him. Each book, essay, conversation, anecdote; each providence, prosperous or adverse; all heaven, earth and hell, are laid under contribution for the effecting of his object.—He is a man of one work—comprehensively of one book, one thought, one wish. True, he has various accomplishments, and acts amid varied scenes and in varied capacities; still his mind wavers not—the “mark” is before him, and fills his eye, while he presses toward it evermore.

Christ came into the world to save sinners. Paul made every innocent compliance, that he might by all means, save some. Mills determined that he would savingly influence the world. Martyn ran after the glory of God in the salvation of sinners. Wesley girded himself for a universal revival of religion. This, exactly this, is the genius of the minister for the times. Perhaps never were there greater allurements presented to the minds of ministers, to tempt them to a division of affection and pursuit. Abundant libraries, attractive lectures, literary and theological discussions, ingenious theories, fascinating circles, honorable appointments, flattering commendations—these, and the like, combined with native downward tendencies, are far too prone to cloud the spiritual vision, and induce the minister to forget the one great purpose of his mission. There is wanting now a race of ministers of singleness of soul, of one indomitable purpose, living and running for salvation only; in whose minds all else, whether in the literary, social or physical world, is as the dust of the balance. This is the greatest want of the world. Greater talents are not needed. Learning, there is an abundance of it. Theologians, writers, scholars, are not lacking. A concentration is demanded, of energies already in the ministry, to the one great pursuit—the salvation of the race.

Man of God, what now! A sinner is about to perish forever. Christ has found a ransom. He commissions you to publish it to that sinner, that he may be saved. Shall anything hinder? Shall aught else come into mind?—Genesee Evang.

A teacher's knowledge, and a Saviour's love.

The New Census.

ALTHOUGH the returns of the late Census are not yet revised and prepared for final publication, and the tables which have recently appeared differ slightly from each other, yet for all practical purposes we have the leading results sufficiently exact. No future corrections can be expected to affect the deductions made from them.

Two years ago (May, 1849,) we published some speculations concerning the results of this census, predicated on the supposition that the ratio of increase from 1840 to 1850 would be only 32.67 per cent.—the same as between 1830 and 1840. But instead of this, the actual ratio for the last ten years has been 36.8; so that instead of the estimated population of twenty two and a quarter millions, we have 23,347,884. We now propose to derive from the actual census some conclusions under the following heads, similar to those which were previously drawn from the estimated population.

1. Comparative Increase of the East and the West.

	1840.	1850.	Increase.
Atlantic States,	10,641,882	13,289,984	2,648,100
States West of the East line of Ohio, }	6,376,972	9,752,326	}
Ky., Ten., and Al., }		305,574
Add for Pacific States,
		10,057,902	3,680,930

From this it appears, that while the increase of population has been, in the East, at the rate of 19.7 per cent. in ten years, the rate has been in the West, 52.7 per cent.; and if we include the present population of the Pacific States and New-Mexico, the rate of increase in the West is 57.7 per cent. in the last ten years. If we include one third of Pennsylvania and Virginia as belonging to the Great Western Valley, the population of the East becomes 11,135,731; while that of the West is 11,212,154, i. e. the latter has a majority of 76,000 souls.

2. Distribution of Political Power.

By act of Congress, passed May 23d, 1850, it is ordained that the number of representatives in Congress shall hereafter be fixed at 283. The ratio of representation, then, is obtained by dividing the "aggregate of representative population" (viz.: free persons except Indians not taxed, and three fifths of all other persons,) by the number 233; and the quotient of such division is the ratio—i.e. is the number of people entitled to one representative. In applying this ratio to the several States, there must of course be a loss of several members by means of fractions; and this loss is to be made up by assigning members to those States having the largest fractions. The “representative population,” according to the new census, is 21,832,521. Fifteen members are representatives of fractions, and will be distributed, probably, as follows; viz., one each to Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Missouri, Texas. The East and the West will then compare as follows:

The Atlantic States will send	134
Deduct representatives of Western Virginia and Pennsylvania, . . .	13
Total from the East,	121
The Western States will send	99
Add representatives of Western Virginia and Pennsylvania, . . .	13
	112
Besides these, there are the delegates from Minnesota, Utah, New Mexico and Oregon, who have no right to vote,	4

So nearly balanced is the representative influence of these two great sections of our country.

What follows from these facts.

The bearing of such facts as the foregoing, has frequently been pointed out, while yet the facts themselves lay in the uncertain future. But now, they have arrived—they are existing history. The day has come, when the numerical and political control of the country is no longer, unquestioned, in the hands of that portion of the people who live amid well rooted and flourishing institutions, surrounded by churches and pastors and all the ripe and healthful organizations of settled society, such as schools, colleges and the prompt and efficient administration of law. The sceptre is passing away into the hands of a people strong in their impulses, conscious of their rapidly growing strength, and ambitious of using it; they are a people, too, comparatively undirected and unrestrained by the influence of institutions of religion and education. With them, the noisy sectarian and the radical demagogue have equal chance for a hearing and an influence with those who represent the learning and experience of ages. Into such hands are about to be entrusted the control of our national destiny and influence. Do not such considerations reveal an occasion for a measure of devotedness that the American churches have never exercised?

error of the past.

The truth is, the christian community have never yet apprehended the greatness of the work committed to them, nor the urgent necessity for its early accomplishment. Many have indeed believed it to be great, but have not conceived of its immensity; they have felt that something should be done without delay, but they have not apprehended that the immediateness of this work was its most prominent and essential feature. And thus, while our christian people have annually congratulated each other on the little progress that has been made; and have gone on extending their own enterprises and multiplying their luxuries and enjoyments, the swelling surges of population have rolled on higher and farther upon the land, and broken over the mountain crest which flanked the western coast; and now pour over the vales of Oregon and California. How shall we overtake and fix in obedient subjugation to religion and law these on-rolling nations? We are already too late to do all that is needful; we should have been ten times more active in years gone by. But

What shall we do now—what can we do?

This question we desire to press upon the reader. We do not believe there is or can be any other question of equal moment before the American people. It is a question for every private Christian—since each man's zeal or apathy will have a share in the answer; it is a question for every pastor, whose teachings form the opinions and guide the efforts of his people; it is a question for every candidate for the ministry, and for instructors of youth; for all who can speak, or labor, or give, or pray. In our inmost souls we believe, that the interests at stake are so immense, and the evils to be apprehended from the comparatively slow progress of the Gospel are so great and imminent, that all christian and philanthropic men ought at once to concentrate their anxieties on this great subject; that not only should no convocation of clergymen or laymen for any philanthropic purpose be allowed to separate without doing something to deepen the general sense of its vastness, and help forward its accomplishment, but that meetings for specific consultation and action should be held, and the claims of our country and the methods of saving it should be carried home to every church and every christian closet. O that, for once, denominational jealousies and personal ends might be sunk in the absorbing enterprise of bringing the whole land under the dominion of the Gospel! Could such a result be achieved, it might safely be left to the piety and good sense of a regenerated nation to work out the problems of the best form of church organization, and for conducting christian institutions in the most effective manner! And does not He who died for the world, and who bade his Church to disciple it, require of such a people as ours—so situated, endowed and blessed—to do something far transcending what we have yet done, or are at present proposing to do?

Home Missions in the State of New York.

WESTERN AGENCY.

EARLY in the operations of the American Home Missionary Society, was the adoption of the plan of assigning specific districts of the missionary field to the oversight of Boards residing upon them, with advisory powers as to the measures to be pursued for bringing them to the speedy enjoyment of the preaching of the Gospel. Of these, the "Western Agency" was the first organized. It was the direct successor to the field and the work of the "Geneva Agency," and covers all that part of the State lying west of the eastern line of the counties of Oswego, Onondaga, Courtland, and Broome. The office of the Agency and the residence of its Secretary are at Geneva. The "TWENTY FIFTH REPORT" of this Agency has just been received, and the following copious extracts are submitted for the gratification of all the friends of Home Missions, and especially of such as remember what Western New York was, in respect to Gospel institutions, a quarter of a century since.

After stating the results of the operations of the Agency during the year ending March 1st, 1851—and which are given in our last number, p. 38—Rev. J. A. MURRAY, the Secretary, gives the following recapitulation:

"It is now 60 years since Western New York began to be settled. Most of the early settlers were from New England; and, as a body, were enterprising and intelligent. It was some years after the settlement commenced, before any Presbyterian or Congregational minister resided in this section of the state.

In 1790, the number of families was 201, and the number of inhabitants 1,047. Near this time, a Congregational church was organized at Canandaigua, of members from neighboring townships. They met once, when a minister happened to be in this part of the state, and attended on the celebration of the Lord's Supper. This is thought to be the first instance of the celebration of the Lord's Supper in Western New York.

In 1792, from Syracuse to Cayuga, on the main traveled road, there were but 3 houses; and no house from Cayuga Lake to Seneca Lake. From Geneva to Canandaigua, there were on the road but 2 families. There were occasional settlements from Canandaigua to the Genesee River; but from this River to the Niagara, 90 miles, there was not a house nor a white man to be found. "The Indians, about 6,000 in number, were settled in all the reservations made by the State; and were to be met, at every settlement, in quest of rum." The largest settlement at this date, was the one founded by JEMIMA WILKINSON, and which contained 80 families.

In 1800 the population was 39,756, and in 1810 it was 129,969.

About 1820, when its population was 317,800, efforts were made with new vigor to supply the destitute with a stated ministry. It had been demonstrated that to carry forward the work of Home Missions, with economy and advantage, funds should be applied toward the permanent support of missionaries, who were sustained, in part, by the people whom they served. It was seen that the whole amount raised by the people on this plan, really added so much to carry forward the work of Home Missions. It gave an impulse to the work, and was followed with blessed and permanent results.

The GENEVA AGENCY was appointed by the Executive Committee of the United Domestic Missionary Society, in 1822. Its total receipts from 1822 to 1826, a period of 4 years, were less than $2,000. During this period it had from 4 to 9 missionaries preaching in 6 to 13 different churches. The whole number of different ministers was 17, and of congregations aided, was 21.—It performed a good work.—In one year there were 4 houses for worship erected, and money subscribed for a fifth. Three revivals were reported, that added 50 communicants to the churches. In another year, and in a place where there was no church, one was organized with 25 members, and soon after it had increased to 57.

Of the 21 churches aided, the following 14 now sustain the Gospel without aid, viz.: Fredonia, Holly, 1st Ch. Painted Post, Parma, China, Cato, Alden, Fayette, Springville, Pembroke, Clarence, Sheridan, (formerly Pomfret,) Bethany, Jamestown.

From 1822 to 1826, the United Domestic Missionary Society, including the missionaries of the Geneva Agency, had from 11 to 31 missionaries on this field, laboring in 14 to 33 churches. The whole number of its missionaries was 46, and of different congregations aided, was 52. Of the churches aided, in addition to the 14 above mentioned, the following 22 now sustain the Gospel without missionary aid, viz.:—Elmira, 1st Pres. Church, Lockport, Moravia, Alexander, York, Candor, Sodus, Mendon, Attica, Orangeville, Clyde, Lewiston, Ogden, Westfield, Shelby, Bergen, Mount Morris, Gainesville, Nunda, Royalton, Moscow and Newark.

In 1826, when this society was changed to the American Home Missionary Society, the Geneva Agency was reorganized under the name of the WESTERN AGENCY. It was composed first of 8 members, "of whom the greater part remain unto the present, but some are fallen asleep."

Success of these efforts.

The Agency, during its 25 years' existence, has aided 336 different churches, and employed 416 different ministers. It has issued 1382 commissions, and thus secured, to churches in Western New York, 1349 years of missionary labor. During the first years of its organization, it aided nearly half the Presbyterian and Congregational ministers and churches in this part of the state. In 1828, when there were but 134 Presbyterian and Congregational pastors or stated supplies, and but 202 churches, 59 of the ministers and 71 of the churches were aided. And as church after church has been organized, they have looked to the fostering care of the Agency, and have not looked in vain.

Of the churches aided, 122, at different periods, have informed the board that they were able to sustain the Gospel without further assistance. Twenty one of these after having reached the point of self support, have been so weakened by removals, deaths, and the organization of new churches, that they have fallen back again on the arm of the Agency. Some churches once able to sustain the Gospel have, from these causes, become extinct. Perhaps 9 to 12 churches have become extinct, or lost their separate existence, by becoming united with other churches. Perhaps 12 to 13 of those, once aided, have become connected with the Old School branch of the Presbyterian church, and some of these, not from any change in their theological views, nor want of love to our Society, but having, as they judged, long been a tax on the A. H. M. S., and being offered more assistance than they supposed they could receive from that society, they changed their ecclesiastical relations, and made application to another missionary board.

This Agency, since the second year of its operations, has more than sustained all the churches applying to it for aid; and has yearly contributed to send the Gospel without its bounds. During its 25 years' existence there have been raised on this field, for the A. H. M. S., $204,490. Of this sum, $119,174 have been voted to the missionaries; showing a surplus of $85,316. Nearly one fifth of the whole receipts, and more than one third of the whole sum voted the missionaries, have been contributed by the few gentlemen composing the board of the Western Agency. In this fact the churches have had security that the sums entrusted the board would be judiciously expended.—Men giving thus largely, would not be indifferent as to the right appropriation of their donations. The surplus has probably secured some 700 years of missionary labor, in regions without our bounds; and which, added to the 1349 years above, shows that 2000 years of missionary labor have been secured, to the church of Christ, through this missionary agency.

But this is not all.—Every talent expended on this missionary field has gained other five talents beside.—It has roused up the people to support their ministers, to build suitable houses for worship, to raise money for Bible, Tract and Sabbath school operations, and to send the Gospel to a dying world. It is believed that a million of dollars has been raised in Western New York, and expended for religious purposes, at home and abroad, that would never have been raised, but for some such missionary organization as the Western Agency.

But the churches on this field have made a more noble Home Missionary offering than yet enumerated, by sending forth so many thousand christian men and women to the West; who now, in missionary districts, are laying the foundations for new religious communities, and are thus giving permanence and character to Gospel institutions.

But more than this:—Very many thousand conversions have attended the labors of our missionaries. In some years nearly a thousand conversions have been reported in the congregations aided. The great multitude converted to God, and washed in the Saviour's blood, and sanctified by the Holy Spirit, is the crowning demonstration of the usefulness of the agency.

The growth of the church, in Western New York, has been remarkable. The churches have been blessed with revivals that have honored God, and saved men. In 1800 there was scarcely a Presbyterian or Congregational church. In 1806 there were less than 12. In 1815 less than 38. In 1826 there were 191 Presbyterian churches, and 10,000 communicants. In 1836 there were 280 Presbyterian churches, and 25,000 communicants; and in 1841 there were 381 Presbyterian and Congregational churches, and 30,000 communicants. Now there are 400 Presbyterian and Congregational churches, 336 of which have been aided by this agency. There have been, it is thought, 60,000 different persons connected with the Presbyterian and Congregational churches in Western New York, half of the survivors it is supposed are now at the West, and in other parts of our land, and doing much for the evangelization of our country. Thus the kingdom of God has come, and spread in this part of the State. "As if a man should cast seed into the ground, and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how." Thus Western New York has been saved to the cause of Christ, and will send forth, in coming time, streams that will make glad the city of God, and bless a dying world. A great and wonderful work has been wrought. It has occasioned joy in heaven, and gratitude on earth. Eternity can only estimate its vast importance. We can only wonder and adore, while we praise the Eternal Spirit, who has accomplished such vast results with such simple means.

The work the A. H. M. S. has done for Western New York, is the work God calls it to perform for our whole country.—This is its mission; and with the continued blessing of God, and the confidence of the churches, it will carry forward this work to its completion. As long as there is unoccupied territory for foreigners, and for the surplus population of the older states, where land is cheap, and where a home can be easily acquired, so long the A. H. M. S. must send forth missionaries; and so long the churches, in the older states, which may be weakened by this emigration, will need the fostering care of the society.

CENTRAL AGENCY.

It is now twenty one years since this organization commenced operations on the field assigned it; during which time, notwithstanding occasional crises of pressure and anxiety, it has, by the help of God, prosecuted its work—supplying the destitute, encouraging the feeble, comforting the weary, and giving impulse to the benevolence of the churches; doing its part to accomplish the original augury of the American church, and to fulfil the destiny of our country, as a nation “reared for Christ.” Especially has it acquired for itself the honorable distinction of a “repairer of the breach, and a restorer of paths to dwell in.” Rev. R. F. CLEVELAND is the present Secretary. The following are extracts from the last Report:

Not far from two hundred feeble or destitute places within the bounds of this Agency have enjoyed its timely aid, of which about one quarter have ceased to be enrolled among its beneficiaries. Of these a considerable number have become flourishing and efficient churches, contributing largely and cheerfully to its objects; while not a few, repeatedly decimated to supply the lack of evangelical element at the West, have been held up on their way, still repaying the country at large, the benefit they have received from us; maintaining the ground which they possess, till the gradual increase at home, or the wave of emigration, setting slowly back from its ocean barrier, shall restore the equilibrium of population, and bring along with it permanence and uniformity. Others still have been preserved from spiritual detriment and extinction, till, in compliance with the changes consequent on new centres of business, they have passed into other ecclesiastical organizations, perpetuating their salutary influence in other and more effective channels. Meanwhile, it has proved a bond of union and mutual dependence among the churches and ecclesiastical bodies, at whose instance it was established, gaining gradually upon their confidence, attachment, and support. On the whole, we are bound, humbly and gratefully, to acknowledge, “hitherto hath the Lord helped us.”

After the statistical details of the year just closed—and which are substantially contained in the Home Missionary for June, p. 37—the document from which these extracts are made goes on to speak of the General aspects of the Home Missionary cause.

Meanwhile, the number is increasing who cherish the interests of Home Missions, with an enlightened, principled, steady and growing zeal. The ecclesiastical bodies in co-operation with this Board, are assuming a more responsible and efficient part in its labors, especially by promoting system in the contribution of funds, and recommending suitable fields for missionary effort within their own bounds. Many pastors on this field, and some whose inadequate support occasions them continual embarrassment, forget themselves in their zeal for Zion's prosperity. They evince a devotedness to the cause of christian benevolence which leaves no room to doubt, that if all the nominal friends of Zion were actuated by a similar spirit, the time of the Church's enlargement would draw rapidly near. These tokens of single-heartedness, wherever they exist, we would cherish with grateful recognition, as evidence that the element of christian charity still abides, and as the pledge that it shall yet burst through the incumbent load of covetousness, and start up to its natural and mature proportions.

Characteristics of Central New York as a Home Missionary field.

The ground occupied by this Agency has been for years past, and may be for years to come, a half way house for travellers from the East: a seed plot and recruiting post, furnishing the constituents of future society in the West. The soil which furnishes them, must not in the meantime lie waste for want of culture. The churches which supply numerous and effective men, for the battle of our nation's high destiny, must not be allowed to suffer extinction themselves. Their effectiveness, on the large scale of the common cause, ought to secure for them, when needed, the annual pension, on which their continued usefulness depends.

Churches contributing members and missionaries.

In support of these considerations, from many similar examples, we quote the following:

"The pastor of the church in East S., is a son of one of the early settlers and church members. Since its organization it has furnished not far from a hundred members for churches at the West, and a still greater number from the community, whose characters had been formed under its influence. Six young men from that church have entered the ministry, four of whom are now laboring at the West.

The church in West S., has dismissed, since its organization, twenty eight years ago, about thirty members, on their removal to the West. Probably more than twice that number have gone there from the community within the limits of that church, and in a great measure, under its influence. Five young men hopefully converted under that influence have entered the ministry. Three of these, who commenced their course of preparation while connected with that church, are now laboring at the West. During the last two years, one family in the same church, has sent four young persons, educated and professedly pious, to the West as teachers. That church has received probably eight hundred dollars in all from the H. M. Society."

Who will not exult in such results of Home Missionary appropriations, and bless God for the opportunity of aiding churches, which have not only repaid the money they have received, with abundant interest, but have scattered far and wide, such treasures as surpass all human valuation.

Churches springing up in new localities.

There is another view, however, to be taken of the field before us. New locations of business are forming, and new churches are about to spring up and claim our attention. The sources of industrial value, in the counties hitherto unexplored, the centres and channels of commerce, the development of the material and the demand, as well as the advantages for manufacturing, and the investments of capital in productive and permanent institutions, multiplying every year, are calling into existence new depots of commerce and population, and will create a fresh demand upon our contributions, with the promise, however, of an early re-imbursement and a reliable co-operation.

This remark applies to more than one half of the entire district comprised within the limits of this Agency. The counties of St. Lawrence, Franklin, Hamilton, Clinton, and Warren, represent a region which has remained in all but primitive seclusion; while emigration from the East has passed by and around it. It exhibits few of the attractions which draw agricultural adventurers toward the fertile prairies of the West. Yet its rocks and streams, its forests and minerals, furnish the material, and the productive agencies of a commerce, without which no branch of industry can permanently prosper. Attention has of late been drawn to this tract from various quarters, and for various reasons; and already have important and promising locations for missionary effort been suggested for the consideration of the board.

Of St. Lawrence Co., which may be regarded as a favorable specimen of the district to which we refer, the Rev. Mr. T. writes: "Civilization is urging its way into the wild and picturesque regions, from which issue the St. Regis, the Racket, the De Gras, and the Oswegatchie. Travel cross roads in the newest settlements, and you will find men living, and thriving too, where a Westerner would hardly think of keeping a flock of mountain goats.

"The process of settlement and civilization will, no doubt, in future be more decidedly onward. The county has immense resources in lumber and iron, which have been but very partially developed. Its noble rivers afford mill sites and water power sufficient to accommodate and propel all the machinery in New England. We already have a large population, with flattering prospects of a rapid increase.

"In some of the towns, nearly all the first settlers were from Vermont. The county is characterized by New England patience, economy, industry, enterprise and thrift. And the fact, that in addition to our district schools, some of which are of a high order, we sustain four flourishing academies perennially, and numerous select schools during the season of autumn and winter, proves, I think, that we have some New England intelligence."

Another New England.

Thus have we, embosomed in the midst of the Empire State, a new and fresh field for the vigorous exertion of Home Missionary effort, untrodden and wild as the newest territories of the West; and in it the promise of another New England, supplying nerve and sinew to the social and religious character of our state, perpetuating and disseminating its pristine energy to future generations, and over the whole continent.

Our great Mission.

But no view of the work ought more to incite and encourage us, than the part we are called to take in the evangelization of our whole country. When our fathers, of divers tongue and blood, forsook their country and their homes, for their greater love of God's truth, and the freedom and purity of religion, Divine Providence endorsed their proclamation, and succored their lofty endeavors. We behold as the consequence a great nation, and growing beyond all modern parallel, and advancing rapidly to the realization of an idea, greater, it is presumed, than ever possessed the minds of its pious founders. With an admirable aptness of compensation, He who "hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth: and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation, that they should seek the Lord," is drawing after them solid portions of their various populations to engraft them, as living branches, on the good olive tree which their fathers planted.

Who can mistake, or who will disparage, the work which the builders of the American Church have transmitted to their successors of this generation? Who but will magnify the dignity of his position as a constituent member, and instrumentally the achiever of the grandest experiment of human society which the world ever saw—a boundless continent destined to embrace its thousands of millions—held together by the invisible, but inviolable bond of truth—secure and happy under the impregnable defence of good will. For, so long as the principles which have thus far underlain the safety and progress of the nation shall continue to do so, there will be no occasion for fear, however many or various may be the forms of their administration. To secure this, after all human experiments shall have wrought out the proof of their own imbecility, is to accomplish, through the blessing of God, the work which now presses upon our hands; to leaven this whole forthcoming population with the truth and spirit of the Gospel. Then will be seen, more than a Roman Virgil or an American Dwight ever pictured of the glory of their country. The heavenly model of their conceptions, drawn from the pen of the enraptured prophet of the Messiah, shall itself take form and substance—"Then shall the earth yield her increase: and God, even our God, shall bless us. God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him."

Correspondence of Missionaries.

OREGON.

From Rev. G. H. Atkinson, Oregon City.

Illness of Mr. Lyman.

The following was written some months ago, though but lately received. We are happy to have later assurance of the partial restoration of Mr. L.'s health, though the full discharge of his accustomed labors would probably be deferred for some weeks.

I feared last week that I should have to record the departure of Bro. Lyman from this world. He was attacked with inflammation of the lungs, and so severely that he despaired of life. For two days it was very doubtful whether he could recover. He made such disposal of his affairs as seemed necessary, and as the last desire of his heart, he requested me to baptize his infant daughter. And there, by his bedside, near midnight, with only the watchers to witness the solemn ceremony, the anxious mother presented her little one, and the father laid his hand upon it, while the dedication was sealed in the name of the Holy Trinity. We all felt that death would soon remove the beloved parent, and we felt the preciousness of this privilege which parents have in committing their children to their Heavenly Father and to the precious Saviour.

But God has spared the father to his little one, to his sorrowing but submissive wife, to an affectionate and kind people and to the Church of Christ.

Bro. L. had excellent medical attendance and the careful nursing of several gentlemen, who left their own business and deprived themselves of rest to minister to his wants. The people of both societies vied with each other in their expressions and acts of kindness to him and to his family; and if, indeed, it be as we know it is—"more blessed to give than to receive," they will be greatly the gainers by their kindness to him. It may be that Providence designed this sickness to redound thus to the glory of God. When the heart is once open to sympathise with the suffering, it can apprehend more what the compassion of Christ was for our race; and it is thus that the afflicted minister can enter more into the spirit of the Gospel, and become the more effective preacher.

After Bro. L. recovered so as to resume his duties for the most part, he had a fall, which laid him aside.

We need in this land that which will give an intelligent fixedness to the churches and to the people. We need training. There is too much of the shell of religion without the meat; more form than power and principle; more surface than depth. A good church member travels on Sabbath to and from market; hunts his cattle or horses then; fixes for the mines then, and travels to them then as much as other men. It will not be the work of a day to make this land an Eden in spiritual fruits; nor will a single generation of preachers gather such a precious harvest, unless Providence transplant some of the choice trees and vines from the eastern gardens to this new soil. This is very probably owing to the facilities for getting land here, and the recent gold discoveries on the Klamath. This in my view is another reason why you should send us more help.

Recent Statistics.

The religious and educational statistics of the Congregationalists and Presbyterians were as follows, last winter.

Churches:

- 1st Cong. Ch. Tualatin Plains, Rev. H. Clarke, 25 members.
- 1st Cong. Ch. Oregon City, Rev. Geo. H. Atkinson, 14 members.
- 1st Cong. Ch. Milwaukie, Rev. H. Lyman, 3 members.
- 1st Presb. Ch. (O.S.) Clatsop Plains, Rev. L. Thompson, 11 members.

Churches were about to be formed at Calapooia (8 members), and at Portland; the former under the labors of Rev. Mr. Spaulding and the latter under Mr. Lyman.

Sabbath Schools.

There are Sabbath schools in connexion with all these churches, besides two additional schools under the care of Mr. Atkinson, at out stations. That at Oregon City averages about 15 pupils; at Clackamas, 15; Baker's Prairie, 18; Tualatin Plains, 50; Milwaukie, 25.

Temperance meetings are held every week at Oregon City with good effect. The cause of education is gaining. The academy under the care of our friends is prospering; the female seminary is to go into operation on the arrival of teachers expected from the Atlantic states. The Papists have the advantage of priority on the ground, and the nuns are indefatigable, going from house to house to secure scholars.

CALIFORNIA.

Various Notices—Openings for Ministers.

March 15. Grass Valley is open for a missionary. Columbia—Oh how I wish we had a man to go there to-day. The people have in their sovereign capacity ejected the gamblers in toto from among them; and now how fine a time for a man to step in there and move right forward! S. is open; and the great North West. Every steamer goes up full. Oh, if you could send a dozen men at once, with the divine blessing it would decide the character of the state of California! I say advisedly, it would settle the direction things will take hereafter. Sending them now would do it; but sending scores a year or two hence might not change it materially, or at least not so much as a few at the strong points would now.

At San Francisco, Mr. Willey's church was rapidly advancing—was expected to be completed and occupied before the first of June. Their temporary meeting house was full; the Sabbath school very interesting. The citizens had presented the congregation with a large and beautiful bell. The church has a great load, and are exerting themselves to the utmost to put up and pay for their house. It is a severe struggle; but they are so hearty and self denying, it cannot be that they will fail. Mr. Willey writes:—

Remember us in your prayers. A great work is on our hands, a work so diversified that it divides our attention and parcels it out so that we hardly have time for the ordinary duties of life. So much falls on the minister, and he must do it, that no one with a particle of strength can withhold his hand.

A Communion.

The church in Howard street had been prevented from enjoying the communion for several weeks, through Mr. Willey's illness, until the first Sabbath in April. Respecting that season he writes:—

San Francisco, 14th April, 1851. I wish I could convey to you some idea of our Communion Sabbath. Our congregation has been increasing for some time, and now it is as large as our present room will hold. Our Sabbath school was very full, and the Bible class also, of which I have charge. This is attended at two o'clock P.M., and our Communion was at half-past three. It was a most interesting season. Six united with the church by letter, one from the 1st Congregational church in this city; one from a Dutch Reformed church in New Jersey; one from a Presbyterian church in New York; one from the Congregational church in Danvers, Mass.; two from the Mariners' church in Sidney, New South Wales. One joined on profession of her faith, a young lady of English parentage. Her father was a pious man by whom she was dedicated to God in baptism. He died when she was only five years old, since that she has been an emigrant to New South Wales, and at last to California, and is here gathered into the church. A covenant-keeping God has watched over her, and protected her from many dangers, in long journeys and great vicissitudes, till at last the prayers of a departed parent are answered. Her heart, she believes, is changed, and she professes her faith in Christ.

This season has been a solemn and impressive one to our little church. The occasion was one of deep and solemn interest; we hope it was only the beginning of good things for us. We expect our house will be ready to occupy in a few weeks, certainly before this reaches you. It will be neat, and tasteful, and attractive. But you cannot be fully aware of the effort required to erect it. Our merchants are almost discouraged. They ordered such goods as they wanted, and they are now arriving; meanwhile others, seemingly from every mart on the face of the earth, have poured in immense quantities of goods of every description! The demand is only gradual from the interior, and hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars will be sacrificed here this spring. Those at home will get no returns for their ventures, and their great investments sent here, entirely unforeseen and unexpected by our merchants, to compete with the goods ordered by them, now here, and on great expense, that it must break down many of them. Nobody could think of beginning to build a church now, but since we are committed, and so far along, there is a disposition to help us out. But it involves great labor and incessant anxiety on our part. But yet, since the house is demanded, by a community increasing rapidly in this part of the city, by every steamer's arrival, we are sure it will be readily filled, if once we can open it.

We are bending all our energies to this one object; we cannot foresee the future; if there should be extensive failures we know not what it would do to us; but we hope this will not occur.

Since the above was in type, the following has been received, giving an account of the way this enterprise is affected by

The Great Fire of May 4th.

We had our principal payment on the church to make out that week. Most of our friends were exceedingly engaged, and I had a great part of the work to do. But when Saturday night came we had accomplished all we expected; and all the money promised had been collected, paid over and receipted for. My preparation for the Sabbath was completed; and after family prayers that night, we looked over the pecuniary history of the week, and found a very small deposit for future expenses. So, putting that matter to rest, we retired to our room for the night. We had not been in it five minutes when the bells gave the alarm of fire!

Our chamber window overlooks the city, and on looking out we saw a single blaze near the post office; but as we have a very energetic fire department, we thought they would soon arrest it. But we heard the wind whistling a gale, and saw the flames extending and leaping as if in madness. We were sure, when a certain district of combustible houses had fallen, that the thick rows of brick, heavy fire-proof houses, would arrest the progress of the flames. But no! the heat had become so intense, and the progress of the conflagration so rapid, that the heavy iron window-shutters and doors were warped and curled up with the heat, and left openings for the flames to burst in and reach everything combustible! Most of those who thought their property secure in those large brick blocks, lost everything!

Some, in remaining to throw water on heated places within their stores, to keep their goods from taking fire, worked till the air became so hot they must retreat; and in several cases, dreadful to relate, on going to the doors they found the iron so expanded that they could by no possibility get them open, nor was there escape in any other way, and the awful truth was at once apparent, that they must burn with their property! Several, four or five at least, are known to have perished in this way. Some made good their escape from their buildings, but became blinded in the flames and smoke outside, and lost their way, and soon fainted, fell, and were consumed before the eyes of hundreds looking on, and unable to render a particle of aid!

One poor man was seen to fall, and rise and move a little; fall and rise again in the fierce flames, till the flesh was burnt off of his bones, and he was a living skeleton ere he fell to rise no more!

But how can I relate such horrors? They have been seen and felt realities here.

Before morning our fair and beautiful city was a field of smoking ruins; and the store ships in the harbor, containing goods of untold value, were saved as by a miracle!

So general was the fire that we might almost say that everybody was burned out.

Sabbath morning, the sun rose in gloom. The weary watchers and laborers of the night sought places where they could throw themselves down to rest. Few were able to go to the house of God. Monday morning came, and a more distressing sight you seldom saw. Strong, iron-hearted men, now burned entirely out, perhaps for the third or fourth time within one year, could ill conceal their emotions! They thought of their strenuous exertions to get what they recently possessed, and how laboriously they strove to secure it in the most costly buildings; they thought of their late prospects, and they thought of home! and it was a bitter morning, to go poking among smoking, smouldering cinders, for the melancholy remnants of their wealth.

For myself I thought little of anything but the wide spread distress about me, and I was all the forenoon clambering about among the ruins to find my friends and at least shake the hand in condolence.

An application for missionary aid had been made to the A. H. M. S. several weeks before; but the answer had not yet reached San Francisco at the time of the fire.

But, I did think it would be a very dark day for us if we could not look for support from home. And of this I was not yet certain. But we hoped in a kind Providence that we should not be forsaken.

And we were not. For in the midst of it, the Mail steamer was announced. I hurried away to see if Mr. Hunt had come. I soon had the happiness of greeting him and his lady once more to our common work. At once he put in my hand your letter, and all was well respecting the aid needed. I hurried through my first inquiries and made known the cheering intelligence to a few of my friends on my way home! Oh, I could not but be affected with the warm response of gratitude they manifested, and the joy that lighted up their faces, though, in some cases, in the midst of the ashes of their all.

But by the relief of mind afforded us, when I reached home, ours was an example of a home made happy. We have become so attached to our people, and so strongly desire to continue here, and all having been made to depend on just this intelligence, we could not but look upon it as an approval of Providence given to our work.

Receive our gratitude—mine, and that of my family and of my people—for the support you and your committee see fit to grant us in this exigency—a gratitude, which, if we live and are prospered, shall not terminate short of doing what is possible to extend the same assistance to others in like circumstances. We have noble hearts among us, and if God prospers them, and blesses them with grace, as well as with property, you will hear from us again.

But this desolating fire will throw me on you longer than I should otherwise have been. Nearly every one of my friends suffered, some a loss well nigh total, others less.

IOWA.

Census.

Year.	Population.	Increase in 10 years-
1850	192,247	149,136=345 per cent.

There are now 101 counties whose boundaries have been defined, 50 having been erected by the last legislature. The advance of our missionary operations is slow compared with the advance of the state. The system of railroads in Illinois will soon be in such a state of forwardness, that the iron horse will speed his flight from Chicago to Galena and Rock Island, and then a portion of eastern emigration, still larger than ever has passed the Great River, will find its way into those inviting fields.

*From Rev. F. A. Armstrong, Clay,
Washington Co.*

At our last communion at Clay, ten were added to the church, eight on profession. The attendance at and near Brighton and at Richland has been very good, but amid the many cross currents there have not been the same visible results; yet several, I trust, have become the children of God, who have not yet united with any church.

To bear witness to the truth, with the Holy Spirit, is the most soul-satisfying, the most blessed of all engagements. Sometime since I was almost brought to wish every day were a Sabbath; but the Lord has made every thing good in its season. I have been brought to realize more and more the importance of the right kind of pastoral labor. How else can such a restless, roving mass of mind be brought to settle?

From Rev. W. P. Apthorp, Oskaloosa, Mahaska Co.

I wish I could send an animating account of the progress of Christ's kingdom here, such as I think you will have from some of the churches in Iowa. But all I can report here is an advance towards the possession of those facilities and instruments of labor without which we are only tantalised with the idea of what might be done.

And yet we have the encouragement of seeing good things coming. For our church edifice we have now secured about $550, and more is hoped for from different sources; but if we can get it so far forward as to be occupied by next fall, we shall be thankful and let the finishing go till another year.

About sun-dried bricks.

We have thought and consulted considerable respecting the sun-dried bricks referred to in the February number of the Home Missionary, and could we succeed in using them could save enough nearly to finish the house. But there seem to be insuperable difficulties here, or rather too great a risk. I happened to meet an experienced builder from Illinois, who has built several such houses and says they are the best that can be built, when once secured. But he had seen them when half up, washed entirely away in a single storm. I think, notwithstanding, that the chances of success could justify a trial; and indeed the risk is very small, provided we could secure a sufficient number of hands that could be depended on to put it up and secure it with the outer coat and put on the roof in a few days. But that is the difficulty, so many must co-operate and each be punctual and faithful, that the risk, in this country, seems too great—a failure would be ruinous; still, if I were building for myself, I would not be afraid of the risk.

Improvements in the country.

We anticipate changes for the better in our population when the plank road, which is now in progress from Burlington, reaches us; measures are in train for making it to Fairfield, forty miles east of us, and then it will come here. Another will probably be made from Keokuk. Whoever travels in the opening of spring and in rainy weather over the flat prairies which are found between here and the Mississippi, sometimes twenty or twenty five successive miles, with mud fetlock deep, and perhaps as stiff as putty, will hail the prospect of a plank road, as well as the farmers and tradesmen who have to labor through such roads with teams.

Reproductive benevolence.

The funds bestowed on Missionary churches, in a few years become the good seed with which other fields are planted.

Last week I returned from a visit to Burlington, Denmark and Quincy, where I had been to get some assistance towards our church. I obtained about $112, which seemed pretty liberal considering the circumstances. In Quincy, the Presbyterian church had that day taken a collection of nearly $100 for Home Missions; one of the Congregational churches had just expended $800 for repairs; the other Congregational church are preparing to build for themselves at a cost of some thousands. In Denmark also, expenses were proposed respecting their meeting house, and sundry large contributions had recently been made. In Burlington I obtained just half of the whole amount. I should not have mentioned all these particulars, had I not felt the force of them while visiting these churches, and their bearing on the labors of your society. Where would all these able churches have been but for the agency of the A. H. M. S., which nourished them in their infancy? And how many years is it since they still depended on your aid? We who traverse the fields where your seeds are scattered, and who witness also the precious revivals in some of the churches, realize that it is no idle labor in which you are engaged.

From Rev. Williston Jones, Cedar Rapids, Linn Co.

On the 6th of April, fifteen joined our church, one by letter and fourteen by profession. Several others will probably do so at some future time. The principal facts relating to the revival we enjoyed in this place and vicinity last winter were communicated to you. The results so far show that great good was accomplished.

I held a series of meetings of a week's duration, including the first Sabbath in March, at Benton Co., (where I labor one fourth part of the time for the present year,) which seems to have resulted in much good. There were about ten hopeful conversions, and several backsliders apparently were reclaimed; also the infant church there was greatly strengthened and encouraged. Three were added to it at that time by letter, and four weeks later seven were received on profession of their faith in Christ, and sat down with the church around the table of the Lord spread there in the wilderness. Also six gave their names to be connected with the church at a future time. The addition of the ten above mentioned makes the present number of that church thirty four.

These meetings were held in private dwellings, as they have neither meeting houses nor school houses worthy of the name in the county; and numbers of the people walked three, four and five miles, and some came with ox teams, bringing with them their families large and small. It was a sight both interesting and affecting. Christians at the East who have churches, means of conveyance to them, and domestic arrangements which enable them to leave the youngest of their families at home, and the stated ministrations of the word, cannot realize what privations have to be undergone in the new parts of our country. At the communion season there, three households were dedicated to God in baptism.

From the Rev. Oliver Eastman, Lee Co.

An awakening and its fruits.

It has fallen to my lot since occupying the field where I am, to see many things calculated to discourage the missionary; but I had learned to put my trust in Him who has said, "In due time ye shall reap if ye faint not." The Lord is not slack concerning his promise. I desire to present a thank offering to his great name for his merciful interposition in behalf of Zion among us. In the station at Washington, we have enjoyed a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. During a series of evening meetings, the Spirit was peculiarly present, and many precious souls, as we humbly hope, were born of God. The work has been peculiar for its stillness and the marked indications of a radical and thorough change of character in those who professed to be converted. Between fifteen and twenty hope that they have been created anew in Christ Jesus. Among the hopeful converts are six men, the heads of families, in the prime of life; in most cases their partners are united with them in their consecration to God. A large class of young people remain still in their sins, but we hope they will yet be reached. A Congregational church was organized in the early part of the meetings, consisting of five members, all heads of families. Two other individuals have since been examined, and several others expect to be, preparatory to uniting with us at our next communion. Although the meetings were conducted entirely by your missionaries, yet such is the relation sustained by many of those converted to other denominations that they will probably unite with them; principally with the Old School Presbyterian and Methodist churches. But if they are truly converted, the great object is gained, our God is glorified, and souls eternally saved.

The Sabbath school is attended with more than usual interest.

Muscataine.

Rev. Mr. Robbins, the pastor of this church, was greatly affected by the sudden death of his partner, last summer, by cholera. It appears, from a recent letter, that the Lord is granting him consolation in the presence and victories of his Holy Spirit.

It has been a quarter of great interest. The increasing seriousness in my congregation continued; and there was such marked attention to the truth preached, that I felt almost compelled to hold extra meetings for preaching the word. We enjoyed most cheering tokens of the presence of God's Spirit in our meetings.

Most of the church have been much revived and an impulse has been given, in a right direction, which, I trust, will never be lost. Our prayer meetings still continue to be full of interest, and we hope that henceforward, through Christ helping us, we shall gain upon this worldly-minded people.

At our last communion, eighteen joined our little church; eleven of these were by profession; the most of the remainder were of those brought out from their hiding places and backslidden state through the influences at our meetings.

Among the hopeful conversions were quite a number for whom my dear wife and I have often together earnestly prayed; and, in my joy there has been a strange mingling of sorrow, that she could not have seen some results, long delayed, even through all her life here; results that would have saved her hopeful and glad heart from the most of the sorrow which she seemed to have had since her life in the West began. But our Heavenly Father knows what is best: "Though He slay" us, "yet will we trust in him." I am trying to "rejoice in tribulation."

This revival has been a wonderful blessing to me in the power thus given to rise, in some degree, from the crushing affliction sent upon me.

MISSOURI.

A discouraged Missionary.

This brother's case is not peculiar; he may have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that he has fellow sufferers in all parts of the land. Nevertheless, Christ's kingdom shall come and his will be done, in all these hard fields. Nor shall the patient endurance of the faithful missionary be without its reward, even though the seed he sows shew no signs of germination till long after he is removed. Is. xlix. 5.

Thus far, we have a beautiful, growing spring, every thing looks cheerful and cheering, "only man is vile." When we turn to the moral condition of the country, the heart is pained and faints with discouragement. The Sabbath is desecrated and there are few to stand for the defence of truth. No one, apparently, is able even to appreciate the motives of a godly man, if they chance to see one. The worst motives are often attributed to the best of actions. If you stand and defend the truth and the institutions of religion against the false dogmas and, if possible, the more heretical practices of the people, you are "proud," merely "wish to make a display of learning," &c. You may persist in asserting your purity of intention, and try to prove it by self-denial and persevering labor, your testimony is not appreciated, you fail to convince, and nothing is left you but to labor on as best you can, and wait for your reward.

Thus it is with the missionary's life. His support, whether full or scanty, has little to do with his anxieties; but when he has the public mind agitated to its greatest depths with politics or with some worldly speculation, and many sacrificing all they have on earth in hope of gain, and with no apparent thought of eternity—then it is that the soul of the missionary is moved. He is anxious—he is in the midst of a people who need his prayers and teaching; but he cannot reach them; the Sabbath is no obstacle to the rush of the public feeling; they are making haste to get rich; they "have no time" to heed the Gospel, or to listen to the voice of peace and mercy, though it fall on them with promises of eternal life, and durable riches and righteousness.

Our people are calculating to build a meeting house this season, how they will succeed is doubtful; there are few to help in the work; but it is needed, and I hope they will succeed.

A year's vicissitudes.

We group together in the following article some of the prominent aspects of a missionary's experience during a year.

The year opened with a glorious refreshing from on high. God in mercy remembered our little Zion, more than trebled our number, increased our graces, and revived our languishing spirits.

When everything was moving along pleasantly,—our house well filled from Sabbath to Sabbath,—our prayer meetings and Bible class well attended, the Sabbath school taken hold of with renewed interest—the “gold fever” broke out among us. Many of our most prominent men went in search of a new mine, reported to have been discovered. The excitement of the event paralyzed religious effort for a time. After being gone several weeks, they returned, being unsuccessful. Then commenced the great California emigration. Our town shared largely in the bustle and turmoil of fitting out emigrants. Contact with such excitement had no tendency to increase religious fervor. Some of the members of our church joined the departing trains.

When the troubled waters began to be calmed, and affairs assumed their wonted sway, the cholera commenced; and for weeks there was little done but attending on the sick and dying. Nearly one third of our citizens fled before it, leaving the town deserted and desolate.

Soon after the cholera abated my wife was taken sick, and for months much of my time was spent at her bedside.

Such is a rapid review of some of the prominent events of the year.

But I think, that in all we have passed through we have not lost ground. Not one of our number has been taken away by death. There has been no occasion for discipline. Though we have not had additions to cancel removals; still all of our prominent members are with us.

Many men would have fled from the scene of so much discouragement. But our missionary held on, and Providence has smiled on his persevering endeavors. The people have built a parsonage—such a house as, we venture to say, is a rare luxury for a minister in the interior of Missouri. Would that others might copy the example! Again, they have exerted themselves to procure a good church building, which is to be done this fall.

One man gave a lot for the church and parsonage and $500 towards their erection.

Respecting the dwelling house, the missionary says:

We shall get into our little brick parsonage in two or three weeks. It is twenty-three by seventeen feet—with a fine cellar and portico extending on the whole of one side. On one end of the portico is to be finished off a study! on the other end is the entrance to the cellar by trap doors. In the main house there are two rooms. We are extremely happy in the thought of getting into it. We shall feel an interest in having our garden—vegetable and flower, our front yard, grass plats, gravel walks and all the pleasant accompaniments of a cottage. We shall not be forced to go from house to house to live.

Our Sabbath school has re-opened; evening lectures are becoming better attended; at my county appointments we have crowded houses.

I shall start this week to Presbytery, some one hundred miles distant; and from there go to 'Synod, one hundred miles farther.

In reading the above, a good illustration is obtained of the lights and shades of missionary experience. Who can wonder that, where society is exposed to such sweeping excitements and changes, it is hard work to make religious advancement? It would seem like constructing breastworks against the ocean's surges out of the very sand which it throws upon the beach; the next wave dissolves the structure and scatters the materials of which it is reared. And yet, how decided the success granted to perseverance! These external conveniences for worship and for the comfort of the pastor show that a lodgment is made in the hearts of the people—that a permanent stake is stuck, not easily to be displaced.

Let other missionaries consider these things, thank God and take courage.

The Leaven at Work.

Missouri is regarded as a hard missionary field, and some ministers who are anxious to see the reaper tread closely on the heels of the sower, can hardly believe that any good is done, because it does not show its full grown fruits at once. But, we must be patient, and not grow weary of well doing. The following comes from a remote, interior county.

At our camp meeting, twenty of my neighbors and their children professed to obtain a hope of pardon. Christians of other denominations appeared as much interested as if it had been their own meeting. It was their meeting, and ours too, as it regards rejoicing in the repentance of sinful relatives and neighbors. An elder said to me this evening, "It would be hard to find better society than we have here." In about four miles square there are 47 families, and only one family where both the parents are non-professors. Twenty four of these families are Presbyterian; and in these Presbyterian families all the adults but one are professors. If we could be contented to stay here, we might be a happy people. East of us, in an adjoining neighborhood, there is excellent Methodist society. West of us there is good Baptist society. O that they were wise enough to feel the importance of an educated and sustained ministry!

I have attended some interesting union protracted meetings at the newly erected union meeting house, where I have had monthly appointments for years past. That neighborhood is greatly changed. I think about 30 have in a few months professed a hope of pardon. I suppose the majority of them do or will belong to another denomination.

An aged Convert.

One of those who united with the church in W. County, is 70 years old, and resides 50 miles further East. He seemed to place a high estimate upon the privilege he then enjoyed. Those Christians of — church are "the poor of this world," and I think they are rich enough in faith to esteem it a great and precious privilege to be visited as often as twice a year by Presbyterian ministers, going to them in the "fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ."

From Rev. T. Hill, St. Charles.

Death of a Useful Man.

JOSEPH PARKS, the senior elder of this church, died Jan. 7th, aged 68 years. He was a native of Pennsylvania, whence he removed with his parents to Ohio, in the early settlement of the state. When about twenty years of age he united with the church, and for the last twenty years of his life held the office of ruling elder in the churches with which he was connected in Ohio, and in this town.

As a Christian, he was no ordinary man. There was an earnestness of faith, a living consciousness of the truth of the Gospel, together with a capacity for public prayer, such as is rarely to be met with. His prayers were indiscrible, there was in them, an exactness of propriety, and a fulness of detail, united to an all pervading earnestness and reverence, that gave him the power to reach the feelings of those who listened in an unusual degree; he seemed to draw near to God in full assurance of faith and to plead for the things he needed with confidence and hope. His life was a harmless one, and his disposition full of kindness, so that his influence was favorably felt on all those who knew him.

His departure was calm and even triumphant; he retained his reason and cheerfulness to the last, remembered the church and prayer meeting, when too feeble to speak without much effort.

As he drew nearer his death, one of his sons said to him, "Father, you are going;" when he answered, "Yes, I am going the way the holy prophets went." With that beautiful thought on his lips, just as light came to his habitation, his life faded away from earth, lost in the brightness of the day that shall never cease.

We miss his earnest voice in the prayer meeting and in the Sabbath school; we miss his influence and counsel; but we love to think of him as with Christ—his contest ended, the victory won, and the crown of glory received.

Incidents.

At our communion on the first Sabbath in January, we received into the church a colored boy, a slave, about fifteen years of age. When he made application to unite with the church he brought a note from his master, stating that he was willing he should unite, and also that he was a faithful boy, and that his walk was exemplary. I learned that for more than a year he had separated himself from those blacks who were in the habit of Sabbath breaking, and had been faithful in his attendance upon the means of grace. I trust he has been redeemed by the precious blood of the Saviour, and rejoices in the liberty wherewith Christ has made him free.

A few Sabbaths ago the superintendent of our Sabbath school told the pupils that he would give every scholar a book that would recite a hundred verses in a given time. A class of little boys that have not learned to read say they will each have a book. They tease their mothers to read the lesson for them till they learn it. Some of them have recited fourteen verses at one lesson.

Since my last report, death for the first time, has entered our dwelling, and a lovely daughter nearly three years old is gone to the grave, and, we trust, her sweet spirit to the arms of her Saviour. She was beautiful in her person, lovely and affectionate in her disposition, and had never been sick scarcely a day. Death marked her for his victim; disease seized upon her system, and in one short week she was carried to the grave. It was a heavy stroke; but I trust we have been enabled to say, and to feel too, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." We look forward with hope, and when a few more days of toil and suffering are spent we expect to be united to her in that pure land where there is no death nor parting of friends.

WISCONSIN.

A settlement, somewhat on the Fourier plan, was made some years since at Ceresco, in this state, which some persons were led to suppose might furnish a remedy for social evils without having an effect adverse to revealed religion. The following is our latest intelligence from this experiment, and may serve to illustrate the tendency of all schemes for the regeneration of society which leave out of view the depravity of man as an individual, and ascribe all that is wrong among men solely to the mal-adjustment of external relations.

The Fourier Association at Ceresco village has exploded, but it has left behind infidelity and irreligion. The larger part of the members of the old association who remain, think and care but little for the Sabbath or the sanctuary. They disregard and disbelieve the word of God. They show little respect for the Lord's day, and are never found within the enclosure of his earthly courts. Hence it is difficult to reach them.

The infidels have held meetings upon every alternate Sabbath evening through the winter; at which the school master, who is quite an intelligent man, has acted as preacher. At these meetings it has been a chief object to bring into disrepute the great doctrines of evangelical religion.

On one of these occasions the speaker rose and remarked that "these meetings were intended for the special benefit of the hard heads (Orthodox), but," said he, looking round, "I am sorry I see none of them here."

The mysterious knockings have set the people of Ceresco all agog. They have held frequent meetings during the winter to "get up" these knockings, and they affirm that they have met with success. They profess in a number of instances to have heard the sounds and to have received communications from departed friends.

From Rev. E. G. Bradford, Princeton, Marquette Co.

Rapid Settlement of a New Country.

Princeton is one of the many new villages that are springing into existence on the Fox or Neenah river in consequence of the internal improvement along that stream for commercial purposes. Princeton has grown up in a little more than one year. It now contains three taverns, four dry goods stores, several groceries, several mechanics' shops, several doctors' and lawyers' offices, and in the whole about sixty families. The country in the vicinity is rapidly becoming settled. Down the river one mile, lies Hamilton, containing about one half the population of Princeton. One and a half miles below Princeton is St. Maria, a town-plat just laid out, about which there is, just now, much talk of its promise to become a city. It is expected that many buildings will be erected there in the course of this season, and among them a Catholic church. State Centre is the name of another commencement of a village one mile below St. Maria. Steamboats are beginning to run by us from Lake Winnebago to a point within a few miles of Fort Winnebago. A few months more will open the passage for them into the Wisconsin river, by which there is now steamboat communication with the Mis-

Mississippi. This is an important neighborhood of country, and destined soon to be populous. It is with this view of the place, and of the great importance of having the Gospel early planted in these settlements that I have concluded again to cast in my lot with the pioneer.

I now find myself in a place where everything is new, and where society is heterogeneous in a high degree. No religious organizations yet exist, if we except the Methodist class, which is found everywhere.

I have met with quite a favorable reception by the inhabitants. They wish for a regular stated meeting, and a resident minister of the Gospel, and have done all that could be expected in the case to encourage my settlement with them. My labors here are an experiment. The ground is strictly missionary. Everything is in the crudest state: everything is to be done; and the success of the experiment is among the uncertainties of the future. Brethren, pray for us.

During the last quarter I preached at Princeton Sabbath afternoons, and the forenoon every alternate Sabbath. The intervening Sabbaths in the forenoon I preached at Hamilton. I preach in school houses.

Neglect of parental instruction.

There is a painful fact, with which I meet on every hand—and the evil is, without doubt, increasing—and that is the neglect of faithful parental instruction. It is to be feared that a greater part of the religious instruction which the children of multitudes within the pale of Christ's church, and who have covenanted to walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, (and one of these commands is, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up,") is obtained in the Sabbath school or in religious meetings, but not where this command requires. No wonder, whilst this is the case, that so many children bring down the gray hairs of their parents with sorrow to the grave, and that disregard of all religion, profaneness, and Sabbath-breaking and similar sins, abound so much amongst this class, and that the children of professors of religion compose so large a share of this unhappy number. Often, I put familiar questions to children, as for example, Who died to save sinners? or, Where is God? And frequently have had them look at me with a kind of surprise, as though they never had heard of such things before, and were unable to give any answer. At other times, when sufficiently advanced to express their views, unbelieving or skeptical opinions are drawn out with regard to the reality of religion.

I was led to these reflections by incidents which occurred during the last summer. Riding along one day I overtook a boy apparently about 14 years of age.—"Are there meetings held," I inquired, "in the settlement just past?" "Yes, preaching every Sunday." "Do you attend?" "Sometimes." "Can you employ your time on the Sabbath in a better manner than you can by going, as there you learn what shall be hereafter?" "Hereafter! we can't know anything about that beforehand. Who is there that knows anything about it?" "The Bible tells us of One who came from that world and has returned thither, and He has told us. Do you read that?" "Can't know any more by reading that than if I did not." "If you were going to a country, would you not wish to know something about it beforehand?" "Well, if I did, could not know anything certainly until I got there." "Before you came to Wisconsin, did you not inquire about it before you came?" "Yes, but did not know any more than nothing about it before I got here." "Are your parents professors of religion?" "Yes, my mother belongs to a — church." "Does she ever talk to you about these things?" "Sometimes." "Did you ever feel that you was a sinner?" "Don't know as ever I did." Here we parted, and as he left, I gave him the tract "Worth of the Soul." Oh, had the mother of that boy had the faith which Eunice, the mother of Timothy, had, he could not have been a skeptic so young.

A short time previously, as I was returning from a Sabbath school, a devoted teacher said to me, "I had the son of the Revd. gentleman who preached in the morning; in my class to day. He is an intelligent lad, naturally, but I was surprised to see how ignorant he was upon the subject of religion."

Sometime after this, I met with a young man whose father, about a year before, told me he "had found that religion was priestcraft," &c. I made some inquiries of him respecting the subject of religion, when he commenced expressing his belief in a God, in a very pompous manner. "Do you believe," I inquired, "that the Bible is the Word of God?" "No; as far as it gives us good advice, it is a good book." "How can we know anything certainly about the future except from the Word of God?" "Reason teaches us that there is a future state." "How does it happen that people in these days are wiser than the heathen philosophers respecting the immortality of the soul?" "Well, I believe we are in the hands of a just God, and that he is a good being." "Will not his justice, then, lead him to be true to his word, 'If ye die in your sins,' &c." "God foreknew all things, and I do not believe he foreknew any to be eternally damned." "But will his foreknowledge lead him to go contrary to his word?" "God has given us a conscience, and if we would follow that it is all that is necessary." "Do you do this?" "No." Finding it impossible to bring him to any point, I proposed prayer. To this he assented. After this I made a few personal remarks and left him, more deeply impressed than before, with the thoughts above expressed, and with a conviction of the strength and permanency of parental influence and instruction, whether good or evil.

Can anything be done to arrest this growing evil, wit: Neglect of parental instruction?

Extent and Variety of Home Missionary Labors.

The amount of set ministerial public labor required in this town, is two sermons on every Sabbath day, and one weekly evening sermon or lecture, with the usual amount of extra public labor in connection with lyceum lectures, educational interests, and the various benevolent local institutions. I have already learned that your missionaries are called on more than others in all these matters, because, from the very fact of their being connected with the A. H. M. S., the public take it for granted they are men duly qualified. How important then that we sustain the character thus endorsed by the Society!

My experience painfully taught me in the East, that infidels propagated their principles extensively through the lyceums. Although we are not cursed here with the same forms of infidelity, yet we have a great deal of the Abner Kneeland kind, and I feel it important to be "on hand" at our lyceum, to guard our young men from insidious attacks made on Christianity and the Bible.

Foreign Prejudices.

I dropped in on a Saturday evening, at the house of a German neighbor, who can talk very little English. I told him as well as I could, that I would give him some books in German, that I had a lot—that I could not read them myself, and so I would give them to those who could. I left them. Early on Sabbath morning, long before breakfast, soon after light, I heard a great shouting at my front door. On going to know the reason of the uproar, I saw my German friend in a great fury, shaking the tracts, and getting off German as fast as he could; intermixing it with broken English. All I could recognize was "naughtee man, naughtee man." I looked very innocently at him, and took them as politely back again as I could, and bowed him to the road, whilst he stammered German of which I did not understand a word. Well he has read the truth, and it may yet awaken reflection.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. A. J. Copeland, Geneseo, Henry Co.

The way of the Lord preparing.

During the quarter several events have occurred in this church and society, which we regard as encouraging, by way of preparation for revival of God's work. Sometime in December last, a discourse from Isaiah lvii, 14, "Cast ye up, prepare the way," &c., was addressed especially to the church, with a view to arouse Christians to duty.

Agreeably to previous notice, a goodly number assembled early on New Year's day morning, "while it was yet dark," for the purpose of making a fresh dedication of themselves to God.

The annual concert of prayer for the conversion of the world, was observed on the first Monday in January. After some deliberation and prayer, the church felt it duty immediately to take measures to look after her wandering members and to restore them in the Gospel way.

Shortly after a committee was appointed to go out, two and two, and visit all the resident members for the purpose of encouraging them, by a kind and prayerful interview, to the faithful discharge of every known duty, and also to admonish those whom they found remiss.

In connection with this visitation, we were blessed with the acceptable labors of a warm-hearted and judicious brother from a neighboring church, who spent nearly a week with us, going about from house to house, doing good. The church appears very much quickened, and some cases of seriousness are found among the ungodly; also some opposition is manifested.

The concert of prayer on the last Thursday in February, for revivals of religion in colleges and other seminaries of learning, was quite well attended by the church, and we trust this will prove a season in which lasting impressions for good were made on the hearts of God's people, especially of parents.

We are now using such means by way of weekly prayer meetings and lectures as we are able, hoping thereby under God, to advance the cause of Christ in the region around us.

There have been several accessions to the church, during this last quarter, by letter.

Various Means.

Next to a faithful proclamation of the divine message from the pulpit, the diligent use of such auxiliary measures as the following, tends to edify the church and prepare her for efficiency in the work assigned by her Great Head.

The community are becoming better supplied with religious periodicals. By means of these publications and our efforts in the monthly concerts, the great benevolent enterprises of the day are constantly kept before the minds of this people, both old and young.

We try to feed the lambs with right instruction on these things, and early to impress their tender minds, with the importance of learning to do good and to be benevolent while yet young; and that Christ wants them to do all they can, though it costs them self-denials and sacrifices to help furnish the destitute at home, and the poor heathen abroad, with the Gospel.

The Sabbath school has been reorganized with additional numbers and interest. An adult Bible class has been formed, composed mostly of the oldest men in the place. Our Sabbath school for the present have adopted the Assembly's Shorter Catechism with proof texts, and thus have returned to the good old ways of our fathers, which modern innovations have never made better.

Our plan is, to try to induce all the youth to commit the Catechism thoroughly.

The pastor meets the children once a month to hear them repeat their answers, to make some explanation, to tell them something about the heathen, and to receive their contributions to the "Youth's Education fund."

From Rev. Paul Anderson, Chicago.

Scandinavian Church.

Our pretensions to advancement in holiness are humble, for there are indeed many "spots and wrinkles" seen as yet even in those whom we hope "are passed from death unto life." Still, I thank God that many have been more thoroughly established in the truth, and the beauties of the "new creation in Christ" are being more clearly developed, and thus ripening, though slowly it may be, for the heavenly granary. The ministration of God's house has been well attended, and while we have every reason to believe it will prove "a savor of life unto life" to many, we fear, alas! for others. I trust on the whole that our numbers increase in their experience of divine things. Religious practices (such as prayer meetings, &c., which are peculiar to this country compared to our native country,) are now more and more appreciated among our people. The value of Sunday schools is also felt; and as these (so called by the formalists,) "new measures" expand the mind, the heart is enriched in experience, and the divine life in the soul is strengthened. Our prayer meetings were formerly ridiculed, but they are now well attended; our Sabbath school (in the English,) was laughed at; now it is well patronized by both parents and children. We owe, however, much of the success of Sunday schools to the self denying efforts of several members of the Presbyterian churches in this city, and especially to our valuable and esteemed superintendent. Although there is no English Evangelical Lutheran church in this city, we have nevertheless found all needful aid in the pastors and members of the N. School Presbyterian churches. Those dear brethren in the ministry have ever manifested the most friendly disposition towards us; and it has been, and I hope it will for the future be my privilege to seek their counsel in all important matters.

NOTICE.

Applications for Aid.

We desire to call the particular attention of those churches applying for aid that are within the limits of an agency of the Society, and of individuals who forward applications, to the following notice, which appears in various forms under the head of "Applications" in the Society's publications. A careful observance of it will often prevent delay in the action of the Society upon the request preferred :

Applications, after being properly certified by individual ministers or Committees of Missions, should be addressed to the care of the Agent, Agency or Auxiliary Society of the American Home Missionary Society for the region where the applicants reside.

The address of the Society's Agents will be found on the cover of its Report and of the Home Missionary.

AUGUST, 1851.

No. 4.

The Claims of the New Territories.

In illustrating the claims of our new Territories upon the enterprise and benefactions of the churches and enforcing the duties of the friends of missions involved in them, we have the pleasure of presenting to our readers the spirited and eloquent address of the Hon. JAMES MEACHAM, at the last Anniversary. Mr. Meacham is a Member of Congress, from Middlebury, Vermont, and has looked upon the field for which he pleads with the eye of a Statesman, as well as of a Christian. We need only ask for his remarks an attentive consideration.

I appear with you this evening as a representative of Vermont, the earliest field occupied by domestic missionaries in the United States. I had the honor of a personal and familiar acquaintance with the first of that number. Returning late to heaven, he had done a great work for his Master. As a travelling missionary, he preached the Gospel in the scattered settlements of New York and Vermont, and gathered into new churches the flocks that were roaming without a fold, and without a shepherd. He became stationary in the western portion of our State; and his congregation furnished, proportionately, more college graduates and ministers than any other in the Union. At home, I need not say, that I refer to Rev. Jedediah Bushnell. If from one I may learn the character of all, a nobler band of uninspired apostles were never sent out, than that detailed by the churches of Connecticut for the service of Vermont. Their names and deeds have a grateful remembrance. We shall honor, and I trust shall imitate the spirit that planted many of our flourishing churches. Perhaps for this cause, we regard your Society as one of the most important of our benevolent organizations. Without disparagement of others, all highly esteemed, we profess a warm affection for the one remaining at home, and attending to her own domestic affairs. If Vermont were not already supplied, what hope of help could she have at the present time? What chance that her cries would be heeded, while there are actual or impending calls from a territory sufficient to make two hundred States as large as herself; calls that come up like the rushing of many waters, from every quarter of the land?

The pillars on the old Spanish coin current with us, indicated that the dominions of Castile and Leon extended to the Pillars of Hercules, or the end of the world. After the discovery by Columbus, there was a change of the device; a broad fillet encircled the pillars, and on that fillet was inscribed "plus ultra," there is "more beyond." For the last twenty years, we have heard often, and heard much of the great Valley of the Mississippi; that the dwellers in that fertile and magnificent basin, stretching from mountain range to mountain range, would mould and hold the destinies of this great nation. On the rocky ramparts of the West, were our Pillars of Hercules—that was the end of our world. Since bold adventurers have reached the mouth of the Columbia, since California and New Mexico have been added to our territory, the hum of human voices has reached us round the Cape, and across the Isthmus.

And anon, as the noise of a great army, the voice of the Saxon, the voice of the American, and the voice of every nation under the whole heaven, come roaring and thundering through the passes and gorges of the Rocky Mountains, bidding the government and bidding the church remember there is "more beyond!"

We have so long called ourselves a great nation, that when we have made additions large enough to swallow the strongest European powers, we have left no unchartered terms by which to indicate the extent of our augmented whole. But, much as we have talked, I doubt whether, as friends of Home Missions, we fully realize how wide a field is now before us; that, after two centuries of progressive settlement, one half of our territory is not yet organized into States. Since your last meeting, California has joined the Union. She has come into that Union with a dower of gold, such as none but the hand of her Creator could give. Long—yea, forever—may she hold her place as a bright star gilding the firmament of the West; but so far as regards the action of your Society she is in the condition of a territory, and, in many respects, has stronger claims than any other. Since your last meeting, Congress has framed State and territorial governments covering an area eleven times as large as New York, who has so long and so gracefully borne the name and banner of the Empire State. For generations to come, new additions will be discussed, and new States will present themselves at the national altar for baptism into the name of our glorious Union. Into those extended territories, now so rapidly settling, the pending resolution urges you to enter early, and work earnestly for the salvation of men. I know the field is large, and the work as important as any ever laid at the door of Missions, since the foundation of the church. I trust that we have reached our limits, and pray God to give no more additions by the conquest of arms. But, if it be true, as predicted, that our republic is destined to cover the whole North American Continent, then the church, who gave the world the first idea of a representative government, should be prepared to lengthen her cords, and strengthen her stakes, over the same extended empire. If the work be great, there has been great and long preparation for it. God saved this land from the power of the Northmen, and turned the foot of the Spanish adventurer to more fertile and tempting fields, on which to try his disastrous experiment. He held back the Saxon, struggling like a chained eagle for freedom, till at the bidding of a tyrant's pedant, forty seven men had expended a hundred and forty one years of labor in translating the Bible. When that was printed and put into the hands of our fathers, he brought them slowly to their work, as the chosen seed was sifted from the masses of the old world. He bid the savage hold them in check, till they should coalesce in forming societies and churches. He gave them a free constitution and threescore years of unexampled prosperity under it. More to our purpose, he gave them fifty years of experience in planting churches by the agency of Domestic Missions, till there is not a doubt or doubter left, as to the power or safety of that agent. All this done, the gates are again lifted, and a new tide is heaving onward over river, and prairie, and mountain; and he calls the American churches to take it at its ebb, and follow westward the star of empire. If the work be begun in season, and prosecuted with the spirit and energy it demands, there will probably be as few obstacles as in any field yet occupied; in the old territory comparatively none. In the new acquisitions, we must expect that what has occurred in similar cases, in all human history, will occur again, the original inhabitants will very reluctantly give up the religion of their fathers, for the religion of their conquerors. The Mormons are mistaken in character, when reckoned as a religious body. Such an impression is not derived from their origin, or their creed or conduct. Candid men among them represent but few as sincere, while the great mass wear the mask loosely and carelessly. If that system ever rises above the rank of a cheat, it will not, by any devotion it inspires, or any morality it inculcates, attain the dignity of a religion. I can look on it, only as the larva laid in our richest soil, from which is hereafter to spring a race of infidels.

We should send the Gospel ministry to those territories for the same purpose it was planted on earth, that men may be reconciled to God, and constantly reminded that they must be born again in order to see the kingdom of heaven. For this purpose, let the minister follow the merchant to the mart of commerce, and hold before him the pearl of great price, as the first object of his search and purchase. Let him go with the laborer tilling the farm, or digging the placer, and press him to buy the field that has buried wealth of immortal value. We should give the Gospel ministry for the moral influence exerted by the christian sanctuary. There can be no sound morality that does not spring from a pure religion, and nowhere else is it needed more than in laying the foundations of a State. They may have laws, good laws, but the sanctuary can accomplish what the law cannot do, in that it is weak through the flesh. In the memory of living men, two examples have been seen in contrast. In our revolution, all law was lifted up from off the American people, because all authority to enforce it was suspended. Every cord of power was snapt asunder. What did the people do? Did they rush back to a state of disbanded nature? Three millions moved on so steadily, with so little riot, and so little social misrule, that not one man of a thousand now knows that such a state of things has ever existed. In the same age, the same experience was tried by another nation. When they had crushed their government, when they had trod the crown and crossier down, they rushed upon each other to rend and devour, like a menagerie of wild beasts when the bars of their cages are lifted. The morality which held our fathers, is needed to control their sons. It may not be needed in a despotism, whose convincing and coercive logic is lead and steel. But if we are to retain this fair land of freedom, which the Lord our God hath given us, we must have a christian morality. Without it, the present government of this nation, on the neck of the stubborn and headlong Saxon race, will be lighter than the down of a linnet's wing; and the laws now so mild and so safe, will become like the dry leaves of autumn before the wrath of a whirlwind. We should send the ministry to lay and execute the plans for a system of education. There are others who are qualified to do it; but, busy with their farms and merchandise, they will neglect it. The common school is the child of the Gospel, and they will keep company together through the settlements of the West. Generous men, in and out of the church, have contributed to lay the foundations of one hundred and eighteen colleges, and thousands of academies in the United States. But ministers of the Gospel have mainly led in the enterprise; and now mainly control and instruct in those institutions. The same thing will occur again if the proper agents are in the field. If those territories are not supplied with colleges and academies, and dotted all over with the school house, they will come up a land of ignorance, and a land of guilt.

It will be a shame to Christianity, if the Pacific shore shall give up all her treasure and get nothing in return. Cortes was thought to have gained amazing wealth, when he carried six million and three hundred thousand dollars from the halls of Montezuma, a sum scarce equal to the income of a single month of the present time. In a year, the world has sent out a hundred thousand men, with an outfit of thirty millions of dollars, for the sake of gain. Cannot the church contribute a hundredth part of as many men, and a three-hundredth part of as much money to send the word of life to all the territories? Our own brethren and kindred are there. Scarce a church or a neighborhood but has sent on a representative. Part will return; some rich, some poor. Part will remain; some as a matter of choice, and thousands as a matter of compulsion; they are too destitute ever to get home, unless led back by the hand of charity. There is another new class on those shores. Formerly, Asiatics have not emigrated, as Europeans have done, to settle on our land. Occasionally, one has been brought home for exhibition, to give Americans additional proof that life may linger and flicker in the system, after the clamp and pully have done their worst to torture the work of God. The attraction of gold has loosened more men than any other cause, for a century. They are now on your western coast. Christianity has sent out missionaries to convert the heathen;—and heathenism, following the example of Scipio, has come to our land and bids the church to make new enlistments, or check the career of her Hannibals, and bring them to the defence of her own firesides and altars.

An eminent Briton has lately given us the friendly admonition—long since uttered by a venerated and still living leader in the churches of Vermont—to save our country for the sake of the world! Christians abroad seem to regard us as peculiarly qualified to lead in the conversion of the world to Christ, and hence the exhortation to save our own republic. There have been republics before. We have heard of that in Greece, with twenty helots to a single freeman; and of the extended power and dominion of military Rome, that at the tread of her cohorts, and at the scream of her eagle, men trembled as at the premonition of a coming earthquake. There have been republics in modern Europe. There was one on this continent, two hundred years before its discovery. That brave band of mountaineers maintained their independence against the sweeping armies of Montozuma. But no republic, before ours, knowing Christianity, has been able to extend it. Cabined, cribbed, and confined, they have had no power or room to expand; while the danger with us is that we cannot stop the expansion. The vine brought out of Egypt, not clambering the walls of a narrow home, but covering the hills with its shadow and stretching its way to the river and sea, leads us to fear it may not carry in its extended branches the virtue and vigor of the parent stock.

Another source of confidence reposed in us is, that in this nation men command themselves and their resources. In Scotland, the land is in the hands of three thousand proprietors; in England, in the hands of thirty thousand. Thirty five millions of serfs labor to uphold the extended despotism of Russia. In Egypt, serfs toiled to build mausoleums for dead kings; in Mexico and Peru, to build hanging bridges and highways for the march of Incas and armies. In this nation, men own the soil they till, and garner the products for themselves; they erect the government, and make the laws, and choose the rulers for themselves; they ply the commerce, and rear the factories, and build the railroads for themselves. There is one railroad they will yet build; it will reach to the going down of the sun, and form a continuous and unbroken line from ocean to ocean. It will be a great work for civilization, for agriculture, for commerce, and Christianity. Your Society has a deep interest in it. Men of our age will live to see it done; and the telegraph following in its footsteps; and intelligence crossing the continent in advance of the sun; and the morning news of New York transmitted, and printed, and read, as the morning news in San Francisco. Then, truly, deep will call unto deep; the Atlantic and Pacific may join in the morning matin and evening vesper!

Let the people, having the resources of this great nation in their own hands, be called on to save their own territory for freedom and Christianity, and that call will be answered. Let all Christians, in all parts of this land, each in their own order, act in concert for the same great end. Laying aside all sectarian rivalry and every other weight, let them imitate the brothers of our revolution, agreeing that one should take care of farms and families at home, while the other went forth to perils abroad for the salvation of the country. Let it be seen that patriots and Christians pray and act alike for the welfare of the land, by a union of all patriotic and christian hearts for the sake of the Union.

I will not renew the discussion as to the qualifications of the ministers to be sent. From all I know of their situation and character, and especially from those whom they have selected to do their business abroad—like the late honored and now lamented Thurston—I judge the people in the territories to be eminently practical. By a change of atmosphere—rarer or denser—they seem to acquire an accelerated motion. They will readily strip the mask from the hypocrite, and as quickly learn to honor the honest ambassador of Christ. This being true, send ministers of piety, of common sense, of learning, of versatility of talent, to meet new men in new situations, and under new impulses, and move them in the right direction. Send on one quack to prescribe a regimen of health, and a hundred physicians should follow to cure the diseases it will generate. There, should be young men with the ardor and energy and hope of youth; and mature men, with the judicious confidence and the judicious diffidence that springs from experience. Some good may be done by those who can create commotion only on the surface, but along with them send other men who will go down to the foundations of the great deep, and work patiently and noiselessly, till the coral reef shall lift its head above the wave and invite the extension of a continent—men who can work for the salvation of the soul, and the salvation of the state, and trust to God and posterity for a reward!

Anniversaries of Auxiliaries.

PHILADELPHIA HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Philadelphia Home Missionary Society held its eleventh annual meeting in Philadelphia, on the afternoon of April 22d, 1851, when the Report was presented, officers chosen, and other business transacted. Arrangements were made for a public Anniversary, on the evening of the 4th of May following.

The Anniversary was accordingly held at the time appointed, in the Third Presbyterian Church.

After the introductory devotional exercises, the Secretary referred the congregation to the printed abstract of the Eleventh Report, which had been placed in the pews, for a general view of the operations of the Society during the past year.

He then briefly alluded to the loss the Society had experienced in the recent and sudden death of F. A. Raybold, Esq., an esteemed member of its Executive Committee. "Mr. R. participated, a few days ago, in the deliberations of the Annual Meeting, and we expected to meet with him on this occasion, but his seat is vacant. While we are mingling in these services, he sleeps in death! We condole with this church and congregation in their bereavement. You have lost a fellow-member, endeared to you by various kind offices. He was efficient as an officer in the management of the temporal concerns of the church, and beloved as a ruling elder. But while we lament his departure, we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Having finished his work on earth, he has entered into the rest prepared for the people of God. This unexpected event admonishes us to 'watch, for we know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.'"

The hymn was then sung, commencing, "Hear what the voice from heaven proclaims," &c.

The Rev. Dr. Stearns, according to previous arrangement, preached the annual sermon. His discourse was founded on Rev. xii. 2. "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." It was an instructive and impressive discourse, well suited to commend the cause of Home Missions to the prayers and generous patronage of the christian patriot.

Annual Report.

The Report is rendered specially interesting by abundant extracts from the letters of the missionaries, thus introducing the reader to the interior of the several congregations, and making them acquainted with the peculiarities of missionary life in what were, till lately, the mountain solitudes of the "Keystone State." Much hard work has been done there already; but there is still much more to be done.

An illustration of success and of grateful acknowledgment is found in the returns from Williamsport, Pa.

"The Second Presbyterian Church of Williamsport was organized in December, 1840, with but fifteen members, most of whom possessed but little of this world's wealth. They probably would never have undertaken so bold an enterprise, had they not been encouraged to hope for assistance in the support of their pastor from your Society. But, relying on your aid, and on the blessing of God, they determined to go forward. A revival of religion commenced under the very first sermon that was preached, and the work continued with scarcely any interruption for two years; during which time ninety-five persons were received on profession of their faith. Thus, God smiled upon the little band, and caused them to grow and prosper. * * * *

"Things at first seemed disheartening. But the darkness by degrees passed away. Our heavy debt has been paid off, with a trifling exception. Our Sabbath school room has been very neatly finished and furnished. Our ground has been enclosed, and planted with evergreens. Our Sabbath school numbers about one hundred and seventy-five in regular attendance. Our Bible class, which has been kept up from the first Sabbath I preached here, varies in numbers, from thirty to fifty members, according to the season. Twice, during my ministry, has God visited us with seasons of refreshing from his presence. During the last six months twenty-seven have been added to the church—nineteen of them on profession of their faith. And there are still a number indulging the hope of acceptance with God, who will probably unite with us at our next communion. Our present number of members is one hundred and thirty-two; and a more united and harmonious congregation I have never known.

"Viewing, therefore, both our temporal and spiritual condition, we have reason to set up our Ebenezer, and say—'Hitherto hath the Lord helped us.' We now regard this church as established on a firm footing. We feel ourselves able, with the blessing of God, to take care of ourselves, without further missionary aid. Indeed, for the last two years, our burden on the Society has been light; inasmuch as we have been paying back a large proportion of what we received.— We feel grateful for the assistance you have rendered us in our time of weakness; and henceforward we shall endeavor to evince our gratitude by aiding you to do for other infant churches what you have done for us.

“At the annual meeting of the congregation, on the first Monday of January, some resolutions were passed, which I herewith transmit to you.

“At a meeting of the congregation of the Second Presbyterian Church of Williamsport, Pa., it was unanimously “Resolved, That whilst we recognise that for both temporal and spiritual prosperity we are dependent on God, from whom alone prosperity can come; we are yet deeply sensible of our obligations to the Home Missionary Society, whose benevolent assistance aided and encouraged us when our number was small, and our resources limited.

“Resolved, That in taking leave of the Home Missionary Society, the thanks of this church are due to them for their liberal and timely aid when our church was weak and embarrassed in its pecuniary resources by the pressure of necessary and burthensome expenditures.

“Resolved, That it shall be our earnest endeavor not only to repay the debt which their christian benevolence has imposed upon us, but, so far as our means will allow, to increase our contributions to their funds, that they may be enabled to enlarge the sphere of their operations, and to extend to others that assistance so liberally bestowed on us.”

Summary.

During the past year, six churches have given notice that they will need no further missionary aid, accompanying this notice with expressions of gratitude for the help afforded them during the period of their infancy; and nine new fields have been entered on. Three houses of worship were finished. Two others are nearly completed; one of them with a parsonage. Several other church buildings have been commenced; sites have been secured, and subscriptions are in progress.

Spiritual Growth.

The year that has closed, has been one of special spiritual prosperity in a number of the missionary churches; and some have enjoyed those delightful seasons denominated revivals of religion.— In a few cases where the reports of last year were not only barren of interest, but expressed fears lest the churches would become extinct, because of the spiritual deadness and worldliness of the members, this year they bring cheering intelligence. The Spirit has been poured out from on high; saints have been revived; backsliders reclaimed; sinners converted from the error of their ways; and the hitherto sorrowing and desponding servants of God, inspired with joy and hope.

Two hundred persons have been hopefully converted the past year; and one hundred and eighty added to the churches. Two thousand four hundred and eighty-four Sabbath-school pupils are receiving instruction in connection with our missionary churches, and have the use of 5,960 volumes, suited to their juvenile capacities. $1,073 are reported as having been contributed to the various benevolent objects.

The cause of temperance has received a new impulse in many places. Its friends are putting forth efforts to stay the desolating evil, and Providence has smiled upon their endeavors. God alone is our hope and help in this reformation. Unless he favor the cause, all the wisdom and power of man will avail nothing.— This conviction is beginning to take a strong hold of the minds of Christians, and they are in many places laying out their energies, in reliance on God, for the suppression of this vice.

State of the Treasury.

Balance in the Treasury per last Report, $410 23. Received at the Philadelphia Home Missionary Society's office from March 1, 1850, to March 1, 1851, $8,185 40. Received at the office of the Parent Society in New York, during the same period, $3,052 54. Total resources for the year, $11,648 17.

Amount expended in this field during the year by the Philadelphia Home Missionary Society, $7,747 08. Expended by the Parent Society in distant parts of the United States, (including $100 remitted by us to New York,) $2,152 54. Total expenditures, $10,899 62; leaving a balance in the hands of the Treasurer of the Philadelphia Home Missionary Society, March 1, 1851, of $748 65. Against this balance there was due, or coming due during March, more than $400. By comparing the receipts of the past year with those of the previous one, it will be seen that our field has yielded an increase of $652 62. This increase is owing to a greater proportion than usual being derived from legacies the year that has closed.

The Field and the Work to be done.

The field assigned to us for cultivation is extensive, embracing four States, each in some places exceedingly destitute. In many parts of the territory of this Society, there are moral wastes as dreary as any to be found in the wide extent of our country. And in cultivating these places, we act in concert with the Presbyteries within whose bounds they lie. We have found the co-operation of these ecclesiastical bodies of great importance to the vigorous and successful prosecution of our work; and we attribute much of the success that has resulted from our labors to the aid that presbyters have rendered us, by suggesting important points within their respective bounds on which we might profitably expend our means.

Some of our missionary churches are still struggling with difficulties, which interfere with their growth. They are kept feeble, by the removal of young men and others, who seek places of more enterprise and business. In this state of things, for these churches to hold their own, is to make progress; and while they do not themselves enjoy the advantage of the seed they sow, the cause of religion in general is advanced by their efforts. Some of these little churches are feeders to larger ones more favorably located. We deem it unwise to withdraw entirely our aid from such churches, especially when we see them making all possible exertions to sustain the Gospel among them, and that God affixes the seal of his approbation, by employing them as the instruments of saving sinners. The majestic river depends, for its supply of water, upon a great many little tributary streams. Dry up these streams, insignificant as they seem, and soon the mighty river will fail. Analogous consequences might follow, from an entire neglect of these humble missionary churches.

Encouragement.

The cheering results of the past year's operations, show that our cause has the signal sanction of Heaven. It is gaining annually in favor with the churches, and the important openings in the providence of God, that are brought to view every year, prove that we have yet a great and important work to do on our own immediate field. Much has been accomplished for church extension, by this auxiliary in the last sixteen years. More than forty churches have been raised to a position of self-support through its assistance, and some of these are among the strong and influential churches of our denomination. At least two thirds of these churches, during their partial dependence upon our Society, erected their present houses of worship. While the Society aided them in the support of their pastors, they were encouraged to embark in the enterprise of church building, and to complete so important a work. The missionary aid received from our Society, stimulated the congregations to make sacrifices to secure the permanence of their organization, by building places of worship, where they and their children might worship God, and which they would regard with peculiar emotions as their religious home. Every year, some of the congregations, aided by us, tell us they have commenced the erection of a place of worship, and others inform us that they have completed such buildings; and generally these buildings are unencumbered with debt, or nearly so, when they are dedicated to the worship of God.

MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Public Meeting of this Auxillary was held in the Tremont Temple, Boston, May 27th, at 7½ o'clock P. M. After the opening of the meeting with prayer, and the presentation of the Report by the Secretary, Rev. J. S. CLARK, able addresses were delivered by Rev. EDWARD BEECHER, D. D., of Boston, and Rev. R. S. STORRS, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The following are the leading items of the Report:—

Accounts.

A balance of $1,014 63 was in the Treasurer's hands at the opening of the year. He has since received, from all sources, $31,168 61.

The disbursements for the same period are $6,354 58 paid to missionaries in Massachusetts; $1,046 27 in defraying incidental expenses; and $24,000 remitted to the American Home Missionary Society, to be appropriated at their discretion on the field at large. The additional sum of $6,410 55 has gone from different parts of the State directly to that treasury, without passing through this; so that the entire receipts from Massachusetts are $37,579 16; and $30,410 55 of this sum have been expended out of the State. As compared with those of the previous year, the total receipts are $1,984 12 less; while the regular and reliable collections from the churches are $338 26 more,—the legacies amounting to only $4,548 95, while the year preceding they amounted to $6,930 33.

Fields of Labor.

The Society has had under its care the past year, in Massachusetts, 53 missionary fields; 4 on the list have disappeared, and 4 others have taken their places; 5 of those reported have relinquished their hold on the Society since the year began; so that the number actually receiving aid at present is only 48, while 17 of these have found themselves able to assume an increased proportion of their minister's support, since the last annual meeting.

Revivals of Religion.

The most decisive token of divine favor is found, in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on several of the feeblest of these missionary flocks, and the hopeful conversion of 130 souls, in them all, as reported on the 1st of April. Some of these operations have indicated the presence of unusual power from above. In Pelham, after the pastor had gone away discouraged, and the Executive Committee had nearly abandoned the hope of being able to save the church from extinction, the arm of the Lord wrought salvation,—though not without the use of human agency. Besides the labors of several students from Amherst College, a neighboring pastor, while his own meeting house was undergoing repairs, took the oversight of this forsaken flock, for three weeks. At the close of his gratuitous labors he reported as follows:—"I have preached seventeen sermons there in all, and visited eighty-one families. My visit appears to have been very opportune and providential. The congregation on the last Sabbath numbered one hundred and sixty, and the Sabbath school one hundred and twenty. I found some forty hopeful conversions, and others in an inquiring state. * * * I have become much interested in that field. The service which I have been enabled to perform in it, is a very humble one, but I felt, that, from its nature, it was peculiarly pleasing to Christ. I never before realized (and wonder that I did not) what a special sympathy the Saviour must feel with a feeble, struggling church.

Efforts of feeble Churches to sustain themselves.

The average amount of missionary aid appropriated the past year to each assisted parish, has been one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Deduct this from the average salary of their ministers, (four hundred and forty-four dollars,) and it leaves three hundred and nineteen dollars as the average sum which each has furnished for ministerial support. This amounts to just one per cent. of their average valuation, (thirty-two thousand dollars,) as obtained from the town assessors' books. It is to be observed, however, that among these feeble parishes, as among the members composing each, there are some that cheerfully go beyond this standard of effort, while others are hardly persuaded to make even an attempt to reach it.

The first of these classes is well represented by the West Parish in Hawley, which is mentioned in the table as having relinquished its hold on this Society during the year. The following extract from the pastor's final report, describes the method of effecting it:

"My report, due the first of November, would have been sent sooner, but for an effort of this congregation to rise to independency. The matter was brought before them on the last Sabbath in October. This was cordially responded to in an informal meeting of the society the next day. The result is, that an amount of funds sufficient to meet the society's expenses for the present year has been raised. But a few days previous to this effort, the congregation had raised seventy dollars to improve the singing. The amount contributed the last year, for the various benevolent societies, is sixty-seven dollars and fifty cents.

"In company with one of the assessors I have just looked at the valuation of this society on the assessors' books. We find it less than twenty-five thousand dollars. Scarcely one-third of this is in the hands of church members; while just about one-third the members of the society owe. So that, in reality, the amount of property, real and personal, free from debt, does not exceed seventeen thousand dollars, according to valuation. Yet, with ordinary prosperity, the society hope in future to be able promptly to meet all current expenses, and to be always on the list of donors.

"The congregation in West Hawley, before the communion table on the first Sabbath in November, publicly expressed their deep sense of gratitude to the Massaachusetts Home Missionary Society for their paternal watch, care and aid, during the twenty years of their perilous infancy and childhood."

Aspect of the Field at large.

The operations here reported within the limits of our own little state, important as they are in themselves, and still more important in their relations, have absorbed but a small part of our funds. More than four-fifths of the receipts from Massachusetts have been appropriated to the AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, at New York, to aid in evangelizing the almost boundless field that has fallen under the care of that truly National Institution.

The history of Home Missions in this country has, from the first, been the history of great effects from little causes. Every movement has been like the silent and hidden, but resistless action of leaven—bringing out results which we can trace to no adequate cause, without supposing the unseen hand of God employed in their production. The fact that a new church can be planted and reared in an old waste, or an infant settlement, during the brief period of seven years, and at an annual cost to the Missionary Society of only $165 per annum; the fact that several thousands of evangelical churches in our land have actually been brought up to a self-supporting condition at this trifling expense, and by this short process, since the Home Missionary enterprise commenced,—these facts proclaim the existence of an energy more than human. They indicate the presence of an all-powerful, though an invisible agency.

Missionary Intelligence.

IOWA.

Christian Emigrants Welcome.

This is the season when the great tide of emigration sets westward. It has been pouring in upon us for three or four weeks. The flood brings along some valuable families. Two families are about settling here from western New York. One of them a Deacon of the Congregational Church in Collins, New York, with a large and intelligent family. It will be an invaluable addition to our society. I cannot describe to you the pleasure with which the home missionary hails such arrivals. After having fought the battle almost single handed for years, he knows how to appreciate fresh troops. But a small part of the emigration stops here. It is pouring into the new counties on the North and West of us.

Opening for Ministers in the Western Counties.

The facilities for settlement in these counties are good, and they are rapidly filling up. A score of faithful ministers will soon find ample opportunity for missionary labor in these counties, and I trust "the Lord of the harvest" is raising up a band of young in our colleges and seminaries, to labor for Christ in this and other portions of this new country.

How a Missionary feels in view of the Destitutions.

There are many points in the settlements west of us, where a missionary could find work enough now. Churches are already forming on the Missouri river, and calling for ministers! Settlements are forming even west of the Missouri. Who will supply the spiritual wants of these rising multitudes? I sometimes almost resolve to go west myself, and leave my present place for some one else. I cannot endure the thought that this beautiful country should be given up to Satan. I think our pious young men at the East would say, without hesitation, "Here are we, send us," if they could be impressed with a sense of the importance of this work. You may think me too sanguine; but I regard the work of elevating these western communities, socially and religiously, by planting churches and institutions of learning, as paramount to every other benevolent enterprise. Not a church nor a college can be planted here whose influence will not be felt ultimately the world over. Every such institution brings this people more and more under the power of the Gospel, and increases the moral influence of the nation upon the world. I pray that God will wake up our pious young men to this subject.

From Rev. B. A. Spaulding, Ottumwa, Wappelo Co.

A Christian Community eight years old.

This day closes the second quarter of my eighth year of missionary service in Iowa. Eight years ago this day, was the last day that the native Indians held possession of the region of country around and upon which this town now stands. The Des Moines River Association of Congregational churches, has recently held its annual meeting here. This Association now consists of ten churches and nine ministers. In its connection, are nearly 300 communicants. To seven of these churches, during the past year, were added 46 members. The number of scholars in Sabbath schools is 323. Since my last report, eight persons have been added to this church, six by profession and two by letter; four of these have become hopeful converts during the last winter. Our church now numbers forty one.

In February of 1846, this church was organized with eight members. Last Saturday, I was installed as its pastor. On Sabbath, Rev. Mr. Reed, Agent of the A. H. M. S. in this state, preached a sermon to the church and congregation on the subject of Home Missions. A minister, formerly from New England, remarked that it sounded very strange to hear Brother Reed saying what we must do for Home Missions, we; while we can almost see the foot prints of the savage, and hear the echo of his war whoop about us, talking about Home Missions! and why should we not? We are children of Home Missions, and may we not soon become supporters and defenders of our parent? But few years, we hope, and have strong reason to believe, will pass, before we shall cease to need your aid, and joyfully prosecute the work of refunding what has been received from your treasury.

What changes do a few short years work out in our new settlements. How soon is the Indian hunting ground turned into the fruitful field, adorned with churches and blessed with the sweet and heavenly influence of Christianity. And how speedily do those whom we nurture in their infancy, become our most efficient helpers in extending into regions, yet more remote and destitute, the Gospel of the kingdom.

A Missionary's Estimate of the Work of the Society.

The following estimate is not a matter of speculation drawn up in the study, but the result of observation and experience in the open field of toil and patient endurance. The presence of such missionaries in the distant West, unwearied in their own labors, unsparing in their sacrifices, and looking with an eye so intelligent upon the great enterprise with which they are associated, and with a faith so strong in the potency of the Gospel to reclaim the wandering and the lost, and make our land the glory of all lands, may well encourage the hearts of the friends of missions at the East.—May the Lord of the harvest multiply such laborers a hundred fold, and give his people the means and the hearts to sustain them, and the privilege to share with them their recompense of reward.

The three years and over, of my employment under the patronage of your Society, have not served to lessen my estimate of the wisdom and vast importance of the enterprise in which you are engaged. There are kindred societies which are, and ought to be, dear to us all; but I think if one will reflect, he will see that yours should stand second to no other. In efficiency and adaptation to accomplish the object which all these have in view—building up and extending the Redeemer's kingdom—nothing can be better than to station watchmen on the frontiers to collect men together into churches, thus uniting the scattered firebrands and kindling a flame, where else all would be darkness, that he who leaves the army at home to seek here his fortune, may be reminded of his duty and guided by its beacon light; and a powerful influence may thence go abroad to bring the surrounding desert waste under the benign and salutary power of the Gospel. When this is done, however benevolent the object may be, and however much isolated individuals may be benefitted, still experience proves that, in most cases, with those persons the good effected remains, and with them it dies. It is when men are associated and worship together, that the fires of piety live, and permanently burn. This is Christ's method of promoting religion, and converting nations. Besides collecting and forming into companies the straying warriors, your Society marshals the whole army of God to such movements, that each victory strengthens and adds to its number the forces of those conquered, and turns the guns of each stronghold which is taken against the common enemy.

I see by the Annual Reports that the number of preachers and churches under your care have doubled once in between eight and nine years. By a mathematical calculation, one may see that had this missionary movement commenced at the close of the revolutionary war with the number with which it did commence, instead of 1,000 missionaries and 1,500 churches, 60,000 missionaries and 90,000 churches, with the yearly addition of 330,000 church members, would now be under the patronage of your Society.—Include in the calculation the missionaries, churches and members that in the course of things might be expected to pass yearly from under that patronage, and the number to be connected with other churches, and we reach a result and contemplate a consummation which present us our whole country as the garden of the Lord, realizing the prediction, they shall all be taught of God and, in our country, merge all rule, authority and power in one kingdom—the reign of Christ.

This one enterprise, the churches, at the time and with the beginning of which we have spoken, might have sustained; and though, by some mishap, all that we have supposed had not been actually accomplished; still school houses and churches, the order, intelligence, and piety of the best portions of New England would now appear and prevail in every part of our land, and those of a faith and order in common with ourselves, exist in millions “rooted and grounded;” and that jargon of sects whose name is “legion,” and which is now really the most serious obstacle in the way of extending Christianity in its purity, would be unknown.

Time has not been properly improved; what ought to have been, has not been, done, and the past cannot be recalled; still it may be a lesson for the future. If our population doubles once in twenty years, and your missionaries, churches and members, once in eight years, it will be seen that you are gaining ground; the ratio of increase may be expected to enlarge as the work proceeds, and the moral power of religion gain in its influence on the power of immorality and irreligion; and, if the churches and your missionaries are faithful to their trust, a consummation may be expected which will turn the whole energy—the moral and financial power of this vast future empire to bear on one object—the regeneration of the entire earth.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. J. B. Preston, Berlin, Marquette Co.

A good Beginning.

I am seated to report to your Society the results of my labors for the past three months. They have been, with me, months of toil, solicitude and encouragement. I arrived at this place about the middle of September with my family, and soon found that I must provide myself a house for the winter, as there were none suitable to be rented. This, necessarily, occupied much of my time for eight weeks, when we were settled in our own house.

I found, on my arrival, that the American Home Missionary Society, by its missionary, had, three months previous, visited this new and interesting field, looked up the professed people of God, and organized 6 churches of 14 members. Through the urgent solicitations of the brethren of this church, together with other circumstances, I was induced to feel that it was my duty to leave Western New York and come to their help. You can imagine better than I can express the reception your missionary received. I found, indeed, a new field. About two years ago the first settlers arrived, but now the town contains nearly 1,000 inhabitants. During the past year, more than 100 dwellings have been erected.

How a House of Worship was built.

But for this whole community there was no house erected in which to worship God. Our only place was a storehouse on the banks of Fox river, and of this we were deprived after a few Sabbaths. We then succeeded in procuring a third loft over a store. We soon found this room too small and very uncomfortable, crowded as it uniformly was. The thought of spending the winter thus was painful to us, as many who wished to attend upon the preached Gospel would be deprived the privilege. The question arose, What can be done? On the 10th of December we met for consultation. At this meeting a plan was presented, the expense estimated for putting up a shanty meeting house, 24 ft. by 42, with shingled roof, covering it with rough boards, battening the cracks, ceiling the inside with half inch boards, and filling between with saw dust. If $250 could be raised by subscription, we resolved to undertake the work. It devolved upon myself to raise the sum if possible. The success was beyond our most sanguine expectations. In two days, $350 were subscribed, and some of the timber for the frame on the ground. We were not, by cold or storm, prevented from prosecuting our labor till the work was completed. The second Sabbath in January, we were permitted to worship God in our own sanctuary. The house was filled, and thanksgiving, I doubt not from hearts sincere, ascended to God for such signal manifestations of his goodness. This house, we expect, will accommodate us, until we are able to put up a permanent building, though the prospect is we shall soon need more room. The ladies, encouraged by our success, immediately undertook to raise funds sufficient to procure lamps, Bibles and curtains. This they have accomplished, and have now organized a benevolent society, that they may, at all times, be ready to aid in advancing the cause of Christ.

We have much to encourage us; such has been the success which has attended our efforts, and such the respect paid by this community to the institutions of the Gospel. Though our work thus far, as you perceive, has been principally preparatory, yet the Gospel has not been preached in vain. There is that attention, stillness and solemnity in our meetings, which indicate the presence of the Spirit of God applying the truth to the heart.

It is our prayer that the Lord will revive his work, and gather into his fold multitudes of precious souls.

Ground lost by the Intermission of Missionary Labor.

For the three months that I have been here, the best that can be said respecting the condition and progress of our church is, that we seem to have made a pretty good beginning—to have taken a fair start. The vantage ground which had been gained in previous years was almost entirely lost, in consequence of the long interval of almost a year and a half, during which there were no public religious services. The disastrous effects of such an interruption, in such a place as this, no man will be likely to understand, except from immediate observation. By the efforts of two or three men, whose courage and energy deserve high praise, a church edifice was erected during the period specified. It gives us a great advantage, that we have a neat and commodious house of worship; the finishing touches will be given to it in a few days, and we hope to dedicate it to sacred uses in about a fortnight. It would be very gratifying and encouraging, if we could see our church filled on the Sabbath, a sight which it has never yet been my pleasure to witness. The inhabitants of this place were for years without regular religious services; they fell into habits of neglect, and the holy day was hardly distinguished by them at all. It is very hard to break down such habits; it is one of the most painful facts in my circumstances, that I cannot reach the many, except occasionally, with the truth of the Gospel. There has been, however, a slow increase in the number of attendants upon the Sabbath. Most of those who can properly be said to belong to our congregation, show a good degree of interest in the prosperity of the church.

Hope only in the Power of the Gospel.

The state of things, morally and religiously, is worse in this community than I have ever before seen it anywhere. Sin, open and outrageous, abounds; all sorts of errors are held. There are some skeptics and many Universalists, whose style of life, bad every way, is the natural and necessary growth of their principles. If there was ever a place in want of Gospel influences, here is one. Nothing, I am sure, nothing but that Gospel which is the power of God unto salvation, can elevate society here, restore public sentiment to a healthy tone, and allure the devotees of mammon and vicious pleasure to the peaceful paths of true wisdom. A genuine, thorough and extensive revival—that is what we want and seek—that, in spite of all inauspicious appearances, is what I venture, sometimes, when faith is strong and trust full, to expect. If by the aid of your Society, under God, this place should be recovered from the arch enemy, one of whose strongholds it now is, that one victory were enough to satisfy any man that the Home Missionary work is worth its cost a thousand times told. Such a victory, desperate as the case now looks, is possible with God; for it, we will hope and pray and toil.

Church Members without Letters and without Reputation.

The Lord is blessing this church with an increase of members and strength. Accessions have been made to it at every season of communion since its organization. Fourteen have been added since the first of last March, and the addition has been of an interesting character. Four out of the five that joined by profession had been connected with the church before coming here. But not taking letters with them, and being long absent from the churches to which they belonged before they had selected and fixed themselves in their new homes, their church relation became dissolved by time. On this account, they were under the necessity of postponing their union with the church here, until they had obtained a christian reputation among us in another way. This method of procedure is detrimental to the piety of the persons concerned, and occasions embarrassment to the churches here and to the missionaries. Were I permitted to address the pastors and the churches of the East, I would earnestly implore, that when their brethren leave for the West, they send them away, not only with their best counsels, and a fervent prayer for God's blessing to attend them, but that they also furnish them, if worthy, with the credentials of their membership; that when they arrive here, they may at once secure our confidence, and that we may be immediately blessed with their fellowship and co-operation. This course would prevent some of those lamentable departures from the way of the Lord, over which we have frequent occasion to mourn.

Accommodations for Worship.

There is to be a meeting this week to devise means for erecting a house of worship. On this item your missionaries could fill out glowing reports. Six months of experience in northern Wisconsin has often made me think of the pains taken to secure the comfort of speaker and hearer in our Eastern churches. When I enjoyed them, I sometimes heard people complain of inconveniences. The temperature might not be exactly right. But in Wisconsin we accommodate the houses of worship with a range of temperature, from 10 below to 100 above zero.

In our small village, too, we have a range of time, almost as wide as is that regulating the temperature of our school houses. Often, one third of the congregation come in after the sermon has commenced. Every time my eye glances at Meneeley's advertisement, and I think of the annoyance of the preceding Sabbath, I could wish myself possessor of a part of Astor's estate. If, with its possession, I could unite a benevolent heart, I would be a liberal subscriber to a new propaganda, furnishing the poor churches at the West with bells, thereby greatly increasing facilities for doing good.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. Joseph Fowler, Lacon, Marshall Co.

When your commission came to hand, I was lying low with pneumonia. I had recently resumed my labors with invigorated health and cheering hopes. Just about this time, a fine bell was procured from Boston; and it was truly animating and encouraging to hear its solemn tones inviting the citizens to the house of God. The number of worshipers increased. More serious attention was given to the word. Our meetings for prayer were also better attended by members of the church; and brethren seemed to have more of the spirit of prayer. I began to hope that the Lord was about to revive his work, when I was suddenly prostrated by disease, and could only pray for Zion and for perishing sinners. I felt as if I could leave the world in peace, if I could but witness the effusions of the Holy Spirit, and the conversion of sinners. I have reason to bless God that one so unworthy is permitted to resume his labors, with the hope of reaping the golden harvest. My prayer is that God would sanctify this affliction to myself and family and to my people. I am still very feeble, but was able to give one discourse last Sabbath.

A few weeks before I was taken ill, I tried to perform more labor than I could endure. Besides the ordinary labors of the Sabbath and pastoral duties, I have endeavored to sustain an appointment in the eastern part of the county. There is a great demand for missionary labor in various places in the county; and I regret that I am not able to meet this demand. All my resources of time and strength seem to be put in requisition in the village and immediate vicinity. The population of Lacon already exceeds 1000, and is rapidly increasing.

From Rev. C. R. Clarke, Granville, Putnam Co.

Wolves in Sheep's Clothing.

Mr. C. is laboring in the destitutions in, and adjacent to, Putnam Co. After speaking of encouraging indications at several points in his large and destitute field of labor, he refers to some of the prevailing forms of error and opposition which he encounters.

My heart almost faints at the difficulties which I have to meet; and these are not found alone, or principally, among worldlings, but among religionists. A class of Baptists called "Ironsides" go strongly against any moral movements. This Bible distribution is "all a speculation, a money making scheme." They say men are not moral agents; that there is but one moral agent in the universe and that is God. The fact is, that in this vicinity, the great obstacle to the conversion of the impenitent consists in the inconsistencies of those who profess to be religious.

The "come-outer" spirit has also cast a blight over this fair field of promise. But the Lord reigns, and he will cause the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain. The promises of God are exceeding precious to me, and they hold me up when the dark clouds gather and the angry waters rise and seem ready to swallow me up. "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." "Lo, I am with you alway." With such assurances I cannot, nay, I will not, despond, especially when I have the evidence that my labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Effect of a Funeral Service.

A few weeks since I was called to preach at the funeral of a very dear young brother, who was hopefully brought into the kingdom through my ministry, three years since. He was studying to qualify himself for usefulness as a minister, and intended to go abroad as a missionary, should he become qualified. But disease suddenly arrested him; but his last messages were to his young friends, and particularly to some who were in their academic course. He exhorted them to become missionaries of the cross and preachers of the Gospel to their perishing fellow men. The preaching on the occasion of this young man's funeral was used as the instrument, by the Spirit of God, of awakening another young man who is now, I trust, a new creature in Christ Jesus. He is, in his studies, far in advance of the young man who died, and of very superior talents. Should his health, which is now poor, be sufficient, I have very little doubt that he will be a bright luminary in the Zion of our God. This conversion, occurring at this time, when so little interest appears to be felt in this vicinity, greatly revived my heart and caused many to rejoice.

From Rev. J. H. Russ, Ewington, Effingham Co.

A Wide and Hard Field.

The field assigned to Mr. R., comprises two of the largest counties in Southern Illinois. As in the case of other missionaries who are engaged in such pioneer service, one of the first results of his labors has been the disclosure of the deplorable destitutions of his field, and the urgent demand for additional laborers.

I find much more labor is imperiously demanded in this county than I can perform. Two efficient and faithful missionaries would find enough to occupy their whole time, and exhaust all their energies. In different parts of this county (Effingham,) and the adjacent parts of Cumberland and Jasper Counties, in a territory twenty miles in length and sixteen in width, we have a church of fourteen members, six of whom were received last Sabbath. In this field there are no less than eight important places for stated Sabbath preaching; and could they be supplied with sufficient frequency and regularity, incalculable good, I have no doubt, would result. In three neighborhoods, in the south, the east, and the north part of this territory, are three nuclei of churches, which will demand separate organizations as soon as their members will allow, as they are too far apart to meet together.

We have not the privilege of reporting a revival, but the state of feeling has recently appeared more than usually interesting. But the enemy is coming in like a flood. The rage for horse-racing has for some weeks prevailed to an unparalleled degree. A noted professional horse-racer takes his wife with him to the races, where she mingles with the men as well as with the women, bantering them for a "bet." They are now, and have been for several days, here on this business. "A shameless woman is the worst of men." But this unsexing conduct is, in this community, by no means disreputable. The jockeys train their horses on the race ground on the Sabbath with impunity, and members of churches, claiming to be evangelical, do not, so far as I know, even remonstrate against it. And this is not surprising, for doctrine regulates practice. Their creed in general is, as taught preceptively by most of their leaders, and, as it appears, practically by all, that the observance of the fourth commandment is a great sin. I believe the Sabbath is spent more or less in every family as a day of social merriment and recreation. Hence, minds even though pensive in the sanctuary, are almost sure to be filled with levity before the congregation separates, by the trifling conversation to which they are exposed. The effects of the Gospel, though apparently powerful while it is coming from the lips of the living speaker, generally seem more evanescent than the flying cloud. In view of such influences, I am often, after preaching to an apparently serious and anxious congregation, filled with the most gloomy apprehensions that my message will prove only a "savor of death unto death."

But though I am often disheartened, I think I have, on the whole, great reason to thank God and take courage. Light seems to gleam amid the darkness which covers this field. In every moral point of view, a manifest improvement has taken place within the last ten months. And our prospects, though dark as Egypt, compared with what they are in many places, seem, on the whole, brighter now than they have appeared, for any considerable length of time, at any former period.

From Rev. E. B. Olmsted, Greenville, Bond Co.

Prospects of Southern Illinois.

The internal improvements, in progress and projected, in this portion of the State, and the consequent development of its natural resources impart to it new importance as a field of missionary labor. The facts stated in the following communication in reference to one of the Southern Counties, which may probably be taken as a sample of the whole region, will aid in forming a correct estimate of its condition and prospects.

I have just returned from the extreme lower part of the State. The prospects of that part of our field are becoming more promising. I preached one Sabbath at Jonesboro, where Rev. Mr. Dearing labored the last year; another Sabbath at Caledonia, 14 miles above Cairo, and at Metropolis City during two days. At the latter place a church has been organized, and another might be organized at Caledonia. C. is the seat of justice for Pulaski Co., formerly a part of Alexander Co. It is a small county containing 194 square miles, has 312 farms and 2,265 inhabitants. Of that number 359, over 20 years of age, cannot read or write. Of course, among such a people error is rife. Within the last year a man who was shot and severely wounded by an indignant husband, for insulting his wife, has succeeded in building up, or associating a church of 114 members. He only asks the people to believe in Christ as the Son of God, and be baptized, which, he says, is all the Scriptures authorize him to ask. He denies the influence of the Holy Spirit and the necessity of private prayer. But the people are becoming weary of this and of kindred forms of heterodoxy, and are looking with anxiety to the establishment of such churches as are supported by your Society. Caledonia contains 194 inhabitants. There are in the county—Campbellites 114, Methodists 216, Roman Catholics 38, United Baptists 89, German Reformed 20, Evangelical Lutherans 32, Presbyterians 12. There is no Sabbath school in the county. This whole region is high and rolling, heavily timbered, and as healthy as other portions of the State, as is proved by the fact that in the last year there were but 56 deaths in a population of 2,265. Much of the sickness arises from exposure and dissipation. These remarks are equally true in regard to the whole southern portion of Illinois. I hope the time will come when the truth will be known in regard to the physical geography of southern Illinois. It is not, as many suppose, a frog pond. On the contrary, I think it may be affirmed, that the country from the mouth of the Ohio to Chester on the Mississippi river, and to Shawneetown on the Ohio—not much short of 100 miles on each river—and the intermediate country, is more broken and diversified than any other portion of the State of equal area, and only needs the improvement of its society to make it one of the most desirable countries in the world. And the causes to effect this consummation so devoutly to be wished, are already in operation. Caledonia is already a distributing office for the different telegraph lines. At that point you may converse with St. Louis, Louisville, Nashville, New Orleans, &c. The construction of the central railroad, now rendered certain, will introduce a population that will revolutionize the country;—and missionaries of the cross should lead the van.

MICHIGAN.

From Rev. O. W. Mather, Mackinac, Mackinac Co.

This is one of the oldest settlements in the Western States. It was founded by Marquette in 1671. The original settlers were mostly Catholics from Canada, and a majority of the inhabitants have always been attached to the Romish Church. In 1820, this place was made the seat of an Indian Agency, and became an important depot of the fur trade, and the resort of several tribes of Indians. A mission was established among them in 1823 by the United Foreign Missionary Society, and was afterwards transferred to the A. B. C. F. M.; but in consequence of the removal of many of the Indians, it was abandoned in 1837. Since that time no regular worship has been maintained by any denomination of Protestants, except in connexion with the garrison at the Fort, till Mr. Mather commenced his labors, under commission from this Society, in August last. The practicability of gathering a permanent Protestant congregation here has heretofore been considered questionable, but the experiment thus far appears hopeful, as the following communication testifies.

This is a very mixed community. In a population variously estimated at from 800 to 1,000, not less, certainly, than "three fifths,"—very likely even a larger proportion—are professed Roman Catholics, consisting of Irish, German, French and Half Breeds. There is a considerable portion of the remaining two fifths, who can hardly, with propriety, be ranked either as Romanists or as Protestants. They may have been born and nurtured amidst the institutions and fostering influences of Protestantism, yet here they are practically heathen, in respect to all religious principles or practices. Among them, also, are those who once made a profession of religion. A remnant there is who feel and manifest an interest in maintaining and enjoying for themselves, their children and the community, the ordinances of religious worship. You must have already inferred that it is but a "remnant," and that not very large. At the same time, I have reason to believe that the influence of the truth is not, by any means, restricted to those who are regular attendants upon my service, but others, only occasional attendants, and even some Romanists have come within the hearing and influence of divine truth.

From the time of my arrival, in August, till some time in October, my services were regularly maintained, on the Sabbath, morning and afternoon, in the "Mission church," a building originally erected and occupied by the missionaries in the service of the A. B. C. F. M. But as the season advanced, and fires became essential to comfort, the place of our service was transferred to the Court House in the village. This place is both more central and comfortable, and here we have remained till the present time. Previously to effecting this change, I had taken the necessary steps for procuring the requisites for a Sabbath school. The result was the donation of a library of 100 vols., together with question books, etc. Immediately after transferring our services to the village, preaching was attended in the morning and evening, and the afternoon was devoted to the exercises of the school. At its organization, the school embraced rather more than thirty scholars, being nearly all the children of the congregation, and some not regularly belonging to the congregation. Removals and other causes have somewhat diminished the number, but otherwise the exercises have been attended with much and uniform interest. I have personally superintended the school; and, as a means of increased usefulness and interest, I sought to enlist the children in the matter of singing, by devoting one evening, sometimes two, in the week, to their improvement and instruction therein. The result of this effort has proved exceedingly favorable and gratifying to all concerned. It has fostered in them a taste for singing, and afforded us good music in the school.

The services for preaching in the morning and evening have been sustained with a tolerably uniform attendance, especially that in the evening, when several, not with us during the day, have been generally present. The attention has been uniformly good and respectful, and with every indication of real interest in the hearers. And here I may say that one of the most attentive and constant hearers, particularly in the evening, has been an intelligent Roman Catholic. My intercourse with the families of Romanists, has become quite considerable, and their treatment of me has been uniformly courteous and respectful. If they harbor a feeling of ill will or jealousy, they have been very successful in the effort to conceal it.

On the whole, I persuade myself that something in the way of, at least, moral improvement, has been accomplished, and, I hope, of religious improvement also.

From Rev. Wm. P. Russell, Memphis, St. Clair Co.

In Journeyings often.

There is so much destitution around us that I find much to be done. Long journeys have frequently to be made through the woods, and over roads that are exceedingly bad, to attend funerals and other religious meetings. I usually, on the Sabbath, preach twice in our meeting house, and then for the third meeting, I go from four to eight miles, where I generally find a school house well filled with attentive hearers. In one of these places we have, at times, nearly or quite two hundred. The house is filled, and a good many remain outside because there is no room for them within. They recently erected in this place a school house of good size; the building is two stories high, and they are finishing the upper room for meetings exclusively. A number of those who have been connected with evangelical churches at the East, and elsewhere, have expressed a desire to have a church organized among them, but they fear the services of a minister cannot be obtained, and if a church were organized it might, in consequence, soon run down. Good shepherds are greatly needed in our newly settled towns, who may devote their time to going from house to house, gathering the scattered sheep of Christ's fold into small churches, that may be encouraged and assisted until able to take care of themselves.

A Pillar fallen.

Our little church has been sorely afflicted of late in the death of one of its deacons. Father Gilbert, as he was familiarly and affectionately called, was a native of Mass. He was hopefully converted in his youth. In the early part of his life he removed with his family to the State of New York, where he remained for a number of years. He came to this state about fifteen years ago and resided in Romeo for a few years, and when a settlement was first made in this place, he with his eight sons located themselves in this wilderness. Deacon Gilbert spent most of his life in teaching, and was favorably known as a successful instructor of youth. In the different places where he has resided, both at the East and in this state, he has held the office of deacon, or ruling elder. When our little church was organized in this place, himself, wife and two of his sons were among the number. From what I can learn in reference to the past life of our departed brother, I infer that he has maintained a consistent walk since his first profession of faith in Christ. During the two and a half years in which I have been acquainted with the deceased, his influence has been very salutary over the church and others with whom he came in contact. When his health would admit he was constantly at the house of God on the Sabbath, and at the meetings for prayer during the week. When at a prayer meeting, he did not sit, like so many professors of religion, as a mere spectator, but was always ready to do his part in making the meeting interesting and profitable. He loved the Word of God, and the family altar, where his fervent petitions daily ascended for his family, for the church and the world. There was so much consistency in his general deportment that during my stay in this place, I have not heard the first whisper against his moral character. His death was sudden, but peaceful and triumphant. When we gathered around his last remains, and looked upon those silent lips from which we had so frequently heard faithful exhortations and humble prayer, I could but desire that his mantle might fall upon many who still live, and that others, who come from the East, may bring with them the same spirit, and thus lift up a standard that shall be for the glory of God, and the salvation of this Great West.

Miscellaneous.

What a Missionary finds "Down East."

We often give sketches of missionary life, and of the privations and trials of the first settlers in the Far West; less frequently do we give the experience of our brethren, and the hardships of those to whom they minister in the "Far East;" as the full reports of missionary labors in that direction less frequently fall into our hands. The following extract, however, from the annual report of Rev. S. Turner, of Bingham, Maine, in the Northern part of the state, will show that opposite points of the compass, and thousands of miles of distance make very little difference in the condition of those who first enter the wilderness to fell its forests and bridge its streams, to encounter its frosts and its fevers, and bear all its privations—to be themselves but "stepping stones" to others who shall afterward enjoy there the comforts of good neighborhood, the blessings of education, the consolations and hopes of Christianity; and that East or West, North or South, the dwellers in our new settlements and those who minister to them should share largely in our sympathies, our benefactions and our prayers.

On twelve occasions the last year, I have officiated at funerals, once, at a distance, over a bad road, of 40 miles. Through all this extent, and onward 30 miles further to the Canada line, and I know not how much further, there is an entire destitution of religious privileges, excepting a rare instance, at two or three points, of an occasional sermon. I was more deeply impressed on the occasion just referred to than ever before, with a sense both of the religious and other privations and hardships of the people, especially of those engaged in the lumbering business. The family where I stopped, tarrying two nights with them, were separated from their nearest neighbor, in one direction, by a space of ten miles; and in the other, by a space of five miles. The oldest of the three children, a lad of fourteen, died suddenly. At the first attack of the disease, the father was apprised that he could not live till a physician could be sent for and reach him—the nearest being in this place, and the road almost impassable. The best he could do was, to send some 15 or 20 miles for an aged Indian doctor, who came and did what he could, though to no purpose. The child died. Fifteen miles was the nearest place at which a coffin could be made; and the same distance, in another direction, was the nearest place at which help could be procured to make other preparations for the funeral. During the day I spent there, I visited, at a distance of five miles, a young man who was nearly killed by the falling of a tree. Another had badly frozen his ears and feet. A third had been knocked down by his cattle and a heavy load passed over one of his limbs, with which he limped, driving his team, some half a dozen miles. He had travelled ten hours in accomplishing a ten mile journey. Several others, I learned, had nearly perished; some for want of food; some from cold; others, by other hardships, caused by the blocking snow storm of December last. Six months of the twelve in this region annually wear away life in these exposures.

The strong become feeble—An historical notice of the Church in Bolton, Conn.

The work of Home Missions is, ordinarily, to care for churches in their infancy. This being past, they no longer need our care. They provide for their own; and they return, with a large hand and a generous heart, into the treasury of beneficence many fold for all they have received. Eight hundred churches, that have been nurtured by the American Home Missionary Society, the last quarter of a century, are now independent, self-supporting. But there are exceptions to the general rule. Some churches—even of those which have been mothers of churches and contributed their thousands to lay the foundations of christian institutions in the new settlements—need to be cared for in their old age. Causes, alike unforeseen and uncontrollable, have reduced them from a state of affluence to that of dependence. Once, they could command the services of the most gifted in the land,

Now, the charitable institution which their wisdom and faith and beneficence aided in founding, must assist them in the support of the Gospel ministry, or their sanctuaries must become a desolation. Some such churches will long remain on the missionary list in our older states. And, surely, if to honor our father and our mother be the delight of our hearts, as well as the first commandment with promise, we shall not grudge the pittance requisite to keep the fires of devotion evermore burning bright upon these ancient altars of our God.

The sketch which follows is from the annual report of Rev. Lavius Hyde, the present Pastor of the Church in Bolton.

The time has been, when this church needed not the aid of sister churches. Here, were men of wealth, enterprise and energy, who unitedly labored in the cause of Christ, and honorably sustained divine institutions.

In the year 1722, the inhabitants unanimously assigned fifty acres of good land, conveniently situated, to their first pastor. They voted that every male inhabitant of the town, between the ages of sixteen and forty five, should labor three days each year in clearing this land, constructing fences, cultivating and securing crops, cutting and carting his wood,—besides liberal pecuniary provisions for his support. They extended a call to a young clergyman then preaching with acceptance in the city of New York. In reply he wrote as follows:

"I assure you I have a great esteem of, and affection to, the people of your town, so far as I am acquainted with them, and I should count it a smile of Providence upon me, if ever I should be settled amongst such a people as your society seems at present to me to be. I heartily wish for your prosperity in all things, especially upon spiritual accounts, that God would give you an able, faithful, pious and successful pastor, that may be a great instrument of the advancement of God's glory and the eternal interests of souls among you.

I am, your hearty friend and humble servant,
JONATHAN EDWARDS."

His acceptance, on a repetition of the call, is on record among the archives of this church; but about the same time, he was invited to a tutorship in Yale College, and introduced to this people his friend and classmate, Rev. Thomas White, who was of a spirit kindred to his own, and under whose ministry this church enjoyed many years of prosperity.

During the labors of the Rev. George Colton, the second pastor, Vermont, and the region between Utica and Rochester, were the new settlements—the great and distant fields of missionary enterprise. Then, this church contributed annually to the Connecticut Missionary Society, and the pastor bequeathed his estate to increase the permanent fund of that institution. Neither he nor any of his people had the most remote idea, that this church would be a suppliant at the door of the Home Missionary Society.

The causes of the decline in piety and enterprise are not without some interest. Bolton included the larger part of Vernon, for thirty years after President Edwards accepted a call here; but it was comparatively an unimportant part of the town. Its streams ran noiselessly through tangled forests, while Bolton Centre was a place of business, occupied by men who were princes in the land. Orford, then a waste place in East Hartford, was dependent for pasturage and bread upon this fertile mountain. Now, Vernon contains three, and Orford—bearing the name of Manchester—two, Congregational churches, and each the same number of other evangelical denominations—and they are all golden candlesticks; while Bolton church, the mother of them all, sits solitary, as a widow, dependent on charity, for there are none among her sons and daughters to guide her. They are gone, some among the leading men of several of these churches; more are scattered all the way from this to California, promoting, as we hope, the kingdom of Christ. She that hath borne seven languisheth. Our most enterprising and energetic youth go from us, every year, to swell the population of the villages around us, or to lend an impulse to the tide which is bearing the institutions and the civilization of the Puritans to the Pacific. It is not more certain that the living springs, gushing from our mountain sides, will send their contributions to drive the machinery in the lower towns, than that our youth will be there to guide the spindle and the loom. The consequence is, that real estate has been depreciating here for fifty years; and the poor who will pay small rent, or buy on lower terms than in any of the neighboring towns, can find a home among us. They who have the means to emigrate do so, and our number lessens every census, though not so fast as our valuation; for poverty comes like an armed man. A century ago, there was but one denomination here. The Assembly's Catechism was taught in every family; and one half day each week the school teacher in every district made that wonderfully blessed manual a part of the regular lessons. Now, there are five denominations, aiding to sustain as many separate congregations—one, beside our own, regularly, within the limits of this town; and three, occasionally, here and in contiguous places. And Ephraim envies Judah, and Judah vexes Ephraim.

Aid for Home Missions.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—I recently called the attention of your missionaries to the aid, in libraries, that the Mass. S. S. SOCIETY was prepared to render to them in establishing and sustaining Sabbath schools, where such aid is needed. A reference was also made to the Well-Spring. I wish now to make a more definite statement in regard to this periodical.

The WELL-SPRING is a juvenile paper published every week, and is intended to contain nothing unsuitable to be read on the Sabbath day. It is circulated widely in our families and Sabbath schools in Massachusetts and New England, and, to a considerable extent, in different parts of the Union, many of the schools taking from 20 to 300 copies each. In numerous cases, according to the testimony of ministers and superintendents, schools have been greatly increased in interest and numbers—many more than doubled through the influence of this little paper. Supposing its circulation in the fields of your missionaries may have a similar happy influence, the Mass. S. S. SOCIETY is ready, so far as our friends shall furnish the means, to make a grant of 20 copies, or $5.00 worth, to any Sabbath school that may wish them and is unable to pay for them; or to furnish missionaries or missionary churches, or pastors, who need it, to aid them in organizing or reviving schools.

From the 1st of July, the postage will be, for any distance between 300 and 1000 miles, only 15 cents a copy for a year; between 1,000 and 2,000 miles, 20 cents; between 2,000 and 4,000 miles, 25 cents; and any distance over 4,000 miles, 30 cents a copy for a year. Or, we can put up a quantity, at one time, enough for six months or a year, and they can go with the libraries that are sent, or they can be sent in bundles for a small expense, and then the missionary can furnish the members of his school with a paper every week.

Applications for Libraries, Question Books, or the Well-Spring, made to the subscriber, will be promptly attended to, so far as the means of the Society will allow.

ASA BULLARD,
Secretary of Mass. S. S. Society,
No. 13 Cornhill, Boston.

Notices.

Pre-payment of Letter Postage.

Letter Postage, if pre-paid, under the present Post Office arrangement, is 40 per cent. cheaper than if paid at the end of the route. This amount is worth saving to the Society and to its missionaries. The American Home Missionary Society will therefore pre-pay all letters sent from their office, and they respectfully request their missionaries and correspondents to be particular to pre-pay all letters addressed by them to the Society.

Applications for aid.

We desire to call the particular attention of those churches applying for aid, that are within the limits of an Agency of the Society, and of individuals who forward applications, to the following notice, which appears in various forms under the head of "Applications" in the Society's publications. A careful observance of it will often prevent delay in the action of the Society upon the request preferred:

Applications, after being properly certified by individual ministers or Committees of Missions, should in all cases be addressed to the care of the Agent, Agency or Auxiliary Society of the American Home Missionary Society for the region where the applicants reside.

The address of the Society's Agents will be found on the cover of its Report and of the Home Missionary:

God's Purpose Concerning Our Country.

God's dealings have always indicated a design that the greatness and influence of this nation should be attained by arts of peace, and that its power should lie in its character rather than in arms. Having opened to it a new continent, he has from the beginning indicated a design of securing to it a greatness, differing in kind from all preceding national greatness, and worthy of a new world. Lord Bacon has remarked, "In the youth of a state, arms do flourish; in the middle age of a state, learning; and then both of them together for a time; in the declining age of a state, mechanical arts and merchandise." This has been true of the nations of the past. But this nation, first of all, has had a youth distinguished by education, inventions, commerce and religion, rather than by arms.

This speaks volumes as to the peaceful character of the greatness and influence which Providence has marked out for this people, and by which alone they can realize glory and power. And from the beginning, he has caused the circumstances of the people unusually to favor this result. He has separated us from the old world by the ocean, and cut us loose from the entanglements of European nations. In driving our ancestors to America, he compelled them to leave behind the old feudal institutions which military age had incorporated into the very frame-work of society.

Then the whole history of the colonies made it inevitable that this nation should be a confederation of small republics, a constitution of government least compatible with a state of war. The richness of the country in resources necessarily stimulated the peaceful pursuits of agriculture, commerce and manufactures. And God has given to religion and education and their institutions, a universality and power elsewhere unknown; and by a series of revivals of religion, reaching back with some interruptions to the settlement of New England—revivals distinguished in their frequency, character and results, from any development of religion in Europe—has sustained and extended that influence. These are plain tokens of a path opened by God to greatness by arts of peace, and to power by character and example—a power, which, were it but fostered by a growing intelligence, virtue and piety in the people, and justice and moderation in the government, would give us an influence on the nations mightier than all armies can acquire.

And already is God indicating his disposition to enable us to extend this influence to other nations, not by arms and the rapacity of conquest, but by bringing to us opportunities of peaceful influence. By an immigration, having no parallel in extent since the migration of the nations, he is bringing the world to school to us. And this migration is marked by the facility with which the immigrants become assimilated to the population. While in Hungary, for example, will be found to-day, Magyars, Sclavonians, Wallachians, who by migration were brought together eight hundred years ago, and who, living side by side under the same government, have retained their own languages and customs entirely distinct, here the grandchild of the immigrant is often undistinguishable from the descendants of the original inhabitants. Even differences of religion give way to this assimilating power. The Romanist is compelled to unlearn old prejudices, and to look with new feelings at passing events. If he does not rejoice at the flight of the Pope and the occupation of Rome by republicans, if he sympathizes not with Italians against the priesthood and with liberty and toleration everywhere against the hoary despotisms which the Pope has blessed and defended, he finds himself opposed to the sympathies of all around him. The priesthood even, cannot avow their wonted sympathy with hierarchy without the risk of estranging the members of their own church, and Romish bishops become the advocates of freedom. These influences react on the nations of Europe.

Besides, God is already attracting the attention of European nations amid the convulsions at home, to the stability of our government and the order of our people, changing the long familiar language of contempt to that of admiration, and thus giving us an illustration of the power which must result to us from a continuance of peace, justice, order and stability. And, as regards our influence on less enlightened nations, it must be added that the nation itself confronts the strongholds of heathenism, and our language, our literature and our race are extending, so that they who speak English will soon be more numerous, as already they are immeasurably more influential, than those who speak Chinese.

This, then, is the character, these the sources of influence, these the opportunities of using it which the providence of God marks out for this nation. Thus nurtured to strength she will need no martial weapons to assert her power, but will awe the nations by her nod and control them by the breath of her mouth. If she steadily pursues this path which Heaven has marked out, and by peace, justice and beneficence, by education and religion, secures prosperity, the only words which can describe her destined glory and her influence for good, are the inspired numbers in which rapt prophets have sung the consummation of man's blessedness on earth. To this end every statesman, every patriot should guide her expanding energies.

But if she forget this end and these conditions of her proffered triumph, if her statesmen lose sight of these elements of the nation's greatness in the strife of party and of personal ambition, if America turn aside from this open path to glory such as no nation ever won, to take up instead the old and faded laurels of military prowess, and by injustice, oppression, rapacity and conquest seek for greatness only to find disgrace, her ruin will be such as no words can describe, no tears adequately lament; a fall more terrible and disgraceful than earth ever witnessed in the history of nations: for no other was ever set apart on a continent by itself as a spectacle to the world; none ever had such a history; none ever had opened such a path to greatness by arts of peace, such an opportunity to conquer the world by character and example, and to control it by beneficence.

Therefore in directing our energies to spread the Gospel through the land, we are but working with the great designs of God, and contributing most effectually to the nation's true greatness and power. And every effort of ours to induce Americans to send the Gospel abroad is but working according to the great mission of the nation, by the very means which God has ever pointed out, and in some small measure is disciplining and developing that benevolence which, if America fail not of her duty, is yet to subdue and bless the world.

It only remains to add that we have encouragement to expect God's providential aid, from the success which has already attended our missionary work. On this point we cannot enlarge. Yet in respect to Home Missions we will record our deliberate opinion that, since the primitive triumphs of Christianity, history has no record of so many hundreds of missionary churches planted in so short a time, with so small an expenditure of means, with an influence so wide and growing, and producing a change from what would otherwise have been the character of the country they occupy, so great in itself and so momentous in its results.—Rev. S. Harris.

Fruits of Home Missions in Illinois.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

THE religious history of Illinois for the last twenty years, furnishes a striking illustration of the productiveness of Home Missions. The changes effected through this agency are such as no Christian can contemplate without gratitude to him who giveth the increase. To those who view them from this distance, and through the occasional and brief notices of the missionaries, they appear surprising:—how much more to those who have been eye witnesses of them, and the chief agents in producing them!

Rev. Aratus Kent, now an Agent of the Society in northern Illinois, was for many years one of its missionaries in the same region. He commenced his labors at Galena in 1829. At that time there was no other clergyman of any denomination on the Mississippi above St. Louis, nor within 200 miles of Galena in any direction. In that year the first Presbytery in the State—the Presbytery of the Centre of Illinois—was formed, consisting of seven members. Since that time, "what hath God wrought?" The number of Presbyterian and Congregational Ministers has increased to more than 200, and the Churches to more than 350, of which about 250 belong to the denominations acting through this Society.

In his last Report Mr. Kent speaks of having reviewed his whole missionary life, and thus alludes to the contrasts it has presented to his mind:

This review brought up scenes of thrilling interest and changes, most striking of course to me, but which may bring joy to every pious heart. As the old soldier fights his battles again, so I revisited localities which were associated in my mind with "incidents of travel" in former days. Memory carried me back to the time when with a commission in my pocket, I came by "a straight course," i. e. the only feasible course to travel, down the Ohio and up the Mississippi to Galena. From this point, I was wont to make frequent missionary tours over the district included between the Wisconsin, Rock and Mississippi Rivers, which I used playfully to designate as my parish, though I often overleaped those boundaries without awakening any jealousy of ecclesiastical rivals, for there was no evangelical minister except brother Dew, of the Methodist Church, within a week's travel.

I wandered over the ground where I was left to journey two days on foot, because my horse broke away and left me. I thought of the scenery skirting the horizon of my vision when night overtook me, and I made the earth my pillow and "wished for the day." I went down to the fords, where at different times I periled my life in crossing swollen streams, and I thought of the closet, 40 miles in extent, along which a man might pray all day without the fear of being overheard, except by the wild game which occasionally flitted by him. I reverted to one of my first visits to Prairie Du Chien. I had gotten over the Wisconsin not without peril and delay, and reached the settlement "after night," and was rejoiced to find a room full of people gathered at the house of my friend to pray that God would send them a minister. And another incident came up afresh and awakened some emotion. It was on a cold and bleak wintry day, when exploring my field I had lost my road, and wandered until I reached a cabin in the margin of a grove. I called and made myself known as a missionary. I met with a welcome and evidence that God had "directed my steps." The man stated that he was an Englishman—was converted while in the army at Calcutta, under the preaching of Ward, the Baptist Missionary—had wandered from God and from one country to another, until he reached the wilds of Wisconsin, where he had seen his heinous guilt, and was praying that God would send some minister to guide him. I know not that there was a man of prayer within 20 miles, nor an evangelical church within 200 of him.

Such was my parish then. But how changed is the aspect of things. Now there are on that small part of the same field which lies south of the Wisconsin State line, 21 villages numbering from 50 to 1,000 families, 28 churches, and 24 ministers of the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations. They have already 19 houses of worship, and there have been within the last year, or are still in progress, revivals of religion in seven churches, four of which will add some 30 each to their number. Besides all this, there have been four or five Baptist, and probably four times four Methodist churches, refreshed with the dew of Heaven. To this it should be added that many scores of Sabbath schools are in operation, Bibles are scattered without stint, and the various objects of benevolence are well sustained. Had I seen all this in vision twenty two years since, it is questionable whether my unbelief would not have said, "If the Lord would make windows in heaven, then might this thing be."

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

In the central part of the State the Home Missionary work was commenced at a somewhat earlier date; but the more heterogeneous character of the population—a considerable proportion being from the Southern States—opposed peculiar obstacles to the success of these efforts. Yet the fruits of missionary culture on this field for the last twenty years have been scarcely less abundant than in the more northern portions of the State. Rev. William Kirby, Agent for Central Illinois, in his last Report thus indicates some of the prominent changes effected during this period.

The Missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society are everywhere received with favor, though it must be confessed without a corresponding sense of obligation to supply their wants. Twenty years ago, they were looked upon with distrust. Men could not understand how they could feel love enough for souls, and zeal enough for the glory of God, to deny themselves the comforts of older and more privileged communities, and to come and endure the hardships of a new country, with the prospect of nothing but a living. They suspected them of sinister motives. They were charged with aiming at a union of Church and State. Politicians, in their zeal for the people's rights, echoed the cry. Or, they were the secret agents of some wealthy corporations, to buy the land away from the poor people. But time has effected great changes. No class of ministers possesses, to a greater degree, the confidence of the people of all classes. They are known to be the friends of education. Under their labors its institutions have flourished from the common school to the college. Twenty years ago, there were not as many Sabbath schools in the State; now, there are single counties in which there are as many. Twenty years ago, but few common schools—and those not worthy of the name—were sustained even part of the year; now, we have an efficient system in operation, which will place their benefits within reach of every family in the State. Twenty years ago, the first college, which had successfully encountered the difficulties of a new country, had been in operation a little more than a year, with not a regular college student in it; now, within the field of my agency there are no less than five such institutions—most of them well patronized. Twenty years ago, there was not an academy for either sex in the State; now, within the field of my agency I count twenty four—which is probably less than the truth. The course of education in these institutions, if not equal to what it is in the older States, is in advance of what it was in them twenty years since. We can claim precedence of most of the Eastern States in the work of female education. Monticello Female Seminary has been pronounced by competent judges equal to any in the country; while in Jacksonville not far from 400 youth of both sexes have been assembled the past winter, in its different institutions, for the purpose of acquiring an education. In all that has been done for these various enterprises, the missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society have not failed to perform their full share of labor.

On the field of my agency, there are 30 churches which sustain the preaching of the Gospel without foreign aid. Of these, seven have attained to independence the past year, while two that were unaided for several years, have, for peculiar reasons sought again the aid of the Society. A few of the churches that have determined to rely upon their own resources, enjoy preaching but a portion of the time, but the greater part are favored with it every Sabbath. In these, decisive results have followed, the truths of Christianity have entered strongly into the very organization of society, and a distinctive christian civilization has been developed. In this respect, such communities compare favorably with those in the older States. In some instances the comparison is even to the advantage of the former.

Prospective Improvements and Wants.

The internal improvements, provided for by the Legislature at its last session, will, when completed, produce a great change in the number, condition and wants of the population of our interior counties. There can be little doubt, but that the more important improvements contemplated will be carried into effect. The Central Railroad, with its branches, will be the most important. This will intersect or approach the borders of twenty seven counties. The Chicago branch will cut seven more; the Galena branch, four; the Alton and Springfield road, three; the St. Louis and Vincennes road, six; the Morgan and Sangamon road extended, ten; besides others chartered, which may or may not ever be worked. This will bring fifty seven counties in contact with these highways of commerce, making no allowance for such as may be cut twice in different directions. In a commercial and pecuniary point of view, the result will not be insignificant. But it becomes us to contemplate them with reference to higher objects. Every improvement of this kind sustains an intimate relation to man's spiritual interests, and the progress of the kingdom of God. The great obstacle to the temporal and religious interests of the interior counties—which will be mainly reached by this vast chain of iron roads—has been two-fold,—the sparseness of the population on account of the scarcity of timber, and their remoteness from any of the natural channels of trade.

An impulse was wanting to develop their energies and resources. They seemed, in comparison with other more favored portions of the State, to stagnate. Mind was not awake, delighting in the trial of its strength, and coping with obstacles, as if rejoicing that they were placed in the pathway of its progress to draw out its energies. These internal improvements will break up this lifeless inertia. Facilities for breaking the soil, and carrying forward all the improvements which the best stage of society requires, will be at hand. The timber and coal of the southern counties will supply the deficiency of the central and northern. And the ease of finding the best of markets, united with a rich and deep soil, will allure emigrants of every description from the older States, whilst the construction of a main road by an eastern Company, will bring multitudes westward, who will eagerly exchange their rocky and barren hills for the fertile prairies of the West.

Nor should we indulge in fears that secular enterprise will engulf the growing population in its own vortex, leaving no room for Christ and his cause. Religion is not hostile to enterprise in business. It fosters it, draws out the energies of the soul, and sanctifies them for God. Christianity never ingrafts itself upon dead and lifeless stocks. Its principles demand life and vigor. The dead stupor of slumbering hearts is more hostile to its progress than the vices which it subdues. Enterprise is both the result and harbinger of its triumphs. And though its animating spirit be worldly, those triumphs will sanctify it, and make it auxiliary to the kingdom of Christ. Hence we may expect the counties, so long destitute of the more intelligent preaching of the Gospel, to become urgent for missionary labor, and lay new responsibilities at the door of the American Home Missionary Society. Already there are fields that call for laborers where churches are not, but soon may be, organized. Invitations come to me from almost every direction, in counties and communities where no churches are organized, to come and do something for them. But I can meet these demands, only as God puts it into the hearts of young men to consecrate themselves to the work of laying foundations for Zion in the GREAT RISING WEST.

Intelligence from Western Missions.

CALIFORNIA.A Death and a Birth.

How affecting are life's realities—often more exciting than the details of romance! Contrasts of sorrow and of joy frequently stand side by side in the Missionary's experience, so that he seems to himself like one that dreams. Such contrasts were the following—the death of a pilgrim to the land of gold, and the spiritual birth of one who it is hoped, is now a pilgrim to the land of eternal blessedness. The occurrences took place on a vessel, while on her voyage to California.

A young man was taken suddenly ill, so that it soon became evident to himself and to others that he could not live long. He had left home much against the wishes of his parents and friends, and the urgent entreaties of his wife, to whom he had not long been married. He was offered every inducement to stay at home. His business was good, and increasing; but his desire to get sudden wealth was so strong that he could not be prevailed upon to stay. As he lay on his cot, he mourned very much that he had not regarded the wishes of his friends. He said he was not prepared to die, and could not prepare on such a bed of suffering. I told him of Christ—able and willing to save. "No," said he, "I cannot repent now"—shook his head, turned away, and tried to sleep; but his thoughts and words showed that his mind was too far gone for hope. To the last, however, he expected to recover, and would say when he should be well once more, he would live a better life. His end was near, and on Sabbath morning he breathed his last. I was to have preached that day, but sickness prevented. I was able, however, to attend the burial, and the corpse was laid on the table that stood on the quarter deck, and which was frequently used by some of our company for card-playing. The dead body lying on that table, wrapped in unsightly habiliments for its watery grave; the dead weight attached to the feet; the moaning winds; the surging sea; and a clouded gloomy sky, added a solemn effect to the services of the occasion.

Those who had delighted to trifle away the golden moments of their passage to eternity around that very table, in mirth, amusement, games of chance and card-playing, were present to see and hear.

They were admonished to consider what would be the message of the dead if commissioned to speak to them from the eternal world, where they all were so soon to appear? Would he advise them to throw off time from their restless minds by amusement; kill it by card-playing, or spend the hours of holy day, as some had done, by the most murderous process of novel reading?

How could they again gather together around that table, and sit for hours, without thinking that they were sporting on a bier—it might be their own? Would they not then be admonished, by prayer and holy living, to prepare to meet their God? This passage, so mournful and sad to many, was also the occasion of life to others. Two, I believe, were converted before we landed from the ship.

One was remarkably clear and hopeful in his experience of a change. He was led to think of what he owed to God, who was preserving him in perfect health, while so many were sick and dying; how ungrateful and sinful it was to live without loving one whose love to him was so great; and when he thought of the extreme wickedness and profanity of those who were returning from the very land to which he was going, he said that a sense of his danger was so great that he could not rest. He felt that without a change of heart he was running an awful risk in going to such a wicked place. To secure the salvation of his soul, he was determined to seek God without a moment's delay; and I think, in the sincerity of his soul, and under the power of the Holy Spirit, he gave up all to Christ. It was ever refreshing, after this, to hear him speak of the change he had experienced. It seemed to him like a dream. How strangely God had dealt with him! What a place, and what means, for the conversion of any one,—and for him how passing strange that he had yielded! He was sure it was all God's work, and was surprised that he had never seen, felt, and thought as he did now. I have not seen him since he landed, but I am sure that God will keep him by his mighty power through faith unto salvation.

IOWA.

From Rev. H. N. Cobb, Le Claire, Scott Co.

First Experience of Missionary Life.

As this report closes the first year of my labors as your missionary in Iowa, it may be well to look briefly to the effects of the year's labor. When I relinquished a good salary at the East to come to the West as a Home Missionary, I did it not for worldly gain—for I knew that in this respect I was to be a loser—but to do good. I longed to go forth into the frontier settlements to preach Christ and him crucified, and build up the kingdom of God. I said, therefore, to your Society—"Here am I, send me." Had not the Home Missionary Society proffered its helping hand, I see not how I could have come. I came into this broad open State—fast filling up with immoral beings—with a strong desire and earnest daily prayer to God for direction; I longed to go where I could be most useful. I could tell no one to what point I designed to go, only that I desired to go whither God should direct. At length I was directed most plainly to this place; and here I stuck my stake, and began work. For two weeks, I could find no house of any sort that I could rent for love or money. At last we succeeded in renting part of an old log cabin quite out of town, where we tarried for two months and a half, till we could build a little house of our own. Able, or not able, necessity was laid upon us to build. We did build, became involved in debt, and have cramped our way through the year. Every day God has fed us and helped us beyond our fears. I would not, I do not complain; rather would I erect my "Ebenezer," for hitherto had God helped us. We have tried to trust in the Lord and do good, and the promise has been verified to us, "So shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." I have been compelled to labor more with my hands than in future I shall be compelled to do. This has necessarily taken from the precious time that I longed to spend otherwise. However, my numerous preaching appointments have been regularly attended to, in whatever way other interests might be affected.

Then and Now.

But what spiritual results has the year produced? This will appear by comparing the state of things as they existed when I commenced here one year ago, with their present condition. Then, this little church had but just begun to live, or even to have a name. Now, it has a respectable standing in the community. Then, there were but twelve members; twelve more have since been added. Then, the church members knew little of each other, and consequently little attachment existed between them; now, they are well acquainted with each other, and are a loving, happy band. Then, there was merely a church organization, no ecclesiastical society, no missionary collections, no monthly concert,—in short, all was to be begun; now, we have made a beginning in all these matters. Then, Universalism was loud in its boasts and "great swelling words," and seemed to be gaining away over a large part of the community; now, it is decidedly checked; I hear no more of its boasts, and of no more entering its ranks. Then, error seemed to be bewildering the minds of the mass;—now, there seems a turning away with disgust, and a corresponding inquiring after the right way of the Lord. Then, the region around seldom heard a gospel sermon;—now, at six different points your missionary has appointments for preaching. Then, there were in this field and the neighboring ones, in which I have felt in duty bound to labor, about one hundred souls in sin, without hope, and on the broad road to hell, who are now hopefully converted, and are giving pleasing evidence that they are on the highway of holiness, and on the road to heaven, mainly through your missionary's feeble labors. Many backsliders have been reclaimed, and the graces of God's people strengthened. While I have tried to do what I could under God, still I have often felt condemned for doing so little. May God forgive the errors of the past, and strengthen me anew for the coming year!

From Rev. Reuben Gaylord, Danville, Des Moines Co.

At the commencement of the period under review, the church had just enjoyed a season of refreshing, and a few were born into the kingdom of God. As the result of this outpouring of the Spirit, six were added to the church on the first Sabbath in June. From that time through the summer, the church and its pastor were called to pass through a season of darkness and trial. This seemed to drive us more to a throne of grace, to awaken more brotherly love and Christian sympathy, and this enkindled hope. During the winter, there seemed to be a growing spirituality in the church. Prayer meetings were attended with interest. There was more freedom among the members. I felt that we ought to make some special effort for the salvation of souls. I made two ineffectual attempts to get a brother to assist me. In the mean time a Baptist brother came unexpectedly to labor for a few days with the Baptist Church in this place. They tendered a cordial invitation to me and my people to come in with them and hold a union meeting. Our brethren seemed ripe for the work, and we accepted the invitation. The meeting continued for three weeks, and was one of great interest. It was well conducted, and the results thus far are good, and good only. The number of conversions is, I think, from 25 to 30. Of these, some have united with us, some with the Baptists, and some with the Methodists. The best feeling continues between the churches, and we feel that the cause of our Redeemer has been greatly advanced. It seems to me that the way is now prepared for still richer displays of God's grace among us at some future time. Yesterday with us was a day of great interest. Nine came forward and publicly dedicated themselves to God, and entered into covenant with this church. Four others expected to unite by letter, but did not receive their letters in time. There are some who have not yet professed Christ, who will soon, I trust, unite themselves with the people of God.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. C. W. Matthews, Sun Prairie, Dane Co.

God has graciously spared my life, and given me health, so that during the past quarter I have been enabled to perform rather more than my accustomed amount of labor, in preaching and visiting from house to house. For the most part of the time I have preached from three to five times each week. I usually preach three times on the Sabbath, and during the winter I have preached once or twice in each week on week days.

My congregations at this place have been increasing, and are usually as large as can be accommodated in the place where we are obliged to worship. Had we a suitable place to worship, our congregations would be much larger. Our log house is about eighteen feet square. At my other preaching places, we have better houses, and they are generally pretty well filled.

Increase from small Beginnings.

The winter has been refreshing, from the presence of the Lord to many churches in this State. "O, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." The church which I helped to form at Exeter, Green Co., has been visited with a refreshing from on high. The prospect when the church was organized was dark. The church was formed with only four members—two males and two females. But they were good members, and God has blest them; and now the church numbers about twenty, with the prospect of still more additions. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory." Who can estimate the good that has been accomplished through the instrumentality of the Home Missionary Society. Eternity only can unfold its blessings. I always have felt, and still do feel, as though I was the most unworthy of any of its beneficiaries. But as the Lord gives me strength, I mean to devote myself to his cause. I thank your Society for their aid, and hope its patrons will remember the missionaries, especially in their prayers. They labor under many privations and discouragements; but I hope our trust is not in an army of flesh, but in the Lord of hosts. And may we ever feel that our strength is in God. May we trust in him, live near to him, and glorify him forever!

From Rev. C. C. Mason, Exeter, Green Co.

Exeter is situated in the Sugar River Valley, a region of remarkable natural beauty and fertility, but hitherto nearly abandoned to intemperance and irreligion. The church, in their application for aid in supporting their present minister, say: "Many orders of Christians have tried in past time to gain a footing for Christianity among us—for our village is one of the oldest in the State—but all till now have failed, for sin made mad with rum was too strong for them." Mr. Mason commenced his labors there, and in several adjacent places, in January last. In a communication of a more recent date than the one above, he speaks as follows of the changes wrought under his labors.

The progress of the cause of Christ in this place, once so lost, is to me more than cheering. For years they had taverns and groceries, and all the outfit of such a state of things, but no meeting-house and no school-house; and they had resolved that they would not have them, lest they should have religion also. Of this state of things I believe they are heartily and honestly ashamed, so much so, that any allusion to this dark past is offensive to them, and every effort to clear themselves of the remains of this state of things is made with a will!

They have built a new school-house—said to be the best in the county—which will hold from two hundred to three hundred persons, and they are resolved to have a meeting-house also. The Sabbath school is doing well, and the church is very harmonious; the Sabbath is a day of worship, the grocery has died, and the taverns are the worst property in the place. The work is God's, and it is like him only. It is indeed the foolishness of preaching only, that can save the world! In the town of Mount Pleasant, the attendance is great, for a small place, and the attention to the word is close and solemn. They are Eastern people, and they appear glad to take up the habit of worship and devotion. The work in which I am engaged would be hard, but that success makes it sweet. The toil of such long riding, such coarse fare, such sleeping and preaching in rude, half-finished log cabins would be too much, but that the promise proved is here, and God is here. I never received so small a dollar reward, yet I never was so well paid; I never was so small a being, yet I never was so strong; I never so wondered why I was allowed to help in this ministry, yet I think that I never was so prepared to do my little with all my might.

Frequent Removals.

I will improve this opportunity to sketch one cause of slow progress of western society in forming regular habits, viz: frequent removals. If emigration produces even in a small degree "a tendency to social decline," this tendency must be increased by a periodical removal. The remark of Dr. Franklin, that "three moves are as bad as a fire," is here reversed. Men are constantly removing to increase their wealth. An improved farm will sell for an advanced price, and they can repeat the experiment of removing to the frontier. The idea of escaping from moral restraint is not, therefore, the only motive for a frontier residence. This habit produces several unfavorable results. Such persons are constantly in a new settlement. Being in some measure secluded from the influence of education, refinement and moral and religious restraints, they become insensibly, if not willingly, remiss in every duty. They also feel less interest in their own neighborhood, and less concern for its social improvement. "My residence is merely the lodging place of a wayfaring man, I shall soon leave it."

It ought, however, to be added, that men, and women also, acquire in this way, habits of energy, patience, self-denial, and many other qualities, which, if religiously directed, might qualify them to become good soldiers of the cross. It was said of the American Revolution, that the times made the men. Circumstances greatly modify the elements of western character; it is unpolished, but potent for good or evil. The social, moral, and political influence of the West will soon be predominant in our country. May it be sanctified, and made fit for the Master's use.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. E. Jenney, Waverly, Morgan Co.

A Week in Shelby County.

It was stated in the last Report of this Society, that 285 of its missionaries during the year ministered to two or three congregations each, and 140 extended their labors over still wider fields—the destitutions of a county or of several contiguous counties. This extreme diffusion of missionary labor is not, in itself, desirable. God has ordained the settled and permanent ministry of the Gospel as the means best adapted to give it its full effect. Hence the Society aims, according to its ability, to supply each congregation with the stated means of grace. But the harvest is great and the laborers are few, and this end cannot be attained without greatly increased supplies of men and funds. There are also extensive regions at the West which are yet to be explored. The scattered sheep of the wilderness are to be gathered together, and organized into churches, and thus the way prepared for the stated ministrations of the Word. The amount and value of the services of this character, performed by the missionaries of this Society, especially by those to whom the larger and more destitute fields are assigned, are not generally appreciated nor understood. They do not stay to gather, and therefore do not ordinarily report the harvest of the seed they sow; but they labor, and others enter into their labors. The utility of this kind of service is well Illustrated by the facts stated in the following communication. Mr. Jenney, the writer, and Mr. Pond, to whom he refers, are commissioned to explore and supply the destitutions within the bounds of Illinois Presbytery, comprising several counties in the central part of the State.

One week's labor, which I performed in connection with Brother Pond, will yet be seen, I trust, to have advanced the interests of religion in a very destitute portion of our State. While we were at Springfield, intending, if possible, to go forth together on an exploring tour, the Macedonian cry, feebly uttered by a young lady residing in Shelby county, reached us. Thither we repaired, as the freshet prevented our going in the direction we intended; and there we found a people very much scattered, almost destitute of religious privileges, and yet hungering after the bread of life.

Sheep Scattered for Want of a Shepherd.

On that ground a Presbyterian church was formed in 1843, of eighteen members. They were favored for a while with preaching once in five or six weeks, for a year or more. But at the expiration of that period they were left without ministerial aid, except as, at long intervals, a servant of Christ chanced to pass that way, and gave them a sermon. It was not to be expected that Christianity would flourish in such circumstances. And, in fact, the little association was soon broken up, and its members dispersed. A few died, more moved away, and the remainder, some four or five, very judiciously connected themselves with the Lutheran church existing in that neighborhood.

A Forerunner.

About two months since a young lady, belonging to Rev. Mr. Hale's church in Springfield, went into that settlement to teach. Seeing, and being affected by, the moral desolations around her, she sent a request to her pastor for ministerial aid, which we, as unexpectedly to ourselves as to her, were called to meet. Being heartily devoted to the business of doing good, in every possible way, she was not satisfied with communicating instruction during the week, but collected as many as she could in a Sabbath school,—several others coming to her assistance. Though modest and unassuming, she had also ventured to warn those with whom she associated, of their guilt and danger, and entreat them to attend to the things that belong to their peace. Here was our forerunner. Through her instrumentality the way was prepared for us. Already two young men had come out upon the Lord's side, and others, both males and females, were known to be more or less thoughtful and anxious.

Protracted Service.

Such were the circumstances under which we entered the neighborhood. For a few moments we were at a loss to decide what course to pursue,—whether to go on our way and let the work proceed as it had begun, or remain, and endeavor, with the blessing of God, to give it an impulse. We retired beneath the shade of a tree, and deliberating on the matter, found ourselves strongly inclined to tarry, at least till we should ascertain more definitely the real state of things. The conclusion to which we came was very gratifying to the young lady, and to those who attribute their conversion to her efforts. Notice was accordingly given, through her school, that there would be preaching that night; and to our amazement,—for the announcement was made late in the day, and the entire population were busily engaged in farming,—there were not less than sixty or seventy persons present. Such was the appearance of the congregation, that we felt constrained to make an appointment also for the next evening. And thus we continued to do through the whole week. Oh! to witness what we did on those occasions, was more than a compensation for the toil we endured in reaching the place, and the fatigue to which we were subjected while there, by labors out of, as well as in, season.

Descent of the Spirit.

Instances of thoughtfulness, and of more or less anxiety, were daily coming to our knowledge, and we felt constrained to believe that the Holy Spirit was there to "convince of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come." Especially was this apparent on the Sabbath, when our series of meetings closed. About 250 persons were present. So large a congregation could not be crowded into the school house. We therefore repaired to the grove, notwithstanding there had been a severe rain the preceding night, and even that morning, and the ground was consequently very wet. There we preached two sermons, at 11 and 4 o'clock.

The latter was on "the judgment." While that was being pronounced, it was evident that the Author of truth was rendering it effectual on not a few minds and hearts. Never did I before witness such an awful solemnity among so large a number. Every ear was open to the words uttered; every eye intently fixed on the speaker. Moved by what he saw, and, I trust, by an impulse from on high, he proposed that all, who were determined to aim to receive the welcome, "well done good and faithful servant, &c.," and would, even unto death, strive to enter in at the strait gate, should signify it by rising. No sooner had this request been made and explained, than four-fifths of the congregation sprung to their feet—all solemn, and many affected to tears. A scene like that, I have read of, as occurring elsewhere, and in other days; but nothing of the kind, so marked, has ever before come under my observation. It was a baptism of divine influence, and it fell with oppressive weight upon almost every heart present. It was said that some were too much affected to rise; and others, we saw, stood for a moment only, and then sunk back upon their seats, crushed by a sense of the fact that they were hastening to the final bar where their destiny will be determined forever. Oh! that it may then appear that all those who thus openly expressed a determination, God helping them, to gain heaven, have fulfilled their vows, and accomplished the great and glorious object!

We should have continued our meetings at that point, had we deemed it prudent. But we were fearful of a reaction. Most of those to whom we preached came a distance of miles, some two, others three, four, and even five. They labored hard on their farms during the day, at one of the most busy seasons of the year, and as they could not retire to rest till 11 or 12 o'clock at night, we knew they would be unable to attend much longer. We were compelled, therefore, most reluctantly on our part, and with many an expression of regret from some of them, to bring our meetings to a close. But we assured them that, Providence permitting, we would be on the ground again four weeks from that time. Next Wednesday we are to leave home for that place, and expect then to organize a church of some thirty members. May the Lord work graciously among them, and add greatly to this number of such as shall be saved.

Thus signally has God succeeded these brief labors of his servants. But, while we praise him for the rich displays of his grace, in gathering these wanderers into his fold, the inquiry forces itself upon us,—Who is hereafter to feed and guide them? The little flock gathered there eight years ago, was scattered, and came to naught, because they had no shepherd? Shall it be so again? For how can this and other feeble churches, continue and increase if they hear not the Gospel? "And how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" The greatest obstacle to the work of evangelization and "church extension" at the West, is the want of competent ministers of the Gospel. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

The Flood and its Lessons.

We should fail to exhibit correctly the present aspect of the missionary field, did we not notice the fact, that for several months large portions of it have been under water. The desolating floods with which the West has been visited, is mentioned by many missionaries as a serious hindrance to their work. In traversing deluged roads, and crossing swollen and bridgeless streams, they are exposed to many delays and dangers; and in some instances it is quite impossible to meet their appointments. Many, too, who have aided liberally in sustaining the institutions of the Gospel, have suffered severe losses; and all branches of business have been affected by this immense destruction of property. The following communication from a missionary describes the scene as it appeared in the neighborhood of Alton.

We are now witnessing, as in 1844, a striking manifestation of the majesty and might of the Almighty. The floods of great waters are pouring by us, and spreading over many of our farms, and dwellings, and places of business, with desolating power. The dark rolling tide of the Mississippi sweeps by, spreading out its turbid waters to the width of from five to fifteen miles. At this point commences, on the Illinois shore, what is termed the "American bottom," which extends two hundred miles in length to the mouth of the Ohio, and in width from ten to fifteen miles. It is unsurpassed in fertility, and many portions of it are highly cultivated. A few weeks since its immense fields of corn, wheat, oats and vegetables of every name, were in the highest state of promise. But a noise like the noise of great waters alarmed the inhabitants, and they fled with their flocks, and herds, and households to the hills; some of them staying to care for the stuffs, till they were obliged to wade for miles—the water coming up to their waists, and often to their necks. The calamity is great, especially upon the renters, who have lost their all. But although the valleys are scenes of desolation, we trust no one will suffer from hunger in this land of bread. The footsteps of the Almighty are in the deep, yet his ways are just and right. Who shall say, what doest thou? May he not do what he will with his own? The silver, and the gold, and the cattle upon a thousand hills are his. And surely he may remind forgetful man by how slight a tenure he holds them.

It is often said the West is still poor, too poor to sustain the Gospel and her institutions of education; and let no one doubt that this is fully true of those who can say, "I love thy Kingdom, Lord," and who are willing to spend and be spent in laying the foundations of many generations. The comparatively few whose hearts sympathize with the heart of Christ in the mighty work of saving the great West from ignorance, error and sin, have not the pecuniary ability to carry on this enterprise. But the reason why we need, and must have aid, is not because the West is poor, but because the silver, and the gold, the flocks, and herds, and the countless acres of waving grain are not consecrated to Christ. The hand of God in the flood has swept away, along the banks of the Mississippi and its tributaries, in a single week, more property than has ever been given by eastern Christians and philanthropists to plant and sustain the institutions of education and religion in the valley of the West. Even some professors of religion have lost more in a day than they have given in their lives to sustain the institutions of religion.

Oh! when the surplus product and wealth of this great valley, over and above the supply of the wants of its every inhabitant, shall be consecrated to the work of doing good; they shall be more than sufficient to bless the world with the messengers of salvation and the book of God. That day will surely come, and the American Home Missionary Society will share a glorious part in hastening its coming.

From Rev. Josiah Wood, Duquoin, Perry Co.

Protracted Meeting.

I mentioned in my last report, that we contemplated a meeting at Pinckneyville, of a few days' continuance. That meeting commenced March 17th, and from the first gave promise of the happiest results. The Spirit of God was evidently present, and sinners were deeply impressed. Perhaps there were as many as twenty that manifested publicly their interest. A few came out on the Lord's side. The individuals wrought upon were the principal citizens of the place. And there was no small stir abroad, that Pinckneyville should become interested in the subject of the soul's salvation. The results of the meeting, or rather the results of all the influences of the Gospel that have there been employed, are as follows:

A small church has been organized, now numbering fifteen members. A Sabbath school has been started, which numbered last Sabbath fifty one scholars. The congregation has increased from thirty, or less, to one hundred and fifty, or more, as there were more than that number present last Sabbath. An effort has been made to finish the lower room of the Temperance Hall, which will cost us not far from one hundred dollars, and secure the house half of the time.

There seems to be around and in the place a general waking up to the great interests of the soul; and we trust that there is yet to be a rich harvest of souls gathered into the garner of the Lord. We hope that what we are now permitted to see are only the drops which betoken a plentiful shower of divine grace. These things are truly encouraging; the more so as the place has had the reputation, be it just or unjust, of being abandoned to all that is evil. There was a long and dreary night of toil ere any spiritual light was discernible. It was nearly a year and a half that your missionary spent one third of his Sabbaths in that place, under the most discouraging appearances.

Inferences.

These facts suggest a few practical thoughts.

1. The hardest places should not be left without the means of grace adapted to the wants of the perishing. 2. Delay in the manifestations of the divine favor should not be regarded as evidence that there is no mercy in store. 4. Fickleness in the appliances of the Gospel cannot be expected to work out God's intended results.

The genius of the Gospel demands time—a sowing time—a germinating time—a harvest time. These may follow close upon each other, under certain favorable circumstances; but under others, delay may be far safer, and for the advancement of the greatest good of Zion.

Taking Timber from Unsettled Lands.

The matter referred to in this extract has long been a subject of complaint. Early in the history of the West, when there were few settlers, timber was comparatively worthless, and the habit grew up among the early squatters of taking the limited quantity which their necessities required wherever they could find it; and as it belonged to the U. S. government, and there were no private owners to dispute the rightfulness of this custom, it grew up into a kind of prescriptive right of the pioneer. But since the lands have become partially occupied and have risen greatly in value, the owners feel that the timber is an integral and important part of their property, and both the government and private owners take measures to protect themselves against this system of spoliation. It is important that western churches should purify themselves from this evil. The following action is creditable to the people who have passed the resolutions.

Among the many wicked practices in the West, is that of individuals taking timber from lands which do not belong to them, and this without permission. By the conscientious, this practice has long been regarded as a growing evil, and one under which the ungodly "cover their sins." Our church, feeling its duty to take up this stumbling-block out of their way, at a special meeting called for this purpose, passed the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, the practice of cutting and taking timber from the land of non-residents has become so common, that even some of the professed members of Christ's church are commonly reported to be guilty of this great and crying sin; and as it is an evil wide-spread and alarmingly on the increase, and very corrupting and demoralizing in its tendency; we deem it our duty as members of the christian church in this place, to enter our solemn protest against it; therefore

Resolved, 1st. That we regard the prevailing practice of trespassing upon the lands of others, by cutting and converting to one's own use the timber thereon, a violation of the divine law as contained in the tenth commandment, which says, "Thou shalt not covet," and of the command of our Saviour—"As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them likewise." (Luke vi, 31. Matthew vii, 12).

Resolved, 2dly. That in view of this great evil, this practice, if persisted in, we believe to be a disciplinable offense.

Resolved, 3dly. That we will use all conscientious and rational means to discountenance the prevalent practice of taking timber by trespass, or purchasing that so obtained.

A Reason for Labor with Individuals.

It often happens, after I have labored very hard, and in my own view successfully, to enforce some duty, and point out the danger of some sin, that subsequently I find in private conversation, that I have failed altogether to produce the desired effect upon some minds, owing to peculiar objections, or their different previous experience or circumstances; so that all of my "strong reasons" seem to have been like shooting arrows into a sand bank. But in private interviews, these difficulties and objections come out in a light which I could not anticipate in my study; and here, face to face, more can be accomplished in a short time by familiar conversation, than by any argument which could be conceived in the study.

I would by no means discard patient and laborious investigation of religious truth, but have the two united, so that each may receive a portion adapted to his case.

In these interviews a minister will hear remarks without solicitation, or making any invidious inquiries, which may be admonitory to himself, and tend to keep him upon his guard. For example: "Such a minister comes here occasionally and talks familiarly upon almost every subject except religion; and that he has never mentioned in our house, nor has he made a prayer. But he preaches good, sound sermons on the Sabbath, and in the desk appears to be a nice man." Another says, "Well, when I want to get the news of the day I go to the postoffice—the minister's family." Severe as these remarks appear, the writer has heard them made, and respecting Presbyterians too. When speaking of the violation of the Sabbath, "Why," says one, "I have seen the ——— minister ride out to his field on the Sabbath after church and bring home vegetables." Could many who appear to be excellent brethren on the whole, be made sensible to the impression which their own example and that of their households make upon minds now receiving durable impressions, they would adopt the Psalmist's motto, Ps. 39: 1, as their own.

The Modern Infidel.

He soon gathered a large congregation, as he always does where he goes. But such a congregation!—made up of apostates from evangelical churches, Universalists, infidels, the intemperate, the profane, the Sabbath breaker, and the licentious, besides a crowd of thoughtless youth, who go there, as they say, to hear the fun. These are all exerting their utmost energies to draw off the members of our evangelical churches, and those who attend worship with us. In a very few instances they succeed. Two members of our little church have joined them, while all the rest remain firm and decided. We have a very excellent choir of singers in our church, said to be one of the best in the State. Much has been done by those above referred to, in order to induce members of the choir to leave our church and attend that meeting. Our Sabbath school has been, and is, very interesting. They are sparing no efforts to break it up, by establishing something in their own congregation, to take the place of a Sabbath school, and by which they hope to entice the children and youth away from us.

This party are very hostile to the evangelical churches and their ministers, and ridicule the doctrines they preach and the duties they enjoin. Prayer, the observance of the Sabbath, repentance, regeneration, are with them stale and by-gone matters, fit only for the dark ages.

A body of men at the East they say, (the A. H. M. S.) sends out hundreds of men into this region, to preach and teach certain things—their own minds are narrowed down by puritanical training, and they are laboring to bring others into the same bondage. Such will have nothing to do with the man of original ideas and liberal sentiments.

The effect of these labors is dreadfully apparent. The morals of his hearers are evidently not improving, and all vital religion is ridiculed by them.

MICHIGAN.

From Rev. John Scotford, De Witt, Clinton Co.

Strengthening the things that Remain.

Clinton County, in which this missionary has recently commenced his labors, has hitherto been comparatively neglected and destitute. Its settlement too has been retarded by its remoteness from market,—all its surplus products being transported in wagons, 100 miles, to Detroit. The completion of a plank road which is now in process of construction to Lansing, the capital of the State, will impart a new impulse to enterprise and improvement in this region, and thus give it new importance as a field of missionary labor. From the results of his labors, thus far, Mr. S. finds much encouragement.

A small church of seven or eight members formerly existed here, but in consequence of the death of the leading man in the church, and the removal of others, only three of the original members were found remaining on my arrival; and the records of the church, (if there ever had been any) were lost. Soon after commencing my labors at this place, an ecclesiastical society was formed, preparatory to the organization of a church, and a board of trustees chosen with a view to the building of a house of worship. In my pastoral visits I have found about fourteen or more persons who have been connected with Presbyterian or Congregational churches elsewhere, and arrangements have been made to organize a church. Our friends here are much encouraged. Our congregations are gradually increasing, with an increasing seriousness and attention to the word, and the way seems to be preparing for the outpouring of the Spirit.

But we have much to contend with. Infidelity and Universalism are rampant. However, we do not despair, for the cause is God's. He blesses our efforts, and we rest upon his promise for final victory.

Mr. S. preaches also half of the time at Victor, twelve miles from DeWitt. Here he has been enabled to resuscitate an expiring church.

At the time when I first visited this church, it was composed of only eight members, and was in a languishing state. They had sought so long in vain for a minister, and could do so little towards supporting one, that they were discouraged, and had serious thoughts of disbanding. In view of their condition, and the moral wants of the county, I felt it my duty to settle here, and do what I could for the cause of Christ. Simultaneously with the commencement of my labors with this church, a revival of religion commenced in this township,—under the labors of Rev. Mr. Boynton, a Methodist minister,—which resulted in the hopeful conversion of a number of souls. The church in Victor has shared, to some extent, in the fruits of this revival. Two have united with the church upon profession of faith, and several more are designing to do so soon.

The history of the churches in this county is instructive, as showing the result of a want of an efficient and permanent ministry. Much labor has been lost because it has not been followed up by the regular ministration of the word.

Important Change for the Better.

For want of looking back on the past, we are in danger of not appreciating the amount of success which God is giving to the efforts of his people. A pastor in Michigan thus notices improvements which have taken place under his own observation.

It is delightful to me to see the various indications of the progress of public sentiment in favor of religion. Our county papers through this region have been generally worse than harmless as to morals and religion, but a gradual change is in progress. You may now publish almost any thing which you would deem proper on the subject of religion; and I am well persuaded that your Society, more than any other single agency, contributes to this progress. Here is the main instrumentality. Others are tributary and important, but without this, would be inefficacious. Other denominations are sometimes popular, well-received, and patronized; but your agencies inspire more confidence, concentrate more powerful influences, and produce more abundantly those fruits which tell upon the elevation of character and the improvement of society.

From Rev. A. Govan, Byron, Shiawassee Co.

In presenting my report of missionary labor for the last quarter, I would express the most sincere gratitude to the great Head of the Church, for that measure of encouragement and success which has attended every effort I have made within the bounds of this Society during the period of my labors. Particularly, I would mention the very unexpected and pleasing effusion of the Divine Spirit, in connection with a series of meetings which I attended in this county, with some other brethren, in the months of February and March. These efforts were followed by an awakening in the church, by confessions of sin, by renewed attention to covenant obligations and religious duties, and by signal displays of the power of divine truth upon the hearts of the impenitent, especially the young, who had been scholars in the Sabbath school. In all, there are about twenty-five persons who exhibit satisfactory evidence that they have been born into the kingdom of God. The enlargement of the field of ministerial labor within the bounds of Shiawassee county, during the past twelve months, and the daily increase of calls for preaching, attest the growing interest in the subject of religion which now pervades this region. Indeed, it may be truly said that the field is white already to the harvest.

Abundant Labors.

Your missionary, during the past year has traveled about three thousand miles, preached two hundred sermons, visited all the Presbyterian churches in the county, being five in number, organized one new Congregational church, consisting of twenty members, and made three hundred ministerial visits; during which period he has not omitted one appointment on account of personal sickness; and, though called upon to submit to many privations, and to great fatigue, both of mind and body, he has great reason to record this instance of the goodness and faithfulness of God, both in preserving his own health and life, and that of his family, without interruption. Surely, the praise is all due to Him who hears the young ravens when they cry, and who will not suffer his servants to labor in vain, nor spend their strength for naught.

Conversion and Happy Death.

We have been much cheered by an instance of supposed conversion among my people. It was that of an interesting female, a wife and mother, who, I am told, during the revival in the winter before the last, had been seriously affected, and who, it was expected, would soon connect herself with the church of Christ. Her husband, too, together with his father, had been wrought upon during that season of refreshing. The father, however, hesitated about joining the church, on the ground, as he termed it, of his exceeding unworthiness. The husband also hesitated and delayed, hoping that both his wife and parents would come with him into the church of God, all at the same time. But this father, some six or eight weeks ago, was taken sick with a lung fever, and shortly after, died. On Friday last, I preached the funeral sermon of the wife. She died, as we think, in the triumph of faith, trusting in Christ, and singing, "Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove," until her strength forsook her. But before she died, she wanted to make that open confession of Christ which she had neglected in health. She wanted to connect herself with Christ in baptism. I visited her for that purpose, at her request, and found her in great distress, but clear minded, intelligent, and steadfast in her wish to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. I complied with her wish, in the presence of her husband and household, and during the evening of the following day, she went into the spirit world, singing, "Holy Spirit, heavenly dove." Both father and wife, we trust, have joined the church triumphant. The husband need wait for them no more.

When I visited this female in the commencement of her last sickness, she did not think her heart had ever been changed by the Holy Ghost, and she felt no peculiar anxiety on the subject of her salvation. Before she died, religion was her chief concern, and Christ her all in all. If heaven rejoices when one sinner repents,—if it joys with joy unspeakable when the lost is found, you must not be surprised if we, too, are deeply affected by this instance of conversion.

The Commission has Come!

The very welcome commission arrived this week, and brought much joy to me and to my family. Even my little girl, when her brother arrived from the Post Office, ran to me to the wood pile, almost out of breath, and cried out, "The commission,—the commission has come!" Such is the estimate placed upon the Home Missionary Society even by the little children of the western missionary. They know very well that your noble institution is their best earthly friend in these western forests.

Miscellaneous.

"THE MARTYR SPIRIT OF THE HOME MISSIONARIES."

Address of the Rev. James B. Shaw, of Rochester, N. Y., at the twenty fifth Anniversary.

The phrase martyr-spirit, possesses, in a modified sense, the power of the resurrection. The words cannot be spoken but a thousand fires start from their ashes—a thousand graves give up their dead. They bear us back over the intervening ages; we stand where our fathers stood, and see what our fathers saw. We are in St. Andrew's, gathering with the multitude around the spot where Patrick

Hamilton is to die. We are in London, following John Rogers, as he goes up in his chariot of fire. We are in Smyrna, listening to the last words of Polycarp, the disciple of John. We are in Jerusalem, looking on the face of Stephen, which shone like an angel's. Nay, we have left the precincts of time—we have crossed the azure fields—we have passed the celestial gate. We are standing on the sea of glass, and our eyes are fixed on the great wonder of heaven, a Lamb as it had been slain—the martyr-Lamb. The martyr spirit has always been in the church; is now in the church. It is the life of the church: there can be no church without it. No man at the present day, we acknowledge, can die, except indirectly, for Christ. He might covet a martyr's death, and determine to secure whatever glory it can confer. He might select his tree and fell it—might hew out his cross and stretch himself upon it, and call on every one who passed by to take the hammer and drive home the nails. But who would regard the call? Put a Christian to death! why, it would not pay. Time and strength could be turned to better account. A poor speculation to crucify a man who, like Elijah and like Christ, had nothing but his mantle to leave behind.

But if a man cannot, except indirectly, die for Christ, he can suffer for him. He can endure hunger, and thirst, and cold and nakedness. He can forego every comfort, and encounter every evil. Voluntary suffering is the essential element of the martyr spirit. Every man who for Christ's sake bears a pain or endures a privation which might have been avoided, is a martyr, and shall receive a martyr's peerless crown. Now, no men in the land, as we think—no men in the world possess so much of the martyr-spirit—no men any where are, to-day, giving up so much, and suffering so much for the Master, as our Home Missionaries. There is indeed nothing which these devoted men would not do—nothing they would not bear, if the Lord Jesus might only get glory thereby.

The celebrated Samuel Johnson, when servitor in college, was exceedingly poor. One winter, a severe winter, his shoes were in such a dilapidated condition that every body pitied the man; and a gentleman-commoner one night delicately placed a new pair at his door. Johnson arose in the morning, took up the shoes; but instead of putting them on, walked to the banks of the river Cam and threw them in. Johnson valued an education beyond all the gold above the ground or under the ground, and he was willing to do every thing but one to secure it. He could work, he could put himself on an allowance, he could go in rags, but he could not depend on another. He could not wear a gift garment, or eat charity bread. His shoes, it is true, were old and past repair; the water had free ingress, but not so free egress; they exoriated the feet, and were but a beggarly protection against the cold. But they never upbraided him with his dependence—never told him that he was a pensioner on another's bounty, or worried him with the remembrance of uncanceled obligation. So he stuck to the old shoes, and discarded the new. But these Home Missionaries can do what Samuel Johnson could not do. For Christ's sake, they can wear a gift garment; for Christ sake they can eat charity bread; and wear the one and eat the other without envying man or reviling God. Oh! as we have already said, there is nothing which these men are not willing to do or to bear, if Christ may only get glory thereby. There is a minister of Jesus toiling in an obscure place. He has a bare living, and no provision—no patrimony, but a promise for which the worldling would scarcely give the parings of his pen. That man might have had a high place—that man might have gathered a large fortune—that man might have left his children a name that would have been a passport to any position. But possessing the true martyr spirit, he gave up all for Christ. Nor has he been deceived, nor is he disappointed, nor in any way dissatisfied. He has received all that he expected to receive. He has Christ. Continual toil, continual privation, continual anxiety, the prospect of a premature death, or a forsaken old age, cannot drive him from his post. Nor does he call himself an object of pity. He asks no man to drop a tear or utter a sigh for him. For his daily work he gets his daily compensation—not fortune or fame—not a place or a name, but Christ. Old Philip Henry said that he would beg all the week to preach on the Sabbath; and blessed be God, the Philip Henrys are not all dead yet. There are men now in the American Church who would preach the Gospel, if they had to go from the poor-house to the pulpit, and the pulpit to the poor-house. And if any man is curious to know where these men are, we point him to the West. You cannot starve these men out of the ministry. There is but one way to silence them, and that is the way which the Scribes and Pharisees took. You must revive the old order of things—must make preaching once more a capital offence, and put every man to death who tries to turn a sinner from the error of his ways.

Another thing which adds value to the voluntary suffering of our Home Missionaries, is the fact that they have perhaps less outward encouragement and support than any other class of men. The Foreign Missionary is an honored man among us, and most worthily so. His name is one of our household words, and his labors part of the common glory which constitutes the patrimony of the church. Come when he may, there are always warm hands and warm hearts ready to give him a reception.

But when a Home Missionary comes back to his native region, if he attracts any attention at all, it is not the attention which a wise man desires, or a good man deserves. A gentleman told me of a scene which he witnessed in one of our most wealthy, influential, eastern churches, and when I mention it you will perceive that it is an illustration in point. A western man entered the pulpit—he was a western man, there could be no misapprehension on that point. There was something about his gait, a something about his dress, a something about his manner, a something about the whole man, which showed clear enough to which side of the mountains he belonged. Yes, he hailed from the West, and there had endured hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. He had gone whole days without food. He had slept all night on the ground. He had entered the pulpit with an ague fit upon him, and swam rivers and preached with dripping clothes. He had passed over plains where nations might have gathered their food. He had wandered through forests where armies might have lost their way. He had sailed down rivers, each one of which might have supplied a continent with water, and been a river still. And he himself had been made on the same grand scale as the plains and forests and rivers of his native West. His own great heart could have supplied a whole community of ordinary men, with noble impulses and benevolent purposes, and been a heart still. But I am to speak to-night of the congregation, and not of the man. Some of the audience came to the door, and seeing who was in the pulpit, made a precipitate wheel—some arose and left the house—some turned scornfully away—some settled down to sleep; while all seemed to say, this is a hard infliction, who can bear it? But the western man made them all heartily ashamed before he got through. When he finished his powerful, if not polished discourse, every head was up, every eye fixed, every ear open. When the never to be forgotten, the ever to be lamented Dr. Nelson, preached in my pulpit, the congregation thought that some miller of the city, not wonted to the sanctuary, had made a mistake and got into the wrong place. But that gifted man preached a sermon remembered to this day, as no other sermon preached in that house, has been remembered.

Oh! we none of us know how much we are indebted to these godly, these self-denying men. We none of us know how much they are doing for the church, how much for the country. Elijah was worth more to Israel than all the other inhabitants of the land, and worth more because he possessed the martyr spirit and had power with God. All the priests of Baal, all the false prophets of Jezebel, all the sycophants of Ahab's court, could not have put a cloud in the sky big as a man's hand. But Elijah prayed, and every window in heaven was opened. The only green thing then in Judea was the mountain moss, which had hid away from the sun under some sheltering stone, and all the prayers of all the ungodly in the land could not have secured for that the little moisture it might need. But Elijah prayed, and the answering clouds came thick and fast, and the rain fell as if for another flood. Now these Home Missionaries are all Elijahs. They all have power with God, not that they could replenish the emptied cruse, or reproduce the consumed bread. No, they can do something better; they can avert God's anger; they can secure God's blessing. What keeps this city from destruction? The avenging elements are on every side of you, above, beneath, around; and what stays their wrath? Your municipal laws, your city authorities, your day and night police? Nay, but what kept the commissioned fire so long from Sodom? The prayers and intercessions of the righteous.

Let us then, Mr. President, sustain our Home Missionaries, for they are the men who watch over the republic—they are the men who tend the national watchfires—they are the men who infuse into the masses those virtuous principles, without which we must drift among the breakers and dash upon the rocks!

The Support of Pastors.

A correspondent of the Louisville Presbyterian Herald states the following facts, as specimens of the support given to ministers in that vicinity. Similar statements have likewise recently appeared in the Ohio Observer.

"Rev. Mr. A—— is a good man, with fair talents, and good theological education, and some years experience as a minister, and a very laborious worker in the vineyard. In the churches to which he ministers, there are 111 members and 51 families—many of them in good worldly circumstances. These 51 families with 111 members, paid Mr. A—— $146 only, for ministering to them during the last year as a messenger of Christ."

"Can you employ a clerk or printer's boy for such a sum?"

"The Rev. Mr. B—— is a gentleman of finished education, having spent ten years and $1,500 in securing it—an investment which, with his talents, would secure in any other department, a comfortable living, and a handsome profit for increasing his capital. He preaches to about 140 members in 60 families—some of these families are wealthy—adding farm to farm, and in educating their children, these parents spend several hundreds per annum. Do you suppose that this good brother receives as much from these 60 families for his faithful labors as does a second or third clerk on one of your Louisville steamboats? I trow not. Would $400, without boarding, satisfy your clerk? And that is more than he received."

"Rev. Mr. C—— is a young man of superior mind—good education—fine address—great amenity and sweetness of temper, and especially characterized by humility and fervor in his vocation as a minister of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. His church membership is near 90, comprising some 50 families. These 50 families paid him last year for his unremitting and earnest labors for their spiritual good, the sum of $160."

"Rev. Mr. D——'s case is exactly parallel to C——'s. But I need not specify further—I ask whether the church can ever hope to prosper while setting such an estimate upon the ministry?"

"These churches are not poor, except in spirit, and that not in the Scriptural sense of the phrase. They are able to live comfortably—educate their children and increase their possessions, and pay a compensating price for all they procure—except the Gospel!"

The evil here complained of is not confined to the western country. It is a great and crying evil throughout the land. We have a letter before us from a minister in one of the eastern counties of New York, in which he says, "I received a call to this church with a salary of $400, and hoped to receive a payment in three months; but seven months have passed and I have received not more than $30." The salaries of ministers, even in New England, and throughout the middle States, except in a few prominent situations, not only fall very far short of a fair compensation for the services rendered, but furnish a very inadequate support. A great many pastors in our country are obliged to depend on other resources.

Some of them use up a little private patrimony which they ought to reserve for the time when they may be laid aside; some resort to literary labor; and others, by far the greatest number, who have no such means within their reach, patiently toil on, under crushing embarrassments, till compelled to seek a dismissal as the only remedy.

There are several causes which have contributed to produce this state of things in the East. In New England, the primitive custom was, to settle a minister for life, and to give him in the commencement, what they termed a "settlement," which consisted of a house and a small farm, or some portion of the means of procuring them. The demand for ministerial labor was not so great but that he could find some time to labor on his farm; and in process of time, his boys assisted him in the labor of cultivation. And, in the simple style of those times, his eighty pounds a year, with the product of his farm, furnished a good living, and enabled him to make comfortable provision for his old age.

But, with the advance of society, the style and expense of living have greatly increased; while the stirring spirit of the age requires the whole time and the undivided energies of the minister to be devoted to his appropriate work. At the same time, the views of the people, as to the support of the ministry, have not advanced in due proportion; and the variety of denominations, and the multiplication of parishes, in order to give every man a church at his own door, has made them all comparatively weak.

But, the principal cause lies back of all these, in a radical error as to the principle upon which a minister is to be paid for his services. It is supposed that he is simply and only entitled to a support, without any regard to the value of his qualifications and labors. The value received principle is rejected as too profane to find a place in church matters. But is this the principle of the Gospel? Christ says, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Here, the value received is distinctly recognized as the ground of a minister's support. His salary is therefore to be estimated upon the common mercantile principle; and he should be paid what he is worth. Look, then, first at the capital which he has embarked. He has spent nine years of vigorous youth, in obtaining an education. It is a low estimate, to say that, in this time, he might have laid up $1,000; and without doubt, he has expended $2,000 besides his time. In many instances, he enters on his profession in debt for a portion of this sum. The interest on $3,000 is $180. If these nine years had been spent in mercantile business, he might, upon a low estimate, command a thousand dollars salary as a clerk. This would make $1,180. Or, with this capital he might engage in lucrative business or purchase a valuable farm. Or, with the same time devoted to an education, he might take rank in either of the other learned professions.

There is another aspect, also, in which this may be viewed. The maintenance of public worship enhances the value of real estate in any place at the lowest calculation, twenty-five per cent. We have known it immediately to advance 100 per cent. on the building of a house of worship. And we venture to say, there is no town in the country where it would not fall more than twenty-five per cent. on the withdrawing from it the regular preaching of the Gospel. The property holders, therefore, are benefited in their secular concerns, (to say nothing of their spiritual interests,) to the full value of a minister's services.

But, instead of receiving compensation upon this principle, the inquiry is made, "How little can our minister live upon?" And the standard is set down at the minimum, not the maximum. Hence, men who, by devoting themselves to secular pursuits, might command an abundance, and grow rich, are put upon a bare subsistence, and even that is held back and not paid. A great many worthy men even in New England and New-York, are put upon an allowance of $400 or even less; and we doubt whether the average in the West would reach that sum. The consequence is, their minds are continually worried with pecuniary embarrassment, and they are obliged to shift from place to place, with the hope of bettering their condition, and then forced to exclaim,

"And 'tis a poor relief we gain,
To change the place but keep the pain."

There is not only downright injustice in this thing, but it is bad policy.—New York Observer.

Center of the World.

The States of North America, are to be the commercial center of the globe. This destiny seems so inevitable, that one hardly requires more than an inspection of the map to perceive it. Both sides of the globe—the two hemispheres are ours, by our position; for we are the land of two oceans. From our hither shore we hail the European and African continents; from our thither shore we greet Oceanica and the African continent. And all between the oceans is our own; to be filled with our own people, under common institutions, speaking one language. The interior structure of this continent peculiarly fits it to be thus the mart of the globe. Its rivers open the interior, from almost every part, and give natural outlets; its lakes are embosomed oceans, giving to the northern frontier a third shore and an inland commerce, scarcely less than the Atlantic or Pacific shore. Such artificial ways as are needed, especially the great thoroughfares from ocean to ocean, the inland highway, from the Atlantic to the Pacific—are within our own bounds. We have no Prussia on our border; no Russia beyond her. Our vast interior is not grouped into national estates, blocking each other up, and wasting each other's means by monstrous armies of watch or attack. We can ask of commerce what she needs, and whether it is northward or southward, eastward or westward, her path lies among our people. Shortly the carrying trade of the globe must be in our hands! Upon our shores are the gates through which must pass the world's merchandise. But let a thousand cities spring up where one now toils and groans with the wheels of industry, and let canals and roads and rivers be increased a hundred fold, our resources, when developed, will require them all. Our mineral treasures are not a few—a little lead, a little coal—but all minerals known to science, or discovered by art are here. Every year's discovery teaches us that the few, not yet found out, will soon be added to the catalogue. Our agricultural products, in variety, surpass computation, and in quantity, defy imagination. Were all our fields in till, and the products given to commerce for distribution, we could supply the globe, though every foreign acre rested a thousand years.—Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

Settlement of California.

We have, for fifty years, been moving upon the heathen world from the eastern shore of the continent, and have been compelled to make almost the circuit of the earth, and to cross two oceans, on our way to Asia and the islands of the Pacific. We needed some position nearer our work. We needed a country whose climate, and soil, and rivers and harbors, should invite the establishment of a great centre of christian civilization on the shores of the Pacific. It was indispensable that the country should be unoccupied, in which we might plant the Anglo-Saxon race, remote from the regions where the Aztec, the Indian, the Negro and the Spaniard mingle their blood, vices, and superstitions. It was indispensable, too, that the country should possess extraordinary attractions for the emigrant, and yet, that these attractions should be hidden from every eye until the land should become ours. All these conditions, the co-existence of which would seem impossible, are fulfilled in California. Its climate is genial, its bay is the noblest on earth, and its wealth is the wealth of Ophir. Its treasures were strangely hidden from the searching eye of Cortez, who discovered its shores; from the Jesuit missionaries and gold hunters who followed his footsteps, and from the unerring instinct of modern rapacity. No sooner did the land become ours, than the sands began to glitter, the rivers rolled the generous tide along their courses, and the rock-bound and ice-bound vaults of the Sierra Nevada unlocked their golden gates. A nation was born in a day. It now looks forth upon the beaming brow of Asia; it feels the spicy gales of Polynesia. Commerce, the great auxiliary of the Gospel, has at last found the long sought western passage to India, and is spreading her sails for shores whose unexhausted wealth has enriched western Europe for a thousand years. Those vast dominions oceanic and continental, usurped by Satan, but long since given to the Son of God, now lie at our very doors. Our western mountains almost cover them with their shadows. The new position, far on towards the heathen world, is gained. The church may at once plant there her standard, and advance, as the sun advances, westward upon China, New Holland, and Polynesia.—Rev. Dr. E. P. Humphrey.

Relations and Claims of Our Country.

The vastness of its extent and capabilities, the peculiar character of its present and prospective population, its wide destitutions, its multiform religions, its Gorgon infidelity and blaspheming atheism, with its rampant vices, and atrocious crimes, its intimate connections with other nations, and its mighty influence for good or ill over the world, according to the spirit that pervades its bosom, through the channels of learning, commerce, and quenchless enterprise—all distinctly announce our duty to "publish salvation," and say to every city, hamlet, and individual of the land, "Jehovah reigns."

Would you then, bless your country, and the world? Rise to labor, and lead forth the streams of salvation, and invite every man who claims a common birth-right here, to come to the waters—to come, and drink, and drink again, without money and without price. So shall our American Zion become an eternal excellency—joy shall fill her sanctuaries, glory shall cover her palaces, and her righteousness shall spring forth before all nations.—Rev. Dr. Storrs.

Our Country.

Lines suggested by seeing a large new map of the United States at a Home Missionary Meeting in Bridgeport, Ct., June 18, 1851.

My Country's Portrait! on yon canvas wide,
Her bold, bright features, greet my raptured eyes;
A mighty ocean rolls on either side,
And here and there her dark-browed mountains rise.

There are her rivers! broad, and deep, and wild,
Mid wooded banks, or mid the prairies vast.
There glides the stream New England's loving child Remembers well, where'er his lot be cast.
At Oregon, or where the golden mine
Allures his steps from home and kindred dear,
His thoughts, beloved Connecticut, are thine.
He to thy mem'ry sheds the frequent tear,
And hears, in dreams, the music of thy waves,
Which sigh from near his fathers' graves.

America! my country, dear thou art,
Not only in the spot that gave me birth;
Thou art all mine! I wear thee in my heart
From heaven above thee, to thy lowest earth;
From East to West; far as the eye can see
In yonder picture, reaching wide and fair:
From the great lakes' united family,
To orange groves that wave in Southern air—
Thou art all mine! thou land of liberty;
Thy hopes, thy fame, thy power, belong to me.

But not for these I love thee, though I glow
To call thee mine! Not for thy new-found wealth,
Thy giant mountains and thy rivers' flow,
Nor yet because earth's weary ones have found
The tranquil shadow of thine eagle's wing.

Hence of the Church! here let her children flee,
As they have fled, from superstition's power.
Lo! from our blood-nursed soil a glorious tree
Shelters the nations in earth's stormy hour.
Watered by tears, and fanned by martyrs' sighs,
It blooms and brightens mid the wrecks of time;
While from its branches notes of gladness rise,
Till distant islands catch the strain sublime;
For o'er its tops REDEMPTION'S morning glows;
The desert buds and blossoms as the rose! M. A. H.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

VOL. XXIV.

OCTOBER, 1851.

No. 6.

Our Country for the Sake of the World.

A DISCOURSE on this topic was preached in behalf of the American Home Missionary Society, in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn, in May last, by Rev. D. H. Riddle, D. D., of Pittsburgh, Pa. The text is Psalm 67: 1, 2. "God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations." The duty of American Christians to labor for the establishment of religious institutions in all parts of our land, as the means of securing the evangelization of the world, is eloquently enforced. The extracts which follow, though embracing only a few of the points illustrated, will be read with interest. The Sermon has been published by the Society, and is commended to the attentive perusal of every friend of Home Missions.

Sources of our Country's Influence.

In the sober light of facts and statistics, and the deep responsibilities they involve, we can hardly adequately measure the present, and especially the prospective greatness and consequent influence of our country. This impression is deepened by every view we can take of our country.

Look at the extent of territory, embraced in our present limits, immensely enlarged by recent annexations and acquisitions, requiring new editions of geography and alterations of maps every year to keep pace with our progress—stretching already from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from wintry Maine to golden California! What a country! What an immense sea coast! And then a northern boundary of glorious inland seas—God's highways of commerce and communication from one extremity to the other!

The same impression is made, if we look at the physical resources of our country—the almost immeasurable capacity of sustaining population, and the almost infinitely varied productions of her soil. The natural resources of the American continent, it is computed, would afford sustenance to 3,600,000,000 inhabitants—four times the estimated present population of the globe. The Western country alone, could supply the whole world with bread-stuffs! I remember to have seen at one time, years ago, on the levee at St. Louis, a pile of such, half a mile long, and nine feet high!

Again, this impression is deepened, if we think of the prospective population of our country. It is conjectured, that fifty years from this time, we shall have a population of 75,000,000; and 100 years hence, of 275,000,000. In other words, where there is now one person, 50 years hence there will be 5, and 100 years from this time 16. And these will not be serfs or paupers, but American freemen, enlightened by education, conscious of their rights, and privileges, and powers, whether moulded or restrained by religion or not. Long before this latter period, our people, reinforced from the effete nations of the Old World, will have filled up the vast basin of the Mississippi, and stretched across the Rocky Mountains to the shores of the Pacific, and be occupying centers of commercial wealth and of moral power, in close proximity to China and the East; and thus, empire and civilization, completing the mystic cycle, will reach the point whence they began their march westward round the world!

Again, the same view is confirmed if we think of the enterprise of our country. How many hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory have we settled already; and how many tens of thousands of miles of canals and railroads have we constructed, and are now constructing and projecting! What immense primeval forests have given place, as by enchantment, to villages, and towns and cities! See how agriculture, and commerce, and manufactures, and schools, and churches spring up along the path of American enterprise! In virtue of this characteristic, the United States have already become the third, if not the second, in the rank of commercial nations. The rapidity of our growth in this respect, throws Tyre, and Venice, and Holland, and England altogether into the shade. We now compete successfully with England in furnishing ships, engines and machinery for other nations. We excel and undersell her, in almost every market of the world; and by superior diplomacy, share with her in the results of her conquests in India and China. At the wharves of Pittsburgh we fit out vessels for the trade of the Orinoco. American artisans build railroads for the Autocrat of Russia. They construct steamers for the Sultan of Turkey, and build and drive coaches across the desert for the Pacha of Egypt. We shall soon have lines of communication across the Isthmus of Darien, and a continuous communication to the Pacific, across the continent. But a few years ago, we carried on a war with one nation of the New World, and, without inconvenience, fed at the same time the starving nations of the Old. Go where you will over the globe, and you will find Americans—amidst the icebergs of the northern and southern Poles, in the ports of China, India and Japan, in the Bosphorus and the Baltic, at the foot of the Himalayas and the Caucasus, at the World's Fair in London, and in search of Sir John Franklin!

In the same connection we may notice the element of power involved in our unity. With this immense population, and almost measureless resources, we shall have, unless evil counsels and sectional animosities prevail—which God in his mercy forbid—the influence of a united people. There is nothing like this in Europe. The ten toes of the great image, part iron and part clay, have no common principle of cohesion. European influence is frittered, from the fact that it has had no unity since the age of Charlemagne. Europe is but a congregation of nations of different languages, habits and religions; and the traveler feels it as he passes from Britain to France, Spain, Germany and Italy. But power, as it passes into our hands, comes to one people, speaking the same language, the language of Milton, Shakspeare, and the English Bible, having one literature, and one great common soul. . . . It seems as if the great God meant of all these materials to 'make one new man'—a type of humanity embracing the separate excellencies of all other forms. The element of power, for good or evil, involved in this unity and nationality, is immense.

If we look at these elements separately, especially if we combine them together on the most obvious principles, it must be allowed that our influence will be great;

the weight of our example must be felt, the spirit of our institutions will be copied, and the type of our Christianity or Infidelity will be reproduced over the globe. We are set for the rise or the fall of many in our world. Nations unborn will rise up and call us blessed, if we become their benefactors, or load us with their heaviest curses, if we disappoint their rightful expectations.

Our Relations and Duties to the West.

The issues involved in this question depend very much on the character assumed and influence exerted by the West—on the fact, in other words, whether we supply its wastes, and build there in a few years ‘the foundation of many generations.’ Religious institutions do not rise spontaneously, or necessarily keep pace with the growth of population. The human heart naturally does not value or secure evangelical influences. Its uncounteracted tendencies, if not to barbarism, are certainly to irreligion. Men everywhere, and in all ages, love darkness rather than light; especially the men who go out from the influences of churches and pastors, to seek their fortunes and dig for golden ore, and build them towers whose top will reach unto heaven. And such is the character of much of the population crowding the West. Scorched by the revivals, and restive under the restraints of other States, they go like Cain of old to found or find a city of repose. The restless spirit of change, the feeling of Daniel Boone, drives men from New England or New York, to Illinois or Iowa, and then to Wisconsin and Minnesota, and then to Oregon and California. The outward wave is rolling onward, without regurgitation, till it meets the Pacific, where next to dash, God only knows!

No one who has not traveled in the West can conceive aright of this subject, and the momentous issues involved in it. In the absorbing cares of business, the multiplicity of outward incitements and ever-recurring pageants, the uniform flow of affairs year after year, in older States and cities, we are prone to think that all is well, and the West will take care of itself. But to be able to pray the prayer of the text aright, every Christian ought, if possible, to see the West for himself. Good old deacons from New England, staid divines from churches where order and orthodoxy are triumphant, New York merchants, retired civilians, and philanthropists, in order to realize their obligations, should go and survey the land where their children or children’s children are to dwell—to be blessed or cursed, be blessings or curses, according as we do, or neglect to do our duty. This rapid transfer of population from the older settlements to the new, and the unparalleled tide of emigration from the Old World, to which recent events there will only give additional momentum, is a new development in the economy of nations, giving rise to new duties and responsibilities, and adjusting Christian obligation on a new scale of projection altogether.

“No pent up Utica contracts our powers,
But the whole boundless continent is ours,” to care for, and to christianize.

Characteristics of the West.

It need not and ought not to be concealed, that in the West there is a singular energy of error, and tendency to extremes of opinion on all subjects. Every thing there is on a large scale—rivers, forests, prairies. However philosophically accounted for, the same is true of their errors also. Errors, like weeds, grow rank in the human heart, without constant cultivation; while truth, like the valuable productions of the husbandman, requires constant, patient and diligent cultivation. The errors of the West are of gigantic proportions. Their leaders are bold, reckless and revolutionary. One of the most striking characteristics of the West, too, is the spirit of self-reliance, not to term it self-assurance, which manifests itself in church and state, among saints and sinners. They pronounce judgment on subjects which have perplexed the wisest heads of all time, with a self-satisfaction absolutely thrilling. They have, beyond all doubt, 'the spirit of power,' whether blended or not with the elements of 'love and a sound mind.' They are like their steamboats of high pressure, which have vast propelling power, whether they have prudent captains and sober crews or not. Like one of their representatives in Congress, many of them feel themselves head and shoulders above the rest of mankind.

Every variety of human opinion, too, every heresy ever conceived in the human heart, or studied in the silent chamber in past ages, every plunge of radicalism, and every grade of infidelity is there. The errorist and revolutionist, from the older States and the other hemisphere, there find the material all plastic to their hand. The extremes of opinion, represented in our most sober communities, and trying in vain to work themselves into the religious and social structure, may there be carried out to the full extent, without regard to consequences. The mighty West seems like a great caldron, where every heterogeneous element is fermenting, foaming, and every now and then overflowing. Far off in these wilds you may meet traveling agencies for New York books, a certain kind of literature, there known as the 'Yellow Cover Literature,' the miserable trash of paid scribblers—the staple productions of some large and flourishing eastern establishments.

Whether we sleep over this subject, or wake up to a proper sense of duty and danger, while some ecclesiastics are fearing lest colportage will trench on their official prerogatives, there are bold and strong men there, 'not afraid to speak evil of dignities,' night and day sowing tares, scattering broadcast over the land their pestilent errors, loosening the bonds of morality, sapping the foundations of society, and baptizing the young with their baleful influences. What we do in this matter, we must do quickly, if at all—with our might, or the crisis is past. The preponderating political and religious influence of our country will soon be found, if it does not exist already, in the West. If we wait, if we trust these matters to chance, or please ourselves with dreamy anticipations, and do not rise and build, other hands will be found to give shape and character to this region, and seize these elements of power, and use them for their own purposes. There is a tide in human things, moments when the light dust may turn the balance of a nation's destiny one way or the other. And what but an educated, orthodox ministry, a ministry acquiring influence by intellectual superiority, and retaining it by intelligent piety and persevering efforts—just such a ministry as the Home Missionary Society proposes to send out—will meet the exigency created by these circumstances? What other conservative principles, than evangelical piety and institutions, can we trust amidst the tempests of passion and error which threaten to engulf all that is dear to us as patriots and Christians, and all that is embosomed for our world, in the purity and perpetuity of American Christianity?

Our Mission and the Alternative it Involves.

In the light of the idea we have endeavored to elucidate and incorporate with your heart's deepest feelings, we can best see the reason and meaning of all God's past dealings with our country. In this aspect, our country must ever appear, to all capable of apprehending her position and relations, most lovely and glorious—as the signet in the right hand of God Almighty, by which he purposes to seal upon our fallen humanity its last type of beauty and blessedness. In the light of this purpose, we read with peculiar interest the facts of our antecedent history, civil and religious, from the beginning, hitherto. We can see why he planted these colonies; why he has preserved them; why he has interposed in answer to prayer in our darkest perils; why he has kept alive the spirit of piety, and granted us so many seasons of revivals; why he suggested the idea of voluntary associations; why he originated the Tract Society, and the glorious appendage of colportage; why, when the career of emigration first began, he put into the hearts of good men to form the Plan of Union; why, in advance of that unexampled career of expansion in recent times, which finds limits only by stretching from ocean to ocean, he originated this glorious Association of Home Missions, with its collateral blessings, to keep pace, if possible, with the march of an almost incalculable multiplication. Yes! it does seem as if God, our Heavenly Father, had prepared us, has been teaching us, for something great, and good, and glorious,—as Joseph was trained in youth, and then raised out of prison, to save much people alive in time of famine; and as David was called from tending sheep to lead the armies of the living God; and Hadassah was advanced from orphanage to the side of royalty to save her people, at an awful crisis.

O, my country! 'Who knoweth whether thou'—lone orphan, cast out from thy fatherland and cut off from a mother's kindness in thy youth, and now Queen regnant, imperial and peerless—'hast not come to the kingdom for such a time,' and for such a purpose 'as this?' And after all, wilt thou fail to understand thy mission, and fall in with God's obvious purpose, and appreciate aright thy privilege and responsibility? In schemes of self-glorification or aggrandizement, wilt thou lose the glorious opportunity of impressing thine image, as God's signet, on the rest of the earth? O, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, American Christians of this generation! 'Shall our country be the home of piety and virtue, or the mighty reservoir of irreligion and vice? Shall the voice of prayer and praise, or of cursing and blasphemy be heard throughout her borders? Shall our literature and science, and commerce and agriculture pay their tribute to the King of kings, or serve to foster to giant growth the worst passions of the human heart? Shall this great nation be rent with sectional jealousies and scarred with the judgments of the Most High, or shall its future millions, as they rise in successive generations, walk in the light of his countenance, and, appreciating themselves the value of civil and religious liberty, extend their blessings to every land illumed by the sun or laved by the sea?'

CONNECTICUT MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Connecticut Missionary Society, Auxiliary to the American Home Missionary Society, held its last Annual meeting in the North Church, Bridgeport, Wednesday evening, May 18th.

The annual Reports of the Treasurer and Directors, were presented by the Secretary, Rev. Horace Hooker, and addresses were made by Rev. Milton Badger, D. D., one of the Secretaries of the A. H. M. S., Rev. Walter Clarke of Hartford, and Rev. B. W. Chidlaw, of Cincinnati, O.

Extracts from the Report.

The Receipts of the Society for the year ending June 1st, were $7,618.56, and its expenditures, $6,862.24. There ployed has been ninety, (last year eighty seven,) of whom seventy seven have been ordained ministers and thirteen licentiates. Fifty nine have been in commission during the year; twelve, from six months to ten; and nineteen, from one month to five. The whole amount of service during the year has been equal to that of an individual for sixty eight years; and that portion of it, for which they have been remunerated by the Society, to twenty six years. Six missionary pastors have been dismissed, one has died, four have been settled as pastors of particular churches, one more is just about to receive installation, and another is under a call.

From forty to fifty parishes, once assisted by this Society, are now self-supporting establishments. Some of these have already given many fold the whole amount which they formerly received. During the past year Woolwich has withdrawn from the list of our beneficiaries; and no application has been made for any further assistance from the church in Gardiner.

State of the Treasury.

At the last annual meeting the Society was reported free from debt, and a balance in its treasury of $499.67. The receipts during the year have amounted to $11,811.37 (including a loan of $1,000) of which $9,001.34 have been donations from various sources, and $1,322 have been the avails of legacies. Since the last annual meeting, $12,051.46 have been paid from the treasury, including the repayment of the loan with the interest accruing, and there is now in the treasury a balance of $259.58. In addition to this, more than $5,000 will be needed to pay what the Society this day owes, to those who under its commission have labored in the Lord's vineyard.

Though a less amount of money will have been expended in paying for the services of the past year, than was required for the services of the year preceding, yet the number of missionaries employed and the amount of service performed by them have been greater. This fact, together with that before noticed of new fields entered, are indications of progress in the missionary work. Yet not of such progress as should be earnestly desired, and aimed at.

Magnitude of the Work.

Though forty four years have elapsed since this Society began its endeavors to supply the State of Maine with the min-istrations of the Gospel, there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed. Of the nine churches, belonging to the Aroostook Conference, but one has a pastor, and the amount of congregational preaching for the past year, within the whole of that interesting region, has been lamentably small. Of the sixteen Congregational churches in Washington County, only seven have ordinarily been blessed with constant preaching. During the past year three have been almost wholly destitute. Of the thirty nine towns in that county, fourteen are reported, containing a population of 8,166, as supplied with preaching (by any denomination), not more than one fourth of the time, and ten towns, with their 4,000 inhabitants, and 23 plantations with a population of 915, as without preaching. To build up these waste places, and many others beside them in all parts of the State, is a work of great magnitude, requiring years of patient, persevering labor, and a large amount of charitable aid.

For this Missionary Society to render needed assistance, in rearing up to independence the one hundred feeble churches that are now looking to it for aid, and to do its part in supplying the numerous and widespread desolations of the State, is indeed a great work. But it must be done; and while the cry of thousands destroyed for lack of knowledge, and of God's dear children asking bread, and no man breaketh it unto them, is constantly waxing louder and louder, encouragements are not wanting to prosecute this work with cheerful zeal and with increased efficiency. The people must have some kind of religion. In the absence of sound christian instruction, they will even heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts, and will blindly follow blind guides, who need themselves to be taught the first principles of the oracles of God. Such an evil has not been unknown in Maine. But it is beginning in some quarters to work out its own cure. "Those who have occupied the ground somewhat for several years back have nearly deserted it, and the people are not sorry." "The people are seeing and feeling that if any permanent good is to come from the preaching of the Gospel among them, it must be through the continued labors of a settled ministry—of an enlightened pious ministry." Intelligence is coming to us from various quarters in which the voice of God's providence may be heard saying—Thrust in thy sickle and reap; for the time is come. Arise and be doing, and the Lord be with thee.

Intelligence from Missionaries.

OREGON.

From Rev. Horace Lyman, Portland.

Another Church Edifice in Oregon.

The obstacles which the Missionaries in Oregon have encountered in their efforts to erect houses of worship, have been peculiar. Soon after their arrival, a large portion of the male population forsook their homes and families, and rushed to the mines of California. Great excitement prevailed, business was almost suspended, labor was scarce and commanded enormous prices, and the effort to build the house of God—the material or the spiritual house—seemed nearly hopeless. The attempt, however, was made, and has been crowned with success. At Oregon City, a house of worship was finished and dedicated several months since. The following letter announces the same result in Portland, and presents a view of the difficulties under which it has been achieved.

On our arrival here in the autumn of 1849, almost the first question asked was, is there any place suitable for preaching? At that time there was none, though an uncompleted school house was used. This afterwards, by a partial completion, became a better place for worship, though as the people increased, the seats were too few to accommodate all who wished to attend. Hence we saw our need of a larger house, and one appropriate for worship. A little more than a year since, the proprietors of the town being very earnest in their wishes and efforts to promote its progress, made liberal offers of aid to any Protestant denomination who should build a house of worship. We saw our need of a meeting house, but there were only three or four persons in the place who were members of Congregational or Presbyterian churches; these we could not then form into a church, owing to their circumstances at that time. We saw our weakness as well as our need. We consulted together; we looked for heavenly direction; and we finally determined to make an effort and ascertain how much we could raise in town by subscription. An effort was made; our expectations were more than realized by the amount subscribed, and we decided to build. But we decided with trembling.

The cost of materials would be great, and the price of labor was from $10 to $12 per day. I feared also for my own health and strength, as I was building a small house for ourselves, the labor of which I intended to perform mostly myself. And I very well knew, that the superintendence of building the meeting house, and much of the work itself, would fall on myself. We then had no church as a reserve corps, to fall back upon in case of need. But yet we felt that the work must go forward, and we proceeded. The contract to build was made with a carpenter, the timber and lumber for building were purchased, and the work began to progress. All was favorable thus far, and we hoped to have the house completed in October last. But sickness, unforeseen, yet feared, came. For several months Mrs. L. and myself suffered from sickness, a portion of the time severely. At one time, I seemed on the very borders of the grave.

This long protracted and severe sickness, of course kept back the completion of the house, as the onward progress depended almost entirely upon myself. During the winter the joiner and carpenter work progressed slowly, and as the spring opened, my own returning health enabled me to take steps for the completion of the edifice. Day after day I labored among lime, and sand, and mortar; for our funds were more than exhausted, and the house was not yet completed. Every day of my labor prevented the increase of our debt by the sum of $4 or $5. Thus laboring, the work was finally completed on the week previous to Sunday, June 15th.

The exercises of dedication were held on the morning of that day. They were well attended, and were very interesting. I trust they have produced a good effect.

In the P. M. at 4 o'clock, a church was organized, consisting of 10 members. The exercises of the P. M. were of deep and thrilling interest, especially to myself and the church. We remembered the toil, and the trying scenes we had passed through in achieving the work of building in this country a temple for God. Mrs. L. and myself especially remembered how long we had stood alone, without any in the flesh—God was with us, we believe—to stay up our hands; and our feelings were such as words cannot describe. We were thankful to God, for the work was his. We rejoiced and wept. Others wept. The great Head of the Church was among us, we believe, by his Spirit, and it was indeed a melting season. O, may the effect of that communion season not be lost upon us, and upon our little church!

The edifice is 48 feet by 32, with a belfry and small spire. The body of the house contains 50 slips, which will accommodate from 350 to 400 persons. The expense of the building is $6,400, of which about $4,900 have been paid. It is supposed that such an edifice would have cost, in the States, not more than $2,000.

CALIFORNIA.

From Rev. J. H. Warren, Nevada City.

Mr. Warren arrived in California in October last, and spent the winter in supplying the pulpit of the 1st Congregational Church in San Francisco, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. T. D. Hunt. On the return of the latter in May, Mr. Warren proceeded to Nevada City, the most important town in the northern mines. We publish the following brief communication—the first received from him since his arrival—hoping soon to present a full account of his field and labors.

I write you now from my home in the Mountain City. It is a romantic and interesting spot—encircled entirely by hills, one of which is high enough to give the beholder a fine view of the Sacramento Valley, and the noble summits of the Sierra Nevada, and the broad ridges of the interminable coast range. Here too, are lofty pines towering in majestic height, not only beautiful, but useful and necessary. Instead of being thrust in among barren, precipitous, and forbidding hills and mountains, this part of the country abounds in water courses, and the most delightful valleys any where to be seen. From this place to Sacramento City—a distance of 85 miles—there are houses, private and public, ranches and farms, in such numbers, and at such distances, that a teamster is seldom more than an hour's ride from a house.

They who think that California is contained in three or four large towns, and all the rest of the State is in a perpetual fly away motion, need only get into one of Messrs. Birch & Co.'s line of stages at Sacramento City, or at this place, and before the eleventh hour of riding is over he will have seen enough, even riding at the rate of ten miles an hour, to convince him that California is fast becoming a fixed as well as a great fact. The country has the appearance of many of the older settled portions of Illinois. Those who were here a year ago, will hardly believe this; but so it is, and whether magic or something else has produced it all, it matters not. We can boast of almost as fine farms—or ranches, rather—as any country not more than a hundred years old.

I am preaching every Sabbath, morning and afternoon, in the Nevada Theatre. The Theatre goes open every Sabbath evenings. From what I can learn, I judge that they have larger audiences than the preacher. I have prayer meetings every Wednesday evening at my house, and they are well attended. We are putting up a large and commodious house of worship, which will cost $5,000 or $6,000. The frame will be raised next week, and in four weeks from that time we shall probably meet in it. This work now occupies all my time; I have to go to the miners at their work—in their tunnels, sluices, cayole holes—to their cabins, and every where else, and solicit funds to aid in our enterprise; I meet with all kinds of success and defeat. As I am becoming better known, and people learn that I am here to preach, and for nothing else, they are more and more inclined to give me their confidence and their aid. Already they begin to suggest the duty and propriety of supporting the preacher. From present appearances, I do not expect to draw on you any more for pecuniary aid. I am also happy to state that, through my efforts, a flourishing school has been opened, of 25 or 30 scholars, with a prospect of several additions shortly. Mr. Rodgers, the teacher, is a graduate of Hamilton College, and is a valuable member of our society.

MISSOURI.

From Rev. R. Winchell, Tully, Lewis Co.

The importance of Tully, as a location for a settled minister, is regularly advancing. The population has been steadily increasing; new houses are going up, and new families coming in; and in other respects it has the marks of a thriving town. But I am sorry to have to say, that wickedness seems to flourish as thriftily as the town. A large class of this people are of the stamp of those who first settle our frontier towns. They are in sympathy with the manners and customs of the first wave of population, and care for none of the things of religion. It is rare that such enter within the walls of the sanctuary, or hear the Gospel preached.

A Day of Small Things.

During the past year we have had no place of worship, except a store where the shelves were standing, and every thing gave tokens that it had been a house of merchandise.

Six months ago, with some hesitation and doubt, but by the advice of two brethren in the ministry, who came and assisted me, we organized a church of five members—four of them ladies. Only two of the five lived in town, and these were ladies. One of them was a widow, and the other the wife of an Episcopalian. We felt that it was indeed a day of small things, but we would not despise it. We were thankful even for such a token of good, while we were made to feel our entire dependence on the arm of our Heavenly Father. What could we expect? In how many years could we hope to be able to build us a church? Many, with even brighter prospects than we, have waited five, or even ten years, before they could build. Could we hope for better things?

Church Edifice Erected.

In two weeks we added ten more to our numbers, making fifteen; but nearly all of the ten lived at a distance of ten miles or more. In two months, our friends agitated the subject of building a house of worship. Our friends were sanguine that we could do it. A subscription paper was circulated, and 600 dollars were soon subscribed. In just three months from the organizing of the church, the foundation was completed for a church edifice, and in six months, strange to say, our house of worship was finished:—a neat, and even beautiful edifice, capable of holding 200 persons.

The dedication took place the next day, May 11th. The same two brethren who were with me in organizing the church, also aided me in the dedication. The Reformers, who were holding a meeting at the same time, thought we should have no one present, but our house was crowded to overflowing, and a number could not obtain seats. For us, it was a happy and a solemn day. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants, and baptism was administered to two children of one of the members of the church.

In all this enterprise, I have looked on with wonder and astonishment to see the Lord work. I have felt that it was he who was doing it; and I trust and pray, that the result may be for his glory, and for the good of this community.

WISCONSIN.

The Harvest Gathered.

A considerable number of the missionary churches of Wisconsin were favored, during the past winter, with powerful revivals of religion, some of which were noticed in the Home Missionary for May. It is grateful to learn, after the lapse of several months, that the permanent results of these refreshings fully realize the expectations expressed by the missionaries in their previous reports. The three churches mentioned in the following communications have received, as the fruits of these revivals, sixty eight members on profession of their faith. Such accessions of numbers and strength, to these feeble churches in the wilderness, must add to their efficiency and influence in a degree that can hardly be estimated. Let the record of these triumphs quicken and cheer us in our work!

From Rev. C. Morgan, East Troy, Walworth Co.

In my last communication, I gave you a brief account of what God was doing among us in the conversion of sinners and the building up of his church. Having had more time to witness the fruit, I am now able to say that it has truly been a most precious and powerful work of grace. Such a revival was never before enjoyed by this people, and seldom, I think in any place of this description, if we consider the number, character, and influence of those who are the hopeful subjects of it. It has taken hold of the strongest men in sin—those who stood most prominent in society—and made them to sit as little children at the feet of Jesus. In view of this work, it is a common remark, "how entirely changed is the whole aspect of society among us!" What hath God wrought? How far has he gone beyond the expectations of even his own people?

We have this day united in the celebration of the Lord's Supper, and as the fruit of the revival, have received into our fellowship thirty individuals by profession, and three by letter. Of these, twenty seven are heads of families; and they all, so far as we can judge, give good evidence of having been born again. May they hold on their way unto the end, and to God shall be all the glory! This we feel is a large accession unto our little church, which before numbered in all only twenty eight, of whom only seven or eight were male members. The influence of this work, as might be supposed, has been most happy on the church, in elevating her standard of holiness, and in increasing her confidence in God her Redeemer.

Our house is now scarcely large enough to contain the congregation, and we begin to talk of enlarging or building anew. I omitted to mention that during the revival there was scarcely any opposition; but when the duty of uniting with some christian church was enjoined on the young converts, there was a terrible onset made on the part of some individuals against all creeds, and an attempt was made to prevent young Christians from uniting with the church. For a time, some were a little in doubt in regard to duty; but to-day nearly all have come forward, and some whom we little expected.

From Rev. M. Wells, Troy, Walworth Co.

Eleven have united themselves with this church on profession of their faith; which, added to the number last reported, gives an accession to our church of twenty two, as the fruits of the last winter's revival. These converts all give evidence, in their walk, of a moral change, and of being decidedly on the Lord's side. A few for whom we had indulged hopes have fallen away, and give but little, if any evidence of ever having "passed from death unto life." A few others appear to hold on their way, who have not yet connected themselves with the people of God. All things considered, the influence of the revival has been most salutary and happy upon the community in general. Its effects can never be lost. And yet there is work enough for many more such revivals. All the sinners in our community are not yet converted, neither are all Christians as holy as they might be.

From Rev. L. Clapp, Wauwatosa, Milwaukee Co.

The special interest in religion, which I reported in my last communication, has brought forth only happy results to this community. At our last communion fourteen persons were received into the church, eleven on profession and three by letter. The number admitted to the church, since the first of January, is twenty. Of these, sixteen have been received on profession and four by letter. Of those admitted on profession, one half were heads of families.

There is now much that is encouraging in the religious aspect of this community. In the neighborhood adjoining this, the great majority, both old and young, belong to the family of Christ. The last time I preached there, the house would not hold the congregation. I counted above eighty in the Sabbath school. The young men have there commenced a prayer meeting for the benefit of the youth; and in the midst of this busy summer they turn out and fill the room. It would do you good to look in upon these meetings, and witness the spirit with which the praises of God are spoken and sung, the humility with which sin is confessed, and the advance which is made from week to week, in the knowledge of God. I am often affected by the thought, that perhaps some of these interesting youth, are, though they know it not, now being trained in the school of Christ, to be future missionaries of the cross.

Fruit of Six Years' Labor.

Six years ago there were thirty seven members in this church. Forty have since been added, fifteen by letter and twenty five on profession. Five who resided in Brookfield have been dismissed to churches that have been organized there. There are 26 heads of families (14 males and 12 females) now in connection with this church, who when they came here, were unconverted. These are some of the fruits of Home Missions in this place. The present number of the church members is 72. The average number of attendants on public worship has doubled in the last four years. No member of this church has died within these six years. There have been but two deaths of persons in the society over twenty years of age. No family connected with us has moved from town. My health, which was precarious when I came, has been such, that I have not been kept from my usual Sabbath labors on any Sabbath for the last five years.

An Errorist Reclaimed.

A death has recently occurred in that neighborhood, which has left on the hearts of a large circle a deep impression. It was that of a man, one of the most intelligent, influential and beloved in town, who, in the midst of his days, was suddenly taken from a young and lovely family, and from neighbors, who deeply deplore his loss. Before he moved to Wisconsin, he was an active member of a church in Massachusetts. He came here about eight years ago, near which time, in reading Combe and other similar writers, he imbibed the error, that the evils of human nature are to be rectified and the earth to be made a paradise, not by "spiritual influence," but by the "observance of the laws of health and of the social and moral constitution." The doctrine is, that the Holy Spirit is not needed to help man in the discovery and observance of these laws. It is one form of the doctrine of salvation by works, without a Savior and without a Sanctifier. This man was always a supporter of and regular attendant upon preaching. He had much benevolence of disposition; but repeated and earnest endeavors by myself and others were not successful in bringing him to a right belief. He has always been one for whom the prayers of Christians ascended without ceasing.

During the past year, his belief has been gradually weakened by striking providences towards himself and family. But still he clung to this belief, till death stared him in the face,—a death occasioned by an injury, which common sense and conscience assured him nothing but divine aid could have enabled him to escape. He did not, till the last, know that his sickness would prove fatal, but he knew that it might; and he found that his faith would not support him in death. He needed a Savior. He needed a Sanctifier. He renounced his own righteousness and prayed for a "complete sinking into Christ." He confessed his error, and acknowledged the truth. At my last interview with him, he exclaimed, "Christ is my only hope, my only hope."

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. A. W. Henderson, Morris, Grundy Co.

House of Worship Built.

I have but one event, out of the ordinary course, to notice; but that, to us, is an important one. We no longer worship in a hired upper room, but in a house dedicated to Almighty God. The people have exceeded their own anticipations, showing that where there is a ready mind and a beginning to do according to our ability, we may look for the blessing of God to crown our labors with abundant success. Our people felt as if they were too poor to build, and yet that they could no longer do without a house of worship. They concluded, therefore, to make the attempt to put up a small house that should serve the double purpose of a school and a church. But upon experiment they found that they had underrated their strength. The attempt has resulted in the erection of a church, small indeed, but large enough for present wants. It is completely finished, furnished, and virtually paid for. This effort has strengthened and encouraged the church. It has drawn out their resources, and given them a fixed place for public worship. It has also exerted a happy influence upon the community. The Gospel preached in private dwellings, in school houses, in hired rooms, wherever and however an opportunity can be found, is indeed the Gospel, and may be accompanied with the influences of that Holy Spirit who alone can cause it to reach the hearts of men; but yet it is preached under great disadvantages. Both preacher and people feel the influence of these discouragements, and many are altogether prevented from attending upon the means of grace.

The Dedication.

The dedication was an interesting season. This is the first church erected in the county, and all the ministers in the county (three) were present to participate in the exercises. Upon this occasion, I could not but reflect upon the necessity and the value of the labors of your Society. When I looked upon this new edifice, the congregation that occupied it, and the brethren at my side, who are preaching the word of life in other parts of the county, I could not but exclaim, "See what the Home Missionary Society has done!" Four years ago, this was a moral waste. One minister gave only half his time to the whole county. In this village, a dozen individuals, perhaps, assembled to hear preaching once in a month. Now, not only has this church been organized,—not only is a respectable congregation gathered on every Sabbath; but we have erected a house of worship. We joyfully raise our Ebenezer, for truly "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." Two other churches also have been formed in the county and supplied with ministers by your Society. The sheep scattered in the wilderness are gathered together, and to them the bread of life is broken. The foundations of churches are laid, now indeed feeble and requiring constant care, but which will probably be the birth place of souls, and which may one day occupy that place in giving the bread of life to others, which many churches, that in former years were brought into life and sustained by your bounty, now occupy. May the Great Head of the church prosper you more and more in giving the bread of life to the needy and the famishing.

Revival among Children.

Some addition has been made to our church since my last report. In the family of a resident minister, appeared some months since an interesting work of grace. Several of the children seemed to be under the influence of the divine Spirit. Their views of religious truth were clear and simple. Those of them who began to entertain hope, manifested a lively concern for the others, and for their school master. They had a family children's prayer meeting, at which the little ones retired together to pray. Two of the children, and a girl living in the family—aged, severally, about nine, eleven, and sixteen years—desired to confess Christ. I conversed with them, and with the parents; and the feeling of the older of our Elders, a very cautious, judicious man, was that "we had no right to refuse them." A very interesting circumstance in connection with this family revival is, that in a chamber of suffering is an aged great-grandmother of the children, formerly a member of Dr. Codman's church in Dorchester, Mass., who has for more than two years been confined to her room, and who has been pouring out her heart in prayer for these little ones. Were there more fidelity, and faith and prayer, on the part of parents, would not such events be less uncommon?

From Rev. J. J. Hill, Albany, Whiteside Co.

A Time of Refreshing.

God has, during the period now reported, visited my church and congregation with the special influences of his Holy Spirit. The last spring has been indeed the spring-time of spiritual life to this people. God has permitted us to gather many beautiful flowers, and to transplant some plants of righteousness from the kingdom of this world into the kingdom of his dear Son. In this precious work of divine grace, which has been in progress among us, about twenty, we trust, have been hopefully converted to God. Several others, who had backslidden from the ways of grace, were "begotten again unto a lively hope," and unto them were restored the joys of God's salvation.

Most of the young converts are the children of the church, and members of the Sabbath school. God has eminently verified his promise, as a prayer-hearing and covenant-keeping God. Those for whom the hearts of his children were especially drawn out in prayer, were converted. Christian mothers travailed in birth again, that their sons and their daughters might be born again to an endless life.

Individual Cases.

One mother said, she felt that she did not wish to live unless her son was converted. One day, during our series of meetings, he came home for his best clothes to attend a ball. His mother followed him into his room, and urged him to attend the meeting. When he expressed his preference and determination to attend the ball, she said, "Remember, John, that while you are dancing your mother is praying for you!" This was a word in season, and touched his heart. He decided to attend the meeting that evening, instead of the ball; and he is now rejoicing in hope.

Another dear child of the covenant, about fifteen years of age, gives delightful evidence of early piety. He told me, not long since, that he felt such great anxiety for his young companions, that he could not sleep. He has been in the habit of taking them, one by one, into his father's stable, and talking and praying with them, and then bringing them to the inquiry meeting. He says he finds Christ's yoke easier and the way of life pleasanter every day. He is willing to do anything and everything for Christ, and has a very strong desire to study for the ministry.

How rich the blessings of God's grace, which accompany personal, earnest, persevering, and prayerful efforts for the salvation of souls!

From Rev. Robert Stewart, Greenville, Bond Co.

A Veteran's Testimony.

I have been a constant and close observer of the workings of the A. H. M. S. in this State for twenty-five years. I well recollect when Rev. John M. Ellis, who was your first missionary here, came to this State. Most of the time for sixteen years I have been in your commission; and never have I taken my pen to report to you with so high a sense of the utility of your Society, and of the magnitude and importance of its work, as at the present time. To the increased demand for its operations there seems to be no end. I was first commissioned in 1834, to labor at Canton, in the more northern part of the State, where I continued till 1841, when I came to Greenville, in Southern Illinois. I have continued with the church in Greenville until 1851, under your commission; and now you send me afloat over a larger field. Well, I thank you for your commission and your continued confidence. The work to which you appoint me is an arduous and trying work. Faith, patience, prudence, wisdom, fidelity, skill, strength of body and mind; these, with every power and grace of the christian minister, are tried, most thoroughly tried. But I complain not, for a minister needs to be tried, and if he cannot endure trials, he is not fit for the work.

OHIO.

From Rev. J. G. Brice, Greenville, Darke Co.

Mr. Brice labors among the destitutions of Dayton Presbytery, which are many and great. This Presbytery comprises within its limits 12 Counties, containing 300,000 inhabitants; yet it has but six ministers in active service. In 98 townships, in this section of the State, there are but 19 churches of the denominations acting through this Society. How great the work yet to be done, even in Ohio, before its whole population shall be under the influence of evangelical truth!

I have preached about forty sermons during the past quarter, and delivered one Sabbath school address. I have also organized two Sabbath schools, and supplied each of them with a suitable library. In order to meet my several engagements, I have traveled during that period of time, over six hundred miles, and in no instance have I failed to meet an appointment. Although I have often been exposed to very inclement weather, exhausted with my labors, and sometimes in feeble health, yet the Lord has not only protected and sustained me in the work, but has also greatly cheered and comforted me while thus employed. I have realized the truthfulness of that declaration, "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." I find such happiness and pleasure in the work and service of Christ that I am more than repaid for all the toil and suffering I endure in them. To his name be all the glory.

Interesting Discovery.

An event occurred at my last visit to Recovery, where I preached on Monday the 7th inst., which may not be out of place to relate. It awakened painful and solemn emotions in my breast. It was the discovery of the remains of St. Clair's army, slaughtered by the Indians in 1791. The place where the men slain in that conflict were interred, had passed for many years out of remembrance. No one could point out the spot where the bones of these brave soldiers reposed, until last Monday. The circumstance which led to the discovery was this; some boys, in digging for relics, which have been frequently found here, struck human bones a short distance from the surface. After removing more of the earth, a vast pile of human bones—skulls, thighs, &c.—was exhibited to view, very little injured by time. When I arrived at Fort Recovery on Monday afternoon, the remains of about forty persons had been exhumed, and as I looked into the opening made for the removal of these, I could see the bones of what appeared to be several hundred piled in confusion beneath.

As I stood upon the spot where these brave men had met a bloody death from the savage foe, and looked upon the mortal remains beneath me, I fancied that I heard the war whoop and yell of the savage, as he pressed forward on his work of carnage and death; and the expiring groans of the whites as they fell under the deadly aim of the rifle, the stroke of the tomahawk, or the scalping knife. As my imagination called up this heart rending scene, I involuntarily exclaimed, here was truly fought the "battle of the warrior with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood." There is a tradition in the neighborhood, handed down by the old settlers, that down the ravine which runs along the base of the hill on the west side, ran a stream of blood from the slaughter of the whites. Upwards of 700 men belonging to St. Clair's army were slain.

From Rev. L. Kelsey, Franklin Furnace, Scioto Co.

About two weeks ago, I was called up in the night to visit a neighbor, who, they said, was dying. He was a very amiable man and kind neighbor, and had religious parents; but he had been all his days delaying his salvation. He was not a regular attendant at church, and I have been often grieved to see his store open on the Sabbath. When I entered his room, I found him with no hope of recovering, and in a state of deep conviction for his sins, and agitated with alarming apprehensions of the future. His constant and earnest prayer was that God would forgive his many sins. His aged and pious mother had been praying with him, and then a pious sister, and again, at his request, we all joined in prayer. I have never heard a man, well or dying, pray with such apparent sincerity and penitence. He seemed to fear that he had been such a great sinner, in delaying repentance so long, that the Lord would not now have mercy upon him. And then he broke out, "O Lord, wilt thou not this night answer the prayers of my father who has been praying for my salvation for forty years?" I stayed with him while he was able to speak or listen, and endeavored to preach unto him Jesus and the resurrection. Calling his wife and infant children to his side, they covenanted together to be the Lord's, and he commended them to God in prayer. His last request of me was, that I would tell his fellow men for him, "Not to put off preparation for eternity to a dying day, as he had done."

Miscellaneous.

The Anglo-Saxon Race.

According to the recent census returns, the population of England and Wales is, 17,605,831; Scotland, 2,870,784; Islands in the British Seas, 142,916; Ireland, 6,515,794—Total, 27,135,325.

The population of the United States in 1850, was 23,263,498. The Anglo-Saxon population of the British Colonies is about 3,500,000, and the African population of the United States nearly the same. We have, therefore, as the total population of the two great Anglo-Saxon nations, in round numbers, 50,000,000.

In view of these results, the London Athenæum makes the following striking statements in reference to the progress and prospects of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Two centuries ago, there were not quite 3,000,000 of this race on the face of the earth. . . . Sixty years ago, it did not exceed 17,000,000 in Europe and America. . . . In 1851, it is ahead of every civilized race in the world.

Relative Strength of Races.

Of races lying within the zones of civilization, the Slaves alone are more numerous, counted by heads; but comparatively few of this plastic and submissive stock have yet escaped from the barbarism of the dark ages. In wealth, energy and cultivation, they are not to be compared with the Frank, the Teuton, and the Anglo-Saxon. Number is almost their only element of strength. Of all the races which are now striving for the mastery of the world—to impress on the future of society and civilization the stamp of its own character and genius—to make its law, idiom, religion, manners, government, and opinion prevail—the Anglo-Saxon is now unquestionably the most numerous, powerful and active. The day when it might possibly have been crushed, absorbed, or trampled out, like Hungary and Poland, by stronger hordes, is gone by forever. That it was possible at one time for this people to be subdued by violence, or to fall a prey to the slower agonies of decline, there can be little doubt.

Progress of the English Language.

In 1650, the United Provinces seemed more likely to make a grand figure in the world's future history than England. Their wealth, activity, and maritime power were the most imposing in Europe. They had all the carrying trade of the West in their hands. Their language was spoken in every port. In the great Orient their empire was fixed, and their influence paramount. England was then hardly known abroad. Her difficult idiom grated on foreign ears, and her stormy coasts repelled the curiosity of more cultivated travelers. Had the thought of a day arriving when any single European language would be spoken by millions of persons, scattered over the great continents of the earth from New Zealand to the Hebrides, and from the Cape of Storms to the Arctic Ocean, occurred to any speculative mind—Dutch, not English, would probably have assigned the marvellous mission. Yet, the tongue of Holland has fallen nearly as much as the Saxon has risen in the scale of nations. Her idiom is now acquired by few. Her merchants conduct their correspondence, and transact their business in French or in English. Even her writers have many of them clothed their genius in a foreign garb.

On the other hand, our literature and language have passed entirely out of this phase of danger. Dutch, like Welsh, Flemish, Erse, Basque, and other idioms, is doomed to perish as an intellectual medium; but whatever may be the future changes of the world, the tongue of Shakspeare and of Bacon is now too firmly rooted ever to be torn away. No longer content with mere preservation, it aims at universal mastery. Gradually it is taking possession of all the ports and coasts of the world; isolating all rival idioms—shutting them up from intercourse with each other—making itself the channel of every communication. At a hundred points at once it plays the aggressor. It contends with Spanish on the frontiers of Mexico—drives the French and Russian before it in Canada and in the Northern Archipelago—supersedes Dutch at the Cape and Natal—elbows Greek and Italian at Malta and in the Ionian Islands—usurps the right of Arabic at Suez and Alexandria—maintains itself supreme at Liberia, Hong Kong, Jamaica and St. Helena—fights its way against multitudinous and various dialects in the Rocky Mountains, in Central America, on the Gold Coast, in the interior of Australia, and among the countless islands of the Eastern Seas. No other language is spreading in this way. French and German find students among cultivated men; but English permanently destroys and supersedes the idioms with which it comes in contact.

Relative Growth of Anglo-Saxon States.

In 1801, the population of Great Britain was 10,942,646; in 1800, that of the United States was 5,319,762,—or not quite half. In 1850, the population of the United States is two millions and a third more than that of Great Britain in 1851; at this moment it probably exceeds it by three millions. The rate of decennial increase in this country is less than 15 per cent., while in America it is about 35 per cent. In the great Continental States the rate is considerably lower than in England. According to the progress of the last fifty years in France and in America, the United States will have the larger population in 1870—in 1900, they will exceed those of England, France, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Sweden and Switzerland combined. Prudent statesmen should bear these facts in mind. Many persons now alive may see the time when America will be of more importance to us, socially, commercially, and politically, than all Europe put together. Old diplomatic traditions will go for little in the face of a transatlantic power numbering 100,000,000 of free and energetic men, of our own race and blood.

Jesuit Seminaries at the West.

In these settlements there is a large proportion of Catholics, who will, by and by, attain to wealth and influence. These will send their children to the Jesuit seminaries, who will constitute an educated and accomplished class, exhibiting in its members the superiority of the Jesuit education. There is a large and still larger class of people at the West, who are of Protestant descent, but who have no religious faith from personal conviction. Many of them have suddenly risen to wealth, and bring with them all that vulgar arrogance and independent spirit which are the usual consequences. To such men, and to a state of society formed under their influence, the Jesuit teacher, and the Jesuit school is likely to be an object of profound admiration. The external accomplishments to which he forms his pupils, the dexterous logic, the learned air, and the serene self-confidence with which he claims the superiority, are certain to be attractive to those who have no training of their own, little culture, and little knowledge of arts like these. We can hardly conceive to ourselves a finer field for the successful exhibition of a splendid system of Jesuit tactics, than is presented in the unformed society of the West. The agency and the material to work upon, are admirably fitted to each other, and promise the most magnificent results. Is it suggested, that the republican spirit and prejudices of western society will be offended by institutions of so rigid and severe a character? No impression can be more unfounded than this. Men admire that to which they are most unaccustomed. The order and strict regime of a seminary for youth presents no objection, from its anti-republican character, to those who have full confidence in its teachers and guardians. As to the influence of the principles that may be silently inculcated, and of the spirit which may be imparted, these will neither be suspected, nor feared. The patrons will be too ignorant to be instructed by history, or too self-confident to regard its suggestions, or too indifferent to care for the consequences. Besides, nothing is easier for the Jesuit, than to be an ardent republican. The Romish church and its religious orders will delight to assume the patronage of the people; they will be intensely solicitous for the largest political liberty, provided they can control the conscience and thus regulate the elections. A republic is a field far more inviting than a monarchy for the agency of an organization so vast, so secret, so able, and so adaptive as that of the Jesuits. A monarchy has its own organization, its own police, its own secret agents, acting upon matured and far-reaching plans, who will suspect and trace out their secret enemies. But a republic often changes its parties. Their organizations are as shifting as the sands, and their agencies are formed and broken like exhalations of a night. Then there are the interests and unscrupulousness of partisans, who in critical periods will gladly lay hold of such an organization to accomplish their ends. These parties will shelter themselves under the name of toleration and the largest religious liberty, and will reproach their adversaries with sectarian zeal and bigoted prejudice. Against the powerful influence of such an educational system, republican principles and the republican spirit are an unequal defence. The great questions then to be considered for the West, as well as for the East, are: Will these institutions root themselves in American soil: Will they obtain so strong a hold of American society at the West, as to be able to act with energy, and to attract crowds of scholars? Will the attractions which they shall be able hereafter to unfold, gain leave and room to allure, to corrupt, and destroy? The answer to these questions, in respect to the West, is the same as for the East, only it is given with a more startling earnestness, and should be pondered with a graver consideration. If western society is left destitute of seminaries of a decidedly Protestant character, the Jesuits will occupy the field. There is no escape from this alternative. If the West is provided with those of an inferior character, which shall be slowly furnished with the means and the men required, and these shall be inferior in kind, the Jesuit will rejoice at the competition, perhaps even more than if the field were left entirely vacant.—Prof. N. Porter.

Some of the Elements of Success in Bearing a College.

From the Inaugural Address of Rev. MILES P. SQUIER, Professor of Intellectual and Moral Science, in Beloit College, Wisconsin.

An intelligent community. The life of a college is in the bosom of the community surrounding it, and for which it is established. If that be degraded, vulgar and earthward in its aims,—if it be stereotyped to dullness and ignorance, to selfishness and mere worldly accumulation,—if all youthful aspirations be repressed, and the sons and daughters be allowed to hold communion only with the plough and the spindle, useful as these are in their place,—if families are not intelligent, and no Samuel is consecrated to the altar, and no Patrick Henry to the State, and if the seeds of intellectual and spiritual life do not germinate there; a college will die out in its midst. It is an exotic from such a soil. Foreign funds may help its infancy, but they are not its permanent reliance. Its ultimate resources are in the people for whom it is planted, and who come within the sphere of its operations and usefulness. They must appreciate its object and worth. From them must be derived its yearly supply of students. It must be their foster child—must enlist their sympathies, their prayers, and their kind and seasonable benefactions. They must watch with a friendly eye its interests,—take, by their Board of Trust, and a healthful and judicious public sentiment, its efficient supervision and guidance. They must look with a large heart upon its wants, and give it a welcome and a home to their fireside affections. It must be enshrined on their hearthstones, by the side of the altars of piety there, and be remembered as the handmaid of virtue and religion when they draw nigh to him who is light and in whom is no darkness at all.

An evangelical foundation. A college must be embalmed in the religious affections. It must be the offspring of prayer, and the christian sagacity of the best minds in the community. It must grow out of the most comprehensive wisdom of the lights in Zion, and have in its base, and its superstructure, the element of devotion to God and benevolence to man. The college, no more than the family, can be well trained without the services of religion. It looks to the good of the Church, as well as to that of society and the State—to man as a creature of God and a candidate for immortality. Sanctified intelligence is the principle of its growth, and usefulness. This was the foundation of the New England colleges, and they are to this day the glory of the land. We would have transplants from them, at proper distances, all along this great Western valley, whose commingling light and hallowed influence shall help to elevate and sanctify the masses of mind clustering here, and those millions on millions who shall inherit its destiny.

A high purpose. It is too late for secondary institutions—for third and fourth rate colleges, begotten in the excitement of a rampant radicalism, to float in the pabulum of some excrescence from truth—to dance their crazy antics in the mirage of some false philosophy, that may for the time rise to the surface,—be it Mormonism, or Millerism, or socialism of any grade. The basis of a college is in the abiding elements of all science—in the enduring economy of mind, and the laws of its development and growth. Its necessity is that of man and the race for all time; and it should not, like the parson's wig, be subject to the clipping of every tyro pretension that passes by. It should be built of granite thought, and embody in the "curriculum" of its studies the selectest wisdom of all ages and nations. It is a high design. It stands for the rise or fall of many. It helps to shape the mind, and thought and destinies of the world. Its bearing is on the future. Posterity should hail it as a blessing—as the legacy of honored sires, whose enlarged vision saw the wants of the future in the past—as a goodly ship sent down to them on the current of time, freighted with the riches of every clime and country.

The founding of a college is like the founding of an empire; it should be "Christo et ecclesie"—for God and his redeeming providence—for man and the race. It is intended to live, and be the evergreen in the forest—the oasis in the desert—the birth-place of genius, scholarship and truth—to be a perennial fountain whose streams shall be "for the healing of the nations."

This thought is especially apposite now. All the sciences are improving—all professions rising—scholarship is advancing in every direction. The masses are waking to thought; and the demand is every where put forth for the best efforts, and the noblest minds that can be produced.

We are anticipating a millennium of the arts—that perfection of the earthly and spiritual condition of man, which lies in the chart of prophecy. Promises and providence look that way. The day-star is up, and the morning dawns; and every college or university founded, should greet these ensigns of gladness and hasten their approach. Boards of trust—faculties of instruction—the successive ranges of students who grace their halls, and share their advantages—may well feel the kindlings of this coming inspiration, and be baptized with the fervors of this divine fellowship.

Steady and well-directed effort. All cannot be done at once. Such an institution will not come up like the mushroom of the night. Decades of years are well spent in nurturing its infancy and youth, and ripening it into robust and vigorous manhood. Its needed structures are to be erected, and its grounds wrought into artistic beauty and perfection. Its libraries are to be collected, and all its helps for the investigation of truth—classes are to be filled up—instructors perfected in the sciences they have undertaken, and in all affiliated branches of study—the country is to mature on its hands—preparatory institutions to be reared, as handmaids to the college and the more immediate elements of its growth and prosperity—character is to be gained for instruction and scholarship—needful funds must be secured, and the public be fully apprised of its existence and usefulness; and it will need judicious plans, wise counsels, steady aims and well directed and persevering effort. But under God, these will do it; with his favor, they will not fail—and his favor and blessing they will have. All lies in the wake of his redeeming providence—it is just the work he would have us do. Not a finger shall be lifted for it, or a prayer offered without effect. The world is getting under intellectual sway: it tires of the prescriptions of mere authority. Enlightened, sanctified mind, is God's viceregent on earth, for its redemption from sin and its introduction to the millennium he has promised. And his hand is in the work of which we speak—his eye is on it for good, and the watchword of his providence is to the conspiring bands of its friends and helpers—"Go on and prosper, for the Lord your God is with you, and will help you."

Beloit College.

This college has had an evangelical foundation. The heart of piety has loved to trace the steps of its origin and incipient history—its birth in the prayers and counsels of the wise and good in this region, and from other portions of the land—the consent which directed its location, and the steady and enlightened aims which have attended it hitherto, and the high purpose, as we trust, of those to whom its guardianship and instruction have been committed.

Above all, a Divine hand has been with it from the first. The Spirit of God has baptized its infancy, and cemented its growth. It has a home in the hearts of his people here, and over this "lovely land." It is young, and may need help now; but will, in the end, be no charity. Like the beneficiary student within its walls, who devotes his life to Christ and humanity, it gives more than it receives. Beneficence to it now, will be repaid seven fold in the forth-goings of its kind and constant ministry. I speak to the intelligence of this, and the surrounding neighborhoods. It will elevate the cast of social life—beget refinement and thought, and contribute a healthful energy in behalf of the cause of truth and religion.

To the community at large it will, we trust, be a conspicuous and attractive headland—a radiating centre of enlightening and sanctifying influences. It will facilitate the means of education to your sons and families, and give character and vigor to preparatory institutions in all your borders. It will multiply the number of educated men among you for every position of eminence and responsibility; and be a legacy which will do you honor as it passes, with ever-increasing usefulness, down the vista of coming time.—Inaugural of Prof. Squier.

Missionary Boxes.

Those benevolent individuals who have, from time to time, furnished the missionary families with things needful for the body, have doubtless received from those families the expressions of thanks. With the hope of exciting others to similar acts of beneficence, we give below a few extracts from the letters of missionaries, designed to show with what gratitude these donations are received, and what pressing wants they often relieve.

I need hardly say, that the "box of clothing" sent us by the "Sewing Circle of ———," through your society, was gratefully received, and contributed largely to cheer our hearts and strengthen our hands. On receiving it, we placed it before the fire in our cabin, and after reading the sixth of Matthew, and engaging in prayer, in which we did not forget our benefactors and their children—we proceeded to open it. We found it stored with such a supply of our "needs" as christian benevolence and thoughtfulness alone could bring together—articles the more useful because prepared from information previously sought and obtained, as to the components, wants, &c., of my family; and the more timely from the sickness with which we had been visited during the summer. But as we took out these articles and came to those designed for our dear departed little Wisner, whose measure had been sent to the "sewing circle," our feelings were such as they only who have had a similar trial can understand. I trust, however, we found substantial comfort in the assurance, that he was clad with nobler, richer garments, from a higher "circle;" and that, possessed of a body, spiritual, incorruptible, and glorious, he was forever lifted above the wants of "this vile body," which these "meaner things" were intended to supply.

The "Missionary Box," of which you advised me, has safely arrived. It was indeed a valuable box, and filled our hearts with gratitude and joy.

I do not suppose that you, or any of our eastern friends, can be made to understand fully, by what I can write, how we, Home Missionaries, feel on receiving such a box from the landing, opening and unpacking it; how we feel, as wife and children stand around and look on with eager expectation; how we feel, as one article after another comes forth, which we have wanted and talked about, but could not buy, for want of the means. We tell you, and we tell our benefactors, that we are glad and grateful, but you cannot know how great are our gratitude and joy. These tokens of sympathy and kindness from our eastern friends, give us courage and strength to endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ.

At the urgent request of a church fifty miles from here, I went a few weeks ago and held a meeting for them. I had no assistance, the weather was very warm, and I was quite worn down. When I was about to leave for my distant home, over a very bad road, they wished to know "when I could visit them again, they were so well pleased, I must come back again." No inquiry as to what I had paid for ferriage or my night's lodging in going; or whether the patched coat, and almost crownless hat were the best I could afford. Such trials as these are common to us here. The great scarceness, and consequent highness of provisions, forced me to contract some debts; which, together with the wants of my family, I did not see how I could meet. But while I was thinking what I must do, whether I must try to get a school, some kind friends sent us a good supply of clothing, and many other useful articles. I feel that the best I can wish these very kind friends is, that they may have the greater blessing of the giver; for truly the blessedness of receiving was so great, that if the blessedness of giving was greater, it is enough.

I have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of the "Barrel of Sundries," for which we felt thankful, first of all to our Heavenly Father, who knew that we had "need of all these things." Then we felt thankful to our kind friends at —, to whom we sent promptly an acknowledgment of our gratitude, and much, very much, we felt obliged to you for thinking of us and directing it to our door. Otherwise it would have gone some other way, to be sure, and would have gladdened other hearts; yet without disparagement to any brother, I hesitate not to say that it could not have gone where it was more needed, or would have been more welcome.

We duly received the box you sent us from the Young Ladies' Society in —. Those ladies, wise to do good, sent for the measurement of our family, and when the box came, every one had something made to measure, and labelled with the name of the child for whom it was made. This made it appear as though it came from acquaintances, and there was nothing that was not of immediate use. Such articles as we can spare, we shall distribute among our brother missionaries and their families in this region. Mrs. P—, the Secretary of that Society, has been taken to her rest during the season, and we can "show many garments that Dorcas made," which will be a sweet memorial of her and her associates.

The Christian Minister on his way to the Sanctuary.

I am going to the sanctuary—going to meet God—going to engage in his worship—going to preach his word, that word by which both myself and my hearers must finally be judged. I shall soon be surrounded by a number of beings whose existence is never to terminate; but who, after millions of ages, will still be immortal. Either the Bible is untrue, or every man, woman, and child among them will dwell in everlasting misery or joy. As soon as they have passed the narrow boundary of life, they must rise to the companionship of the highest order of beings, or sink to the doom of the lowest. Providence has appointed me to declare to them the misery of their condition as sinners, and to direct their attention to that blessed way which infinite wisdom has opened for their complete restoration to happiness. I am to represent to them the character of the Savior, who is waiting to be gracious. I am to show them the utter impossibility of their being saved by any other means. I am to watch for their souls; to labor, that I may be instrumental in their everlasting welfare, and when I have finished the short period allotted for me on earth, I am to appear before the tribunal of my Creator, to give up my account—to say how I have improved my talents; what exertions I have made in the office I sustain, and what effects have resulted from them. Perhaps, before another Sabbath day, some that hear me this day will have removed to their long home—they may have given in their account. What if it should be said of any, that I have been accessory to their damnation—that I had not entreated—that I had not instructed them. What if they should, to eternity, be heaping curses upon my head, because of my lukewarmness and inattention?

Or, perhaps, before the arrival of another Sabbath, I may have finished my course on earth; I may now be going to preach my last sermon; the opportunities I now enjoy of winning souls to Christ, may be the last I shall ever have. Oh! that I may enabled to keep my own accountability and the immortality of my hearers in view. May they annihilate all fear of the creature, and make me solicitous to please God; may I enter the sanctuary under the deep impression of his presence; may I remember that he is acquainted with all my thoughts, and with all my intentions; may I be kept from the folly of striving merely to gratify the outward ear; may I be animated with ardent zeal—zeal according to knowledge—may I be in a spiritual and heavenly frame of mind!—may I strive to cherish this disposition in those that hear me—may I be very serious and very much in earnest for my own salvation, and that of all those that hear me; and above all may I be indulged with thy smiles, O, thou infinitely blessed God, and when my work on earth is done, rise to noble communion with Thee and thy Son forever. Amen, Amen.

—N. Y. Evangelist.

“The People of the Future.”

Such is the title of one of the topics in Professor Guyot's “Lectures on the Earth and Man.” His course of discussion leads him to speak of the history of civilization, and of its condition at the present time. Europe has commenced the work of human elevation, and carried it as far as practicable under the hindrances of ancient customs, prescriptive rights, the want of room, and an ever-increasing population. The further progress of the race in intelligence, goodness and well-being, must therefore be carried on by a new people; and the problem must be worked out on a new field.

To what people shall it belong to carry out this work into reality? The law of history replies, to a new people. And to what continent? The geographical march of civilization tells us, to a new continent west of the Old World—to America.

What is that new people, forming and growing upon the land of the future?

Is it a new race? No; for the ties of race imposed by physical nature must disappear in that world of emancipation and of liberty, to leave all its spontaneous character to the activity of man.

Is it some particular nation of the Old World? No; for if one people seems to stamp the physiognomy, yet the historical nations of every language and of every character are flowing thither, and blending together in one and the same nationality. The historical walls of separation in the Old World have fallen at once, and without a struggle. The European, who sets foot on American ground, with the purpose of making it his country, throws aside, at the threshold, not his affections and his memories, but his social and political past—if I may say it, takes a fresh start, recommences a new existence. He is received, by those who have gone thither before him, as a brother, entitled to the same immunities they are themselves enjoying. The most varied elements are gathering and harmonizing in this American people, which is moulding itself as no other ever did before, and which, more than any other people, is preëminently the cosmopolite, by virtue of its very constitution.

And what is the vital principle we find at the very root of this nation? It is the Gospel. Not the Gospel disfigured and cramped by the iron fetters of a powerful hierarchical church, like that which the Christian Germanic world received while in its cradle, but the Gospel restored by the Reformation, with its life-giving doctrines, and its regenerative power. Luther drew the Bible forth from the dust of libraries, where it lay forgotten, at the moment when Columbus discovered the New World. Will any one believe that here was only an accidental coincidence? More than this; for the first foundations were then laid of the edifice rising at the present day before our eyes, the actual construction of which, three centuries and a half later, enables us to see the providential connection of the two events.

The founders of social order in America are indeed the true offspring of the Reformation,—true Protestants. The Bible is their code. Imbued with the principles of civil and religious liberty they find written in the Gospel, and for which they have given up their former country, they put them in practice in this land of their choice. They are all brethren, children of the same Father—this is equality, independence, liberty. They submit from the heart to their Divine Leader, and to his law; this is the principle of order. Now the union of these two terms is free obedience to the divine will, which is the condition of a normal development, the supreme end of the education of man.

These, you will agree, are the sublime doctrines whence flow the religious, political, and social forms that distinguish America at the present time, from all the other countries on the globe. In religion, as in politics, democracy; the principle of free association pervading every part of public and private life; the preponderance of the judicial element set above the state itself, as the divine law is placed above human liberty; free obedience to the law, finally, rendering the means of constraint almost superfluous, and guaranteeing at once both security and liberty;—these are so many christian ideas that have been incorporated in society, so many blessings America will continue to enjoy in proportion as she shall be faithful to the great principles whence they emanate.

A last characteristic, finally, of the nation forming on the soil of America,—upon which we fix our attention, because it furnishes in fact the representative of all modern progress,—is the greater emancipation from the dominion of nature. European society is transported to the New World, with all the power of modern arts and industry, which it applies without let or hindrance upon a large scale. Man, the master, now explores its vast territory. A perpetual movement, a fever of locomotion, rages from one end of the continent to the other. The American uses things without allowing himself to be taken captive by them. We behold everywhere the free will of man overmastering nature, which has lost the power of stamping him with a local character, of separating the nation into distinct peoples. Local country, which had so great sway in the Old World, no longer exists, so to speak, beyond the limits of the city, itself an association determined by man's free will, and not by the force of external nature. The great social country wins all interest, and all affection; it overmatches entirely geographical country.

Such are the principal lineaments that give to this people a character peculiarly their own. By these features we recognize the people of the future; for all the tendencies, struggling hard to find a vent in European society, are realized without effort here, because they are the very foundations whereon all the social relations rest. It is to this people, then, that the full and entire development belongs in the course of the epoch now beginning.

And what continent is better adapted than the American, to respond to the wants of humanity in this phase of its history?

The nations of Europe might easily be drawn out and arrayed within its vast confines. Its fertile soil secures prosperity to all, in exchange for their labor. Its forests, its treasures of coal laid up in quantities surpassing every thing of the kind to be found in any part of the globe, prepare an inexhaustible support, and allow a future extension of industry to a degree and in proportions unknown elsewhere.

The simplicity and unity of plan observed in its configuration, its extensive plains, navigable rivers, the extreme facility of communications universally, with no serious obstacle lying in the way, from one end to the other of the fruitful part of the continent, all invite the inhabitants to frequent connection, to never-ceasing intercourse and exchange, checking the formation of local nationalities, and favoring the maintenance of a national unity, by the assimilation of all the parts.

Thus we may, perhaps, foresee that the American Union, already the most numerous association of men that has ever existed voluntarily united under the same law, will be able hereafter to become, even within the limits of its present confines, a true social world, transcending in grandeur and unity the most impressive spectacles of human greatness the history of past ages holds up to our view.

Finally, the oceanic position of the American continent secures its commercial prosperity, and creates, at the same time, the means of influence upon the world. It commands the Atlantic by its ports, while Oregon and California open the route of the Pacific Ocean and the East. America, also, is so placed as to take an active part in the great work of the civilization of the world, so admirably begun by Europe.

Asia, Europe, and North America, are the three grand stages of humanity in its march through the ages. Asia is the cradle where man passed his infancy, under the authority of law, and where he learned his dependence upon a sovereign master. Europe is the school where his youth was trained, where he waxed in strength and knowledge, grew to manhood, and learned at once his liberty and his moral responsibility. America is the theatre of his activity during the period of manhood; the land where he applies and practises all he has learned, brings into action all the forces he has acquired, and where he is still to learn that the entire development of his being and his own happiness are possible only by willing obedience to the laws of his Maker.

Thus lives and prospers, under the protection of the Divine Husbandman, the great tree of humanity, which is to overshadow the whole earth. It germinates and sends up its strong trunk in the ancient land of Asia. Grafted with a nobler stalk, it shoots out new branches, it blossoms in Europe. In America only, it seems destined to bear all its fruits. In these three we behold at once, as in a vast picture, the past, the present, and the future. We see, that at each great phasis of the history of humanity the real work of the epoch is accomplished on a different theatre, and the centre or principal nucleus of civilized societies changes its place in the course of the ages. But in pointing out the remarkable fact of this successive displacement, let us not forget to state at the same time another movement, a progressive movement of extension, no less evident, and of almost equal importance. At first we behold the Orient shine alone; but soon the Occident ascends, and assumes the sceptre of intellectual light, and Greece now draws with her into a new progress the better portion of the East. Rome succeeds, and by her conquests removes the boundaries of the civilized world, whereof Italy is the soul, to the uttermost limits of the West. The North in succession is added, and all Europe becomes in turn the centre of a new world, which breaks the barriers seemingly imposed on it by nature, to enlarge and expand itself beyond the oceans. The establishment of European civilization in the New World, which has more than doubled the territorial extent of the cultivated nations, prepares an epoch of aggrandizement more rapid still. The two Americas, situated between the other four continents, seem destined to become, in their turn, a new centre of action, or a point of support for the establishment of easy and more rapid relations with all the nations of the world; and the irresistible logic of facts passing under our eyes, compels us to believe that during the epoch which is preparing, the boundaries of the domain of the civilized world can only be those of the globe itself.

Missions on the Western Coast.

It is the usual method of Providence to grant success in great enterprises only to strong faith and a much enduring patience. Moses might have been made the victorious leader of a triumphant host in forty days, instead of being subjected to a probation of forty years. The reformers who in successive ages have blessed the world, could have been led by short and rapid steps to the accomplishment of their aims. The Pilgrim Fathers, had God seen it to be best, might have been spared the long struggle of a century which it cost them to found the institutions left as a legacy to their children. But some preliminary trials were needful to the agents in those great events. Their faith was thereby tested and strengthened, their motives freed from the admixture of inferior elements, so that their works are ennobled and stand out before all succeeding generations, as having their grand moving impulse in a reverence for the law of God and the purest desires for the welfare of man.

Some may have supposed that in the founding of religious institutions on our Pacific borders, this preparatory discipline of the Church and her ministry would be dispensed with, and that the advent of Christianity to that new stand-point would be a victory without a struggle. But we apprehend that in this, as in all other signal instances of the Church's progress, great results are to be granted only to great faith and perseverance. True, our missionaries on the western coast have not encountered much open persecution; they do not stand in fear of physical violence; but they are met by worldly influences which set against them with so strong a tide, that only the most determined purpose to sacrifice themselves for the prosperity of Zion, will suffice to keep them at their work. They believe God will make his truth victorious over all error; they believe they are sent to that outpost to commence a process whose effects are to be felt all over the Pacific world and extend beyond the bounds of time; and for this they endure much personal privation, the opposition of ungodly men, and the heart-breaking defection of many from whom they hoped for sympathy and support. If in some cases they meet with external prosperity, in others they have disasters that cause the soul to sink. Years of toil, attended by many reverses, will probably roll away, and still the day of ease will not have come. The Canaanite will be yet in the land; there will still be perils among false brethren; and wicked and unreasonable men will mar the fairest plans devised by philanthropy for social improvement and for the salvation of souls.

Let not the churches, therefore, take it for granted that the great work to be done on our western coast is to leap at once to its finished result, without the usual concomitants of self-denial and high consecration on the part of those who are sent to do it. They need long continued and efficient support from abroad; they need, as much as any missionaries in the world, to be kept by the grace of God. No others have greater temptations to decline in spirituality, and to abate the degree of their devotedness. For none is there greater need of fervent and unceasing prayer, that they may be kept from falling, and may continue worthy of their prominent position as the pioneers in so wonderful a movement in the moral history of the world.

This feeling of dependence and responsibility is often expressed by the missionaries. They deeply lament the power of evil around them, and the smallness of the spiritual fruits yet produced by their labors. One writes from Oregon as follows:—

I can speak of no revival of religion, and of no conversion of souls, within the quarter, or within the year. Sad, sad has the review been to me, as I have asked of all the sabbaths spent here, of all the sermons preached, and of all the prayers offered, What have been the fruits? And the mournful echo returns, "What have been the fruits?" There have been constant excitements and changes among the people, much seeking for earthly treasures in the church, and many waves of sin have rolled over us, and left their bitter and polluting deposits in all our habitations and upon all our garments; yet I must charge upon myself the greater sin in my want of faith in God, and of faithfulness in my ministry. Too much disposed have we, as Christians, and have I, as a minister, been, to rely upon the efficiency of means, upon this and that addition to our numerical force, upon facilities for the presentation of truth, and upon its careful adaptation to the people and the times; but the present indifference and skepticism of the world, and coldness of the church, teach me the weakness of all human strength and the folly of all human councils. God is always able to bring light out of darkness and order out of confusion, but he will be inquired of by the house of Israel to do these things for them, and he will have all the glory of the work.

Three S. Schools stopped during the winter in the neighborhood. Some others have commenced. I hope to revive one or two more.

The Land Law has caused the towns to be very much deserted, and claims to be taken by the people in the country; hence our congregations there are as large as they are in town.

Since the gold mines were discovered, we have been losing ground in the cause of temperance; but many of the friends of the cause believe that we have reached the last point of retreat, and that we may now march forward and regain our lost possessions, assured that while it will require a more vigorous and longer campaign, it will achieve more extensive victories.

Three hotels here had bars formerly, but now they have none; yet there are four or five groceries where formerly there were only one or two. Many cases and casks of liquor are imported and distributed into most parts of the country to poison people.

Schools in Oregon.

Our schools are prosperous. Tualatin Academy, which is more especially under the care of our denomination, is gaining in importance and in the confidence of the people. There are now 63 pupils in it—30 in the male department under the care of Rev. D. R. Williams, and 33 in the female department under the care of Miss E. Miller, one of the teachers sent out by the Education Society. The first term of Clackamas County Female Seminary, an institution under trustees of several denominations, is now nearly closed. Thirty-three pupils are in the school. Miss Lincoln and Miss Smith, from the above society, have charge of it. Two other ladies have interesting and important schools in the neighboring settlements. There are public and private schools in various portions of the Territory. A good common school law has been on our statute book for two years, but it has not yet been put in full operation. There are one or two free schools in this country. An available tax of $2000 was raised in this county last year for the support of common schools. As soon as the land is surveyed, a large portion will belong to the school fund.

During the year there has been some important additions to the ministerial corps of the country. Still there are other calls. A man wrote a few days ago, asking for a minister, and promising $100 per annum towards his salary. There is no minister yet north of the Columbia, and none at Astoria. Our settlements are scattered, and many still have no opportunity of hearing the word of God.

CALIFORNIA.

From Rev. I. H. Brayton, San Jose.

Removal of the Capital.

Temporarily the effect of this is great. The population has decreased. The sound of the hammer has ceased; and many artisans and professional men have retired to the yet more quiet precincts of the town, and are engaged in tilling the soil, and are starting the vines and the orchards from which they or others may gather clusters and fruit. There are probably more here than in all the valley beside who have been accustomed to our worship. Some meet with us who were formerly of other churches, and some who have seldom of late years sought the house of prayer. But above all I welcome the congregation of young men who wait on my ministrations, and for whom I am about to deliver a course of Sabbath evening lectures.

I am glad that I came. I have been here just a year, and have reason to feel (though conscious of unfaithfulness) that it has not been to me or others a lost year. Oh that prayers may move over upon us clouds of blessings! I seem to hear the rustling of the stirring wind. Pattering drops have already laid the dust rising from busy marts. The community seems thoughtful and attentive. The fault will be, I fearfully feel, with those who hold the word and preach it, if God's name be not here glorified in the running and triumph of his word. Pray for us! pray for us!

The Valley of San Jose.

Another year will greatly change this place. If the capital be not returned—which is now by no means improbable—no human power can remove or exhaust our natural resources of soil and mineral, or the beauty of climate and sky.

The mines of quicksilver among the hills are unsurpassed, and worth millions of money. The eyes of hundreds if not thousands are already towards us for a home when the fervid heat of business shall have passed, and they may seek within sound of the Pacific's surge a home fairer than any on the bluffs beaten by Atlantic winds. The heart swells with the fair prospect of such a clime and country, in the hands of a race not likely to grow dissolute in the vineyard, or indolent among almost spontaneous products. Grain perpetuates itself for two or three years without re-sowing; and it is generally thought by old inhabitants, and from recent experience, that the second and third crops are fully equal to the first. The hills, when the bears shall have been hunted out, and the deer scared away, will yield herbage to thousands of flocks; the valleys, fertile from the constant decay of heavy quantities of grass, watered by rills from the mountains, yield most abundantly of every vegetable and grain. A rail-road will soon bear our products to the world's third metropolis, and bring down along its track, to countless villas, the weary men of business returning at nightfall to homes of beauty and peace.

From Rev. J. H. Willey, San Francisco.

Completion of the Howard Street Church.

It gives me pleasure to say that our house of worship is done, or rather done with the exception of the steeple, which will be put on when we are able.

It presents the appearance of a New England church, probably because it was designed and built by a man who has built several churches, I think in Massachusetts. Its length is 60 feet long by 40 feet wide.

The whole of the work is done in a neat and substantial manner, making the house much the best finished and commodious in San Francisco. The principle proceeded on in building it, was to do the work well as far as it was done at all, and to do no more at present than was absolutely essential. Consequently, though destitute of ornament and many conveniences, which we shall get as we are able, our house is in good taste, neat, substantial and comfortable. The bell-tower is erected so far as to receive the bell-deck, and on it is hung a fine-toned bell, from Hooper's manufactory, Boston, of 800 lbs. weight—the largest I think in San Francisco. This bell, together with the lot of ground on which the church stands, was presented to the church by W. D. M. Howard, Esq., one of our most intelligent and wealthy citizens.

Dedication.

The house was a little more than three months in building, and was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God on Sabbath, the 16th of June. The exercises were solemn and impressive, and the occasion was one of interest to the whole community. To our little church it was a time of devout thanksgiving. But a little more than a year ago I preached the first sermon in the valley, to an audience of less than a dozen. A Sabbath school had that day been opened, numbering 4 pupils. It was well known that there were children enough in the neighborhood, but most of them had come from regions where the Bible was little known, and less revered. A systematic visitation was undertaken, and was persevered in till our school has a regular attendance of more than 50 pupils.

Our congregation grew up last autumn to more than a hundred, and when it was yet increasing, and we were on the eve of commencing to build, I was laid aside by a severe and protracted illness for the space of three months. And yet we have been prospered in our efforts, so that now we have the house I have described, and a congregation nearly filling it already.

On the afternoon of the Sabbath of dedication, the Lord's Supper was administered. It was a time of joy, of gratitude and hope.

Our contract with the builders was that they should erect the house, finishing the outside complete, for $5,000; $1,000 when the building was raised, $1,000 when it was inclosed, and $1,000 when their contract was finished. These three payments have been made, leaving a debt of $2,000.

In looking back on the history of this building, I cannot see any one of the important steps in its progress that could have been taken, had it been put off a little. The state of things changed so that the increased expense of building would have put it entirely out of our power to build at all. But now, with a building and lot worth $10,000, we have a debt of $2,000 only, and shall continue to vigorously gather in the mites to pay off that.

Of the assiduity with which the members of this infant congregation have engaged in this work, the following is a specimen.

The ladies, a day before the dedication, collected $200. The contributions at the dedication were $400. The ladies after dedication continued collecting and got $300 more, and by other means the sum was made up to $1,000 collected that week.

Then came the fire of the 22d of June, and threw us all in confusion again. Since that fire we have collected no more than our usual Sabbath contributions.

The future we know not. Uncertainty is marked on every thing. We cannot tell what a day may bring forth. We know not but society will be torn to pieces and scattered in fragments.

IOWA.

From Rev. S. Waters, Mount Pleasant.

General Prosperity.

Denmark Association met this spring in our place. The reports from the different churches exhibit a most pleasing and animating state of things. God has been with us in Iowa, and sinners have been seen in good numbers seeking Him of whom Moses and the Prophets did write. Some of the churches have more than doubled in number, and they have all in the aggregate increased twenty-five per cent. the past year.

From Rev. W. A. Westervelt, Crawfordsville, Washington Co.

Helping Themselves.

I love my field of labor. The church is gaining confidence in the community, and, no providence preventing, we design to build a meeting house the coming year. Our building committee is already appointed. A house we must have if it can possibly be done. My people will do all they can. The rains have greatly injured the crops, and many of my church members live on claimed land which they are not able to enter. They feel that they must increase their subscription for my support, and not bear quite so hard on the Society. At present, we can only exist as our kind friends in the East remember our necessities.

From Rev. J. V. A. Woods, Red Rock, Marion Co.

Freshet in the Des Moines Valley.

The floods have come and literally destroyed our village. Many of the buildings have been taken away, and all is a perfect wreck. Many families have left, and others are in the act of going, amongst whom are the merchants and mechanics; and the prospect now is that our town will never be rebuilt, not knowing what day may bring a similar disaster. The farms on the bottom lands, and the crops are all destroyed, and there is a gloom over all the country. The whole country on the Des Moines is a perfect wreck. The loss on this stream is estimated at a million of dollars. My daily prayer is, that this bereavement may bring this people to feel that God does as seemeth him good, in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth.

My opportunities to labor here have for a while been greatly circumscribed, our house of worship having been submerged for six or eight weeks past.

This great freshet has been the occasion of much impiety. The Sabbath has been profaned, the house of prayer neglected, and therefore the love of many has waxed cold, and worldly-mindedness has crept in and possessed the hearts of those who said they were crucified to the world. The absorbing question now is, What shall I eat, what shall I drink, and wherewithal shall I be clothed?

Provisions during the flood have been remarkably scarce and high, so that many have had to do without bread, and have lived on boiled corn, or hominy.

At Pleasantville, there has been a revival spirit since last winter, and we think it is increasing, and at our next communion we hope to receive several to the church for the first time. The Sabbath school in this branch of the church is very interesting, though it is sometimes taught in an elm grove, on those days when there are so many scholars that they cannot all get in the little house of one of the deacons.

Laborers.

We need an increase of ministers—tenfold. Are there no young men in the East who are willing to leave father and mother, and houses and lands, for the kingdom of God's sake, and come and occupy these fields, white to the harvest? Tell them to come over and help us. Here they may learn to endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ, and what it is to live a life of daily sacrifice, for which they will have a great reward in heaven.

From Rev. B. A. Spaulding, Ottumwa, Wapello Co.

The first quarter of my labors as a regularly installed pastor, under your commission, closed on the first day of the present month. We begin to feel, and I think the community about us feel also, that the Congregational Church is a fixed and permanent thing, and very important, both in the past, present and future history of Ottumwa. What influence it may have on the well-being of immortal minds, both in this world and the next, God only can tell.

Review of Seven Years.

Seven years ago last November, your missionary came here, and could hardly find shelter from the cold and storms of winter; but, for reasons hardly known to himself, and contrary to the advice of his most judicious friends, he decided to make this place his home, and the centre from which he should travel on missionary excursions, through a country which but seven months before was in full possession of the native Indians. So comfortless and almost uninhabitable was this place, that more than once it was left, ostensibly for some business, but really for health and safety; and so cheerless was the prospect of permanent success in so new a field, that your missionary was urged by one of the most able and experienced pioneers in your service, to leave it and take charge of a church that was then without a pastor, in the older parts of the State.

But God in his providence ordered otherwise. The consequence of this was, in a few years, the organization of four churches in this region, one of which has since become extinct, while three still survive. The church here now numbers about forty members, is united and harmonious, has a house of worship, and since last March has observed the monthly concert regularly, and has sustained a weekly prayer meeting since its organization in February, 1846. We hope the day is not far distant when we shall no longer be under the necessity of asking aid from the American Home Missionary Society.

Our house of worship has cost us about eight hundred dollars. Of this twenty two dollars were kindly furnished us by the churches of Denmark and Burlington, in this State. Besides this we have received no aid from abroad, but are still about two hundred dollars in debt. For about one half of this debt the pastor is personally responsible in the legal sense of the term, and in the moral sense of it, will undoubtedly be held responsible for the collection and payment of the whole of it. Besides this, he has already paid in cash, or its equivalent, more than fifty dollars, and labored, working with his own hands, in season and out of season, more or less for about the space of two years—of course neglecting to some extent the duties of the student and the pastor, adding nearly nothing to his library, and dropping all the periodicals for which he had subscribed, except a single newspaper.

Prospects of the Upper Country.

It is generally known that an appropriation of public lands for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Des Moines River, was made by Congress some years since. Recently, a capitalist from New York City passed through this place to explore the river, with a view of contracting to complete, in four years, the whole work to Fort Des Moines, about two hundred miles from the mouth of the river. This town is not far from the geographical centre of Iowa, and is regarded confidently as the future location of the State capital. So that Ottumwa, which seven years ago had no existence, its very site being then about fifteen miles west of the line which divided civilized from savage life, is yet nearly 100 miles south east from the centre of Iowa, and probably at the end of four years more, may have a regular line of packets running 100 miles beyond it into the interior of the State, and transporting the commerce of one of the most beautiful and fertile valleys in the United States. How important then that whatever can be done for the spiritual interests of this valley be done soon.

The river has been higher this season than ever before since the settlement of the country. Many of the farms and some of the towns have been much injured. This town has suffered but little, the water having risen but a few inches in the lowest building on Main street.

The health of the country still continues remarkably good, though the season in which we always look for sickness has fully come.

From Rev. Robert Stewart, Cascade, Dubuque Co.

Soon after our meeting house was taken to pieces for the purpose of making necessary repairs, the high waters came on, which rendered it impossible to obtain the necessary lumber in order to complete it during the quarter. We have consequently been obliged to hold our meetings wherever we could find a place. Under such circumstances, but a little if any progress could be anticipated. We hope and trust, however, that we have done a little more than to hold our own. We have made a test of the strength of the sympathy of this community towards us. A loud call has been made for aid in rebuilding our house of worship; that call has been liberally responded to, and thereby an influence has undoubtedly gone out that will bind more strongly this community to us.

Awakened Interest for the Young.

There is, moreover, one encouraging feature that has manifested itself within our field of labor during the quarter. An interest has been excited in the subject of Sabbath schools, before unprecedented in this region. In places about us, where it was thought impossible to organize such a school, they have been started, and appear to flourish beyond our most sanguine expectations. The course that I have always taken respecting these schools, has been to carry and furnish small libraries from the common stock in Cascade, and to change those small libraries as often as they are read through. But the call for books from this source has been so great that our whole stock has been almost completely expended, though that stock, by additions recently made, amounts to something like two hundred volumes.

The desire for preaching also, at our different out-stations, continues to increase. There seems to be a demand for more than ten times the effort that I am able to make. It would afford great pleasure to supply these out-stations with preaching much more than I am doing, but health will not permit. God has here limited me in point of labor, not by the want of opportunities, but by the want of strength.

From Rev. J. H. Shields, Centerville, Appanoose Co.

Sickness—The Floods.

I was taken sick about four weeks ago, and have not been able to labor since. I had a protracted meeting appointed in the Unionville church, about ten days ago, but was not able to attend it. Brother Ewing came to my assistance, and conducted the meeting, I trust with profit. It is a most painful part of the missionary's experience, that when the Sabbath comes, and the church and the people collect at the house of God, or in the grove, (for we cannot always have houses to worship in,) he is unable to go to them to proclaim the messages of God's grace to man. But, "the Lord reigns, let the earth rejoice!"

We have had more wet weather than in any season I ever experienced. From the 10th of May to near the middle of July, we had almost continued rains. The rains were of the most heavy character: the water courses were higher than ever known before, and remained high. Mills, bridges, fences, and in many instances houses, were carried away by its violence. The river bottoms were overflowed for miles, and this during weeks together. Boats could not run; travel across the country was almost entirely stopped; and the mail, for weeks, failed to arrive. The missionary having a large field to occupy and streams to cross, was necessarily prevented from meeting many of his appointments. Farmers, in many instances, never planted their corn till July, and some did not plant at all. Should the fall be unfavorable, it is feared there will not be grain enough to sustain the inhabitants. But, "the Lord will provide."

I rejoice that, through grace, my labors have been blessed in this place. Society is very different from what it was when I came here, and my congregations have increased almost tenfold. We have a very interesting Sunday school and a Bible class. We have also fought vigorously under the temperance banner, and are resolved on victory, though much is yet to be done.

MISSOURI.

Missouri Awakening to her own Wants.

The most hopeful indication which we have seen for many a day, in the prospects of this State, is the determination expressed below, to provide a ministry from the sons of her own churches. It was well that in times past, able and educated men went out from the older States to gather the scattered flock of Christ, and all accessions from that quarter which can hereafter be obtained should be welcomed to the field. But the supply from this source is inadequate, and likely to continue so. It is therefore a manifest duty of those churches to aim at something more. Whether the time has come for founding a Seminary, is a question to be decided by the wise men on the ground. We hope, however, those interested in this movement will not wait for a seminary in Missouri; but will address themselves, at once, to find the men upon whom the seminary is to exert its forming process. After all, great as are the wants of the West, in respect to institutions, the want of consecrated mind is greater. Had the churches of that State a hundred candidates for the ministry, not one of them need to fail of an education at some seminary, or at least with some well instructed pastor. And though a suitable institution would have a tendency, to some extent, to create around itself the materials which it is intended to mould, it could not do every thing. Individual churches and ministers must act; the feeling must find a lodgment in the heart of each congregation and each pastor, that the perpetuation of christian doctrines and institutions is their individual duty, and they must see to it that the needful agents are raised up. They should not be satisfied with themselves when no one of their number is in training to be a standard-bearer before the Lord's host. We would, therefore, bid our Missouri brethren a hearty "God speed" in this movement. Let them originate all the agencies and institutions needful to its accomplishment; let them pray to the Lord of the harvest that he would prepare the hearts of many to become laborers in the field; and meanwhile, let them look into their Sabbath schools, their Bible classes, and into the families of their charge, and see if their prayers are not answered in the hopeful designation of here and there an individual to this sacred work. Let these be brought forward by their respective pastors, and when it is seen that the men are waiting, we trust the means of education will not be wanting.

The rapid growth of the West, the influx of immigration, the widening fields of labor, opening every day more extensively, and presenting on every hand the most appalling destitution of the stated means of grace, are themes on which most of my fellow missionaries have written; and their appeals are usually expressed in the most eloquent and moving terms. If I were to add any thing on the same topics, it would be but an argument to prove that Missouri is not behind the very chiefest of the States in the importance and strength of her claim for help.

For reasons well known to you, Missouri does not commonly get her due proportion of the missionaries that annually consecrate themselves to the service of their Master in the great West. For myself, the very objections that many of my young brethren make to coming to Missouri, are my reasons for staying, and would be my strong arguments to persuade others to come.

In all the recent ecclesiastical meetings at which I have been present, the feeling has been predominant that Missouri is to be hereafter supplied with an adequate evangelical ministry, chiefly from her own churches, and from within her own bounds. Tedious and discouraging as the undertaking may be, and requiring long years of prayer and toil to accomplish it, the churches of Missouri, in our connection, seem determined, with the help of God, to take immediate measures to train up and educate, at home, those who at no distant day, shall both supply the great deficiency in our own ministerial ranks and enable us, as a State, to perform our part in the great work of carrying the Gospel to heathen lands.

With this view, an education society has been formed, a theological seminary has been projected, and at least two classical schools are about to be established.

Some additional measures have been taken with a view of awakening and maintaining a deeper interest in this divine cause.

I entertain the most sanguine hope that several beneficial results will follow these incipient steps. Among them will be, I anticipate, the enlargement of benevolent actions among our churches. As the subject of public benevolence comes up thus prominently, urgently, tangibly, before our people, they will speedily learn what they have been hitherto so slow to comprehend, that it is more blessed to give than to receive. If our undertaking meets with any measure of success, and our infant efforts are not frowned down by giant competitors, who bask in the more congenial clime of the free States, I feel certain that as one immediate result of these attempts, our churches will be aroused to renewed activity in every good cause, and their benevolence will be felt where hitherto their poverty and destitution only have made them known, in the deep channels of the great national benevolent societies.

Obstacles Within the Church.

As I become better acquainted with the state of things in this place, I find many obstacles in the way of building up the kingdom of Christ. Among the youth here there is scarcely a professor of religion; and they seem to be entirely given to dancing, balls, &c. Some time since, a tavern keeper whose wife and himself were both members of the church, sent out tickets for a grand ball. The session went to see them. They said they knew it was wrong; that they ought not to belong to the church and encourage balls; but they chose to leave the church rather than lose what they expected to make by their balls. They have a large family of children, some of them grown up. This family regularly attends worship on the Sabbath day, and the mother is scarcely ever absent from the prayer meeting. Among the members of the church there are some that are not pleased with preaching addressed to professors. They say they are good enough, and that the preaching should be addressed to sinners.

There was once a large and flourishing church here of more than a hundred members. It now numbers about forty, black and white, and it has been about twenty years since there has been a revival of religion here. In all that long time but few have united with the church by profession.

But there are some things to encourage us. We have a large sabbath school that has greatly increased in interest this year. We have good congregations on the sabbath. The prayer meeting is well attended, and there are some that feel as though they could not have this state of things continue, and many an earnest prayer goes up, "O Lord, revive thy work."

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. F. G. Sherrill, Ceresco and Ripon, Fond du Lac Co.

We still worship in the school house where we have been holding our meetings. The room has become, however, much too strait for us, the congregation having so increased that we are obliged to introduce chairs, stools, and boards; yet in many instances the people are still unaccommodated. There is some prospect that we shall have ere long a more commodious meeting house at Ripon, where a college is in process of erection, in which when completed there will be a chapel large enough to accommodate all who may desire to attend. We are unable at present to erect a church edifice.

Besides the services held each Sabbath in Ceresco, I have now two regular appointments elsewhere.

Once a month I preach in the town of Metomon, a town four miles south of Ceresco, where I have an average attendance of about fifty people. They have evangelical preaching here every Sabbath. I also preach every fortnight in a district in the northern part of this town, to a congregation of about forty, who never attend meetings in the village. The people here were not enjoying evangelical preaching when I commenced my meetings among them.

The only religious services held there were by a preacher of the sect of "No-Soulters," as they are termed here, who preaches to them once a fortnight. He maintains that mankind have literally no pre-eminence above the beasts; that immortality is the gift of Christ; that the righteous only are crowned with immortality in the last day, while the wicked are wholly annihilated, soul and body. He has made some proselytes to these views who were once members of evangelical churches. We trust however that the preaching of the truth will undeceive them.

Opposition to the Truth.

There are many children at C. who require to be religiously instructed, yet such is the prevailing dislike of evangelical truth among the parents, that they would prefer the children to idle away the Lord's day than attend the Sabbath school to receive our instructions. "If you will agree to waive the points of difference between us and you," said one of the prominent men to me a few days since, "we will send our children; otherwise we cannot do so." The points of difference he wished us to waive, as he said, were the doctrines of atonement, of regeneration, of faith, and indeed, almost all the great doctrines of the Bible. Of course, I told him we could not receive the children upon such conditions. "Well, then," said he, "we cannot send our children to your school;" although he admitted that they were forming many bad habits, and that they needed religious instruction, yet so opposed was he to gospel truth, that he would not consent to send us his children, unless we would be silent upon these, the saving truths of the Bible.

From Rev. C. W. Monroe, Appleton, Outagamie Co.

An unusual degree of interest in preaching has been manifested on the part of some who at the first were irregular in their attendance upon the services of the sanctuary, and who were apparently wholly indifferent to religion. I can also report some other indications of good, for which I cannot be too grateful, and only hope that if the Lord has a rich blessing in store for us, he will prepare both minister and people to gather in and to use the grain increased in such a manner, that the Lord of the harvest shall have all the praise.

Some time ago, I commenced preaching at the neighboring village of Grand Chute. This appointment has been continued; the people there have erected a large school house, which they have also made quite convenient for public worship: in that we now meet. In this place we still occupy the district school room. Various hindrances, such as are peculiar to western villages, have delayed the erection of our sanctuary; but I am in strong hopes that most of these are now removed, and that the work will speedily go forward. The average attendance on the preaching of the word, and also at the Sunday school, has steadily increased.

during the past quarter. Two welcome additions to the Sunday school Library, sent by friends at the East, have added numbers and interest to the school. For the last few weeks, in addition to my usual sabbath labor of preaching twice and instructing a Bible class, the superintendency of the school has devolved upon me, owing to the protracted illness of the wife of the superintendent.

Public Improvements.

The plank road to connect us with Menasha on the one side, and Kaukaunau, (the present terminus of steamboat navigation from Green Bay,) on the other, is rapidly progressing; probably will be open the whole distance (about 10 miles) in two months. The county buildings for the new county of 'Outagamie,' of which the township of Grand Chute is the county seat, were located last week on either side of the line dividing the two villages of 'Appleton' and the 'Chute.' The lovers of peace and harmony in the two places look upon this decision as a moral triumph, and are hopeful of the beneficial influence which will therefrom result.

The State improvements in the navigation of the river (the construction of locks, dams, &c.,) are in progress, though two or three years may yet elapse before their completion. When they are done, this must become a great thoroughfare, and I see nothing to prevent Appleton's becoming a place of considerable importance; a year or two will determine.

Stand for Temperance.

One sign of good, and which augurs well for the prosperity of the town, is the recent refusal of the supervisors to grant licenses for the sale of spirits to any of the five hotels in the place. Travellers and the hotel keepers themselves are almost the only indignant ones in view of this decision. One innkeeper has been fined one hundred dollars and costs for selling without a license. He has appealed, and in all probability will have the fine remitted. Still the case, as indicative of public opinion, and the moral sense of the community, is important.

From Rev. W. A. Niles, Beaver Dam,
Dodge Co.

First Year as a Missionary.

My first year as a Home Missionary has expired, and you will perhaps like to know how a pastor's life in Wisconsin appears to me, now that I have had a year's experience. I have been disappointed. I entered this State one year since, with a commission from your Society in my pocket, to "publish the Gospel in Northern Wisconsin," expecting to labor hard and to receive little sympathy, and calculating upon no thanks from the people among whom my lot should be cast, for doing that which it was my duty to do. I took the first vacant post offered to me, and have found myself, as I say, disappointed. The burden of labor has proved light, because pleasant. My people have exhibited towards us a generosity of spirit and a cordiality of feeling for which I was entirely unprepared, and I am able to say (I trust with a grateful heart), "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." I mention these matters because too often the missionary at the West is obliged to report a great deficiency among those for whose temporal and eternal welfare he labors, in this large-hearted sympathy with himself, and the benevolent objects of his mission. Trials, every minister of the Gospel will have, and ought to have. It is a trial to see so many who are constant and attentive hearers at the sanctuary on the Sabbath, remaining as unconcerned as ever, following the world with its pleasures and its rewards. This should be a source of severe trial to the faithful ambassador of Christ, when he remembers that his business is, to win souls. But still, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," whether men hear or forbear. I had hoped to see multitudes flocking to Christ through my instrumentality. This I have not witnessed. At every communion season some have been added to our church—seven since my last quarterly report. Twenty three persons have been added to our church during the year covered by my commission. Nine of these were admitted on profession of their faith. Six children have been publicly consecrated to God in baptism.

The monthly concert of prayer for the conversion of the world, and the Sunday school concert have been well sustained. Our plan for systematic benevolent effort has worked well, but is capable of improvement. In accordance with it, I presented the Bible cause in October, the Home Missionary cause in January, the Tract cause in April, and the cause of Foreign Missions in July. The total raised for these and other benevolent objects amounts to $162.67.

Our house of worship is filled every Sabbath, and the hope and expectation are, that the coming winter will find us occupying a more commodious church.

The New Liquor Law.

As a community, we are trying the new liquor law of Wisconsin, and so far as we are concerned, it works admirably, for every one of our supervisors would resign their office rather than put their names to a license to sell intoxicating drinks as a beverage. I wish that there were "more of the same sort" to be found in our State. I do not know that any liquor is sold in town as a beverage; certainly there is a great decrease here in the amount of liquor drank since the law went into operation.

Further Aid not Required.

We do not intend making application for aid for the coming year. The American Home Missionary Society will continue, I am confident, to be held in grateful remembrance by this people. They will endeavor to exhibit their gratitude, I trust, by their contributions to your funds.

ILLINOIS.

Valu-ary Experience in a time of Pestilence.

It is a solemn business to pass through such scenes as are described below, and to maintain that calm trust in the Savior which is needful to fit the pastor for all that his Master and his people expect of him at such a time. But the faith that overcomes the world is sufficient for any emergency. Let the friends of missions praise God, that in the trying hour, he is with his servants, and enables them to honor him by an unflinching devotion to their spiritual duties!

From Rev. W. E. Catlin, Carthage, Hancock Co.

The first quarter of my second year's labor under the commission of your Society, has now ended, and I am called to communicate to you some of its incidents and results; and in doing so I cannot withhold a grateful acknowledgment of the good hand of our God in all his providences towards me and mine. He has spared our lives and health, and given us abundant occasion to "praise him for his goodness, and for his wonderful works" towards us; while on our right hand and on our left many have been cut down. It is of his mercy that, hitherto in my ministry, I have never been unfitted by illness for the public labors of the Sabbath, and that disease has been almost a stranger in my family.

The second Sabbath in July I was assisting brother Barret, of Warsaw, in the services of communion season. A circus was exhibiting there, whence they came to this place, whither of course I anxiously followed it, but to find it followed by events most unlooked for and sad. I left, here, at the public house where this company of strollers tarried, a large household, consisting of the host, his wife, two sisters, six children, and a family and company tarrying for a time in the prosecution of a temporary business, together with the aged mother of the host. On returning, the following Wednesday, I was met by the announcement that the cholera had that morning appeared in this family, and that four were already dead. Although it was already late at night, I went to the house of death, and found one of the sisters, a member of our church, dead, with three others, who had lately been among the most gay and thoughtless of our youth. One was the only and idolized daughter of a believing mother and an impenitent father; another, the eldest daughter of the house, her intimate friend and companion; and the third, a young man, like the rest, from New England, who made light of his malady, and would think of no danger; but in about six hours he was dead.

I cannot describe to you the desolation of that house, nor the alarm which pervaded the community. All was confusion and dismay and fear on every side. Nor can I tell you my own emotions in view of this afflictive providence, when I thought on them as members of my congregation.

The next morning, on visiting the house of mourning, I found preparation made for the burial, and assisted in the solemn services. Almost all who could get away had gone, and those who remained were mainly intent upon flight, and were leaving the town as they had opportunity. It was suggested that Christians should meet and supplicate the mercy of God, that he would stay his hand; and as the approaching evening was that devoted by our Methodist brethren to the prayer-meeting, we met together, and besought the great disposer of life to spare, if it were possible, our guilty place; and, though we knew it not, voices were then heard in prayer which we were soon to hear no more on earth.

The next morning the wife was taken. I saw her in the early stage of the disease, but could have little conversation with her. I saw her a few hours later, but a deep stupor was upon her, and was with her at evening when she died. I sat up alone, while those who were to have kept me company were digging her grave. The only living souls in the house were the aged grandmother, who was ill, and her surviving daughter, worn out with care and watching. Near morning dawn I was relieved from my lonely vigil, and sought repose. The other members of the stricken family had separated, and gone elsewhere to rest, but on going again in the morning, I found the oldest son returned and in the grasp of the destroyer.

A Pious Youth Called Away.

He was a young man of promise, who had been brought to the Savior while at Jacksonville preparing for college, and who less than a year ago had united, upon profession of his faith, with our little church. He had just completed the first year of his college course, and had a week before returned home to spend his vacation,—and, though we dreamed not of it,—to die. I assisted in nursing him, and at intervals spoke with him of his end, for he did not expect to live. He was calm, and his faith rested securely in his Savior. He was very solicitous for his surviving friends, his brothers and sister, and besought me to endeavor to influence them aright. I asked him what message I should bear to his classmates and college friends. Said he, "Tell those who are out of Christ to seek Jesus; and tell the President I trust in Jesus." To his father, who was almost sick also, and who came in to bid him farewell, he said, "Father, I am almost gone. Oh seek not the world, but Jesus; he is able to give a balm for all your wounded heart endures," and bade him a long "farewell." Others who came to bid him farewell, he addressed in affectionate entreaty and persuasion, testifying to them, "Whatever you may think, there is a reality in the religion of Jesus, and its consolations are such as nothing else can give;" and of one he exacted the promise that he would seek the Savior. It was a most affecting sight to see him thus give the word of a dying man to his dying fellow men, that Christ "is precious" to them that believe. Often when for a moment we were alone, I would repeat to him the promises, to encourage and animate his faith, and pray with him. When he had for a long time ceased to speak, I spoke to him of that bright world where sin and suffering are unknown, and which he would so soon enter, and he pointed to himself and then upward, to intimate, as I supposed, that soon he should be there. Again I said, "You are now in the swellings of Jordan, but there is peace and rest beyond," to which he assented with a nod and an expressive look. Again I asked, "Is there light in the dark valley?" to which he replied as before, and again pointed to his breast and above; and seeing I did not comprehend him, he whispered, "Pray," and kneeling, I commended his departing spirit to the Savior in whom alone he trusted. I was now called out by one of the physicians and informed that the surviving aunt of our dying brother was now attacked with the disease. I endeavored to obtain assistance for her and for the feeble old grandmother, and when I returned, our dear brother was breathing his last; but even in death his eye beamed brightly as if with a vision of heaven. I closed his eyes, and, as there was no one else to do it, procured the digging of his grave and the making of his coffin, and, as the mechanic was evidently unwilling to expose himself to the disease, even took the measure of the corpse. I mention these things only to show the extent of the alarm, and the difficulty of obtaining help.

Another man died about the same hour, who had taken care of one of those who were first taken; and, in Warsaw, the father of the only daughter mentioned above, and a day earlier an uncle, and after lingering a few days, the aunt of whom I have spoken, died rather unexpectedly, when we supposed her recovering. A week after the death of our young brother, the man who mainly assisted in nursing him died also; and soon after I committed the aged grandmother to her long wished for resting place. She was 86 years of age, during 54 of which she had been a member of a Congregational church. She was the last remaining one of the nine who were members of this church at its organization fifteen years ago. Thus, within a few days, four of our little flock were suddenly taken from us, as we trust to a better world. One brother was he of whom I spoke as preparing for the christian ministry; but his race is run, and sooner than he looked for it, came the call—"Come up higher."

At a union prayer meeting soon after, I suggested a day of Fasting and Prayer for the arrest of the pestilence, and the sanctification of affliction to us. The suggestion was approved, and a day was observed, when by request I preached a discourse appropriate to the occasion; and in the afternoon a meeting for conference and prayer was held, conducted by the Baptist minister. I trust it was to all of us a profitable season.

During this time of desolation and distress, there was one Sabbath when I did not preach; and the next Sabbath I preached only once. Since then we have maintained our usual service. I have also preached at one point in the country to large and deeply attentive congregations—the school house being crowded—and should have preached in other places as opportunity offered, had not the excessive rains, and this sickness immediately after, prevented my doing so. I intend visiting Montebello soon; for I learn that the church there needs that some one should “strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.”

In consequence of the presence of the cholera at the time when our communion season should have been observed, it was deferred until next Sabbath, when six individuals are to unite with us by letter, and one upon profession of her faith,—making our present number forty one.

From Rev. John Ballard, Perry, Pike Co.

Temporal Afflictions and Spiritual Prosperity.

The following was written in July; the apprehensions expressed have not been verified, we believe, to any great extent.

The cholera has visited our village and is spreading in the neighborhood. Several deaths have occurred. The people are very much alarmed, and it is difficult to obtain help to take care of the sick. Though much exposed, none of our family has taken the disease, and in this preservation we observe the divine hand and acknowledge the goodness of our God. We received intelligence this morning that one of the members of this church was attacked with this disease. It is the opinion of physicians that it will prevail this season, on account of the rains which have flooded this part of the country, inundating all the bottom lands on the creeks and rivers, carrying off houses and destroying immense numbers of horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry. Besides the bad influence on health, the loss is incalculable; and the suffering it will occasion, is beyond computation.

But in the midst of trials we can sing of mercies. Three of the members of our family have been hopefully converted within a short time past. The girl that lives with us has been anxious for her soul's salvation nearly a year, and about three months since gave her heart to God, and gives very gratifying evidence of piety. Two of our own children, a son and daughter, give evidence of a change, and have united with the church. Ten were received last Sabbath to our church on profession, and one by letter. Four or five more will unite with us next communion. Most of them are members of our Sabbath school. Two of this number, one fourteen and the other eighteen years of age, have consecrated themselves to the work of the ministry. One of the members of this church is now in a course of preparation for the ministry, and enters college this fall. What God has wrought for us is wonderful, and we can but praise his holy name.

Value of the American Home Missionary Society.

The renewal of my commission has just been received with such feelings as can be known only by those in similar circumstances. What a providence, I am ready to exclaim, that such an instrumentality should be raised up for ends so noble and God-like. What could our widely extended country do without its agency? Its design is to occupy almost the whole territory from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Under God it is our only hope, that the teeming multitudes, who will hereafter occupy this vast region of hills, and valleys and prairies, will be moulded for God and usefulness, and prevent their unequalled resources from becoming the greatest curse to our nation and the world. Those already in the western field with the scattered sheep, have no source to look to but to God and the A. H. M. Society. Should the A. H. M. S. withdraw her laborers from the wide field of her occupancy, the very pall of death would hang over the land, and the poor and the destitute, dwelling in the distant cabins and hamlets, would, if sensible of their loss, sit down in utter despair.

A young man, a son of one of our families, died without leaving any evidence of a preparation for a change of worlds. It was a source of deep affliction, not only to the immediate relatives, but to almost the whole community. When I read the note announcing his death, and requesting me to attend the funeral, I was shocked, it was so sudden and unlooked for;—a young man, too, who promised so fair to live long. He was like the young man who came to our Savior; and though not a Christian he was amiable and lovely, and like many, expecting to be a Christian before he died. Such cases are always trying, but in this case there appeared to be something unusually afflicting. The parents were both members of our church, and the three remaining children moved in the circle of the gay. It appeared to me that my responsibility was very great, and immediately resolved on making the most I could of the solemn dispensation of Providence. I accordingly endeavored to preach in view of death and the judgment to come with affectionate plainness, from the words in Proverbs, "A wise man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself, but the simple pass on and are punished." As the family returned from the grave, the youngest of the family, a son of about eighteen years, spoke to his parents and the surviving brother and sister, of God's solemn visitation and the end he proposed in their affliction, which was, in his view, their reformation. After a few solemn words, he led the family in prayer to the source where the mourner finds relief. The father, up to this time, had never led his household in morning and evening devotions, judging that his abilities were not to be used in the edification of others. But now all his excuses vanished, and he was led to "try his own one talent," as he expressed it in conversation with me soon after. Now, it may be said of the whole family, behold they pray. The eldest son has been engaged in mercantile pursuits for a number of years in our village, and has a wide circle of acquaintance, and is as I trust exerting a good influence. He is the superintendent of a Sunday school. The change, it is remarked, is as great in the parents as in the children.

A little later, our missionary was called to weep over the departure of a beloved daughter, whose dying deportment sweetly mitigated the bereavement.

We mourn her loss, but not like those who have no hope. In the midst of affliction how good and how kind the Lord is. I find in my own experience since her departure, that my hold on the earth is weaker, and in proportion as it is weaker is my hold on heaven stronger. I desire above every thing, to be an instrument of good to this sin-ruined world while I stay in it.

Improvement.

I have labored among this people three years. At times I have felt exceedingly discouraged, but when I look back, and see what the prospects were when I commenced, what was the order or behavior in times of worship, and what little interest was taken in attending meeting, and compare that day of beginnings with the present, I think I ought not to complain or say I have spent my strength in vain. We are raising money to purchase a Sabbath school library—shall probably obtain about $20.

There is an advancement in principle, and a closer attachment to one another and to the order of God's house. We are not interrupted by other denominations, though we have hearers of the various classes of Christians; and there is a good degree of confidence and brotherly love among us.

Yesterday our Sabbath school, on invitation, came to my house, and about eighty dined with me; a few Norwegians, English, and French children mingled with us. One, whose mother is an Irish Roman Catholic, had been invited to attend a ball in an adjoining neighborhood, but was among us. Her sister accepted the invitation and went; but this one replied, that she could not attend our meeting and the Sabbath school, and then go to the dance; nor could she go from the dance to the meeting.

A Breach Made.

One convert from a class not easily approached, frequently proves the beginning of a blessed work. It is a breach in the ramparts of worldliness, through which the standard of the cross may be borne to positions before unattainable.

Our last communion season was witness of a scene of special interest in this community. One from the circle of our young people came out from among the gay and giddy, and dedicated herself to God. It was the first occurrence of the kind. This has been a place much given to pleasure seeking, and it seemed almost beyond hope to break into the circle of pleasure's votaries; and the more was it a matter of interest to see one of their number stand forth alone and devote herself to God in the ordinance of baptism, and in covenant with his people. Another person in middle life had offered herself from the same ranks, and had been accepted by the church; but her ill health prevented her appearing. These were some of the fruits of the partial work of grace with which we were blessed last Spring: a work which we feel is steadily bearing and maturing the fruits of prayer, faith, constancy, and holy influence, in the hearts and lives of the members.

Regular Preaching the most Advantageous.

I am all the while oppressed with the feeling, that much is lost here to the steady and restraining influence of religion, for want of regular religious services every Sabbath. With two exceptions, there has been no minister here on those days that I have been absent, during the past year. In such circumstances it is difficult to form the habit of sabbath-keeping among those who have no heart-reverence for the holy day. From spending one Sabbath in idleness, they come to the next with less interest in the public worship of God. They do not form the habit of "church-going." But while there is such a fewness of men for the missionary labor, and no more means than men, I scarcely know how to think of confining my labors to one point.

Miscellaneous.

Visit to an Infidel Celebration.

Early one afternoon, in the month of August, 1847, a colporteur of the American Tract Society called at our house, and informed me that there was to be a great celebration in the Kneeland neighborhood that afternoon; and as he desired to know what they would say and do, he should attend, and wished me to accompany him. The distance was short, it being only a mile to the place; so with staff in hand, we were soon there. The gathering was in a beautiful grove, upon the banks of the river Des Moines. The object of the assemblage was to celebrate the Anniversary of Kneeland's liberation from prison in Boston, to which place he had been sentenced for blasphemy. There were present of both sexes and of all ages, about one hundred and fifty. But probably not half of these were skeptical in their views. They came as spectators.

A platform was erected for the speakers, and the people were ranged in a circle around it. We arrived in the midst of a speech. Upon our joining the company, the snap of the eye, the sly glances, and the jogging of one another, seemed to say, "There's a priest among us, we'll have a good time." The speeches were spiced with such sweetmeats as these:—"We are not indebted to christianity for the first practical good. What has christianity done? Look at Spain! Look at Mexico! In early days Mexico was a paradise. Her people were among the most virtuous and happy. But ever since Columbus, the christian missionary, came over and converted them to christianity, they have been miserably degraded and wretched. We glory in infidelity. We wear it as the cloak for our virtues, just as the Christians wear Christianity as the cloak for their vices." Cries of "Yes, yes, that's it," were heard from the crowd; and one who spoke for my special benefit, said, "There was St. Gregory, who was covered over with sin six feet deep."

At the close of these speeches, a pressing invitation was given me to "take the stand." But this was declined, with the remark that I came as a spectator, and that if I spoke, I could not expect to change their views. "He dare not speak without a pulpit before him. 'T won't do where there can be a reply," said an old man.

The ladies withdrew to prepare the dinner, while the men gathered thick around "the priest," to whet their appetites by "using him up." The two champions, and high priests of the day, were large gray headed men, who literally "stooped for age." One of them was an apostate from a Baptist church in Vermont, and the other from a Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania. It was perfectly evident that, if I did not speak in some manner, they would take advantage of my silence. So in giving the sequel, for the sake of convenience, I will call one of these two men Doctor. He was a physician. Call the other Mr. M., and your Missionary, H. M.

I had only time to seat myself, before these two high priests stood leaning upon their staves before me, and the crowd were all around.

Mr. M.—"As I take you to be a philosopher and a theologian, I should like to ask a few questions, if you have no objection."

H. M.—"Perhaps I shall not be able to give you satisfactory answers, but it will afford me pleasure to gratify you as far as I am able."

Mr. M.—(Very smoothly.) "Well, just for the purpose of information, will you please to tell us how large the Holy Ghost is?"

The point of this was that they did not believe in any such thing as spirit, nor in any thing that was not material; and therefore if I, "a philosopher and theologian," could not tell how large the Holy Ghost was, of course I must be the next passenger, bound for Salt river.

H. M.—"That is rather a tough question, Mr. M.; but when you are attacked with something like the bilious colic, and are distressed almost to death, and feel as though another gripe or two would take your life, how large is the pain?" (A general laugh.)

Mr. M.—"Man does what he does under the influence of circumstances, over which he has no control. He is not responsible for his actions, because he cannot help them."

H. M.—"And so you came all the way to this celebration by means of circumstances which you could not control, and all the rest have done the same thing."

Mr. M.—"Certainly. Show me a thing that is not the fruit of circumstances?"

H. M.—"Then the priests do what they do to exterminate infidelity and atheism, by the force of circumstances which they cannot control. But how comes it to pass that you consider them as being so greatly at fault? Why do you speak of them as being the enemies of the race? You have dealt pretty liberally in this kind of capital in your speeches to-day. Why not extol their efforts? And, more especially, why do you not celebrate the day of Kneeland's condemnation and imprisonment, as well as the day of his liberation? The Bostonians did what they did by circumstances which they could not control." (A great deal of laughing.)

Mr. M.—"But it is the circumstances. Men cannot control the circumstances of one of their actions."

H. M.—"Then if I take my cane and give you a sound drubbing over the head, I may sing all the way home to-night, and you will charge it all to the circumstances. You will not consider me at fault."

Mr. M.—"Yes, I'll send the circumstances to hell; I won't send you there." (A loud laugh.)

H. M.—"That's very generous. But do you act on that principle? Suppose some of those against whom you hold notes, should come and tell you that they know they owe you, but that they never intend to pay. They would not if they could just as well as not. Wouldn't you leave their notes at the collector's office?" (Cries of, "Good, good.")

Mr. M.—"All this hair splitting about would and would not, right and wrong, good and evil, guilt and innocence, is a humbug. These terms all amount to the same thing. There is no such thing as right and wrong."

H. M.—"I knew that would follow from your doctrine, though I did not know that you would so openly avow it. But will you tell us why you employ these terms so freely among yourselves? and more especially when you speak of the priests? No one would ever mistrust that you really believe what you profess, when you speak of them." ("Good, good," with laughing.) "And then too, most certainly, if I give you a real drubbing with my cane, you cannot say that I do any harm; for there is no such thing. Not one of all the priests has ever done any in his life. Now to try your principle, suppose I take my cane and make a serious experiment upon your head?"

Mr. M.—(Very emphatically.) "I don't—like—that illustration about the cane." (A roar of laughter.) "The amount of it is, when we speak of doing a thing, or when we speak of right and wrong, or of the mind, soul and spirit, we use words without meaning. There is no such thing. That which is not material, is nothing."

H. M.—"Doctor, you and I have had a little conversation upon this point before, but we did not get through; and now, as it is up again, I should like—"

Doctor.—(Abruptly and sourly.) "None of your Gospel pettifogging. I know you have got fables, and parables, and visions, and dreams, and soul, and spirit, and Holy Ghost and all, in your Bible; but—(Cries of, "Let him go on! Let him go on!")"

H. M.—"You may call it pettifogging, or what you please, Doctor. I will try to talk common sense, but will leave it to the company to decide whether I do or not. If I understand you, Mr. M., you say that that which is not material, is nothing."

Mr. M.—"Yes, that's it. Immateriality is an absurdity."

H. M.—"Then all thoughts, and all the products of the mind are material also."

Mr. M.—"Most certainly."

H. M.—"And the mind, or the soul, and all the thoughts, whatever we call them, are matter, and so have the attributes of matter, such as length, breadth, thickness, weight?"

Mr. M.—“Certainly. It is absurd to talk of a thing which is not material. Immateriality is an absurdity.”

H. M.—“Very well. When we communicate thoughts, we communicate matter. We communicate shape, size, and weight. That is understood. Now then, if you two old men continue to talk to me, and I receive your thoughts without making any reply, you will reduce yourselves to skeletons; and I, though small, bid fair to become a pretty corpulent man.” (The woods rang with laughter.)

We were now interrupted by the call to dinner. To this I was politely invited, and was conducted to the head of the table. After we were seated, and while the waiters were serving, the Doctor asked me if I could partake at their table without “grace;” to which I replied, that if they could not permit me to invoke a blessing publicly, I was not limited to that method of doing it. Soon after this, the Doctor said to some of those who sat the other side of him from me, “He eats with publicans and sinners;” and I could not help replying to this, that I was happy to see him recognize the distinction.

Dinner being over, and the furniture removed, seats were placed upon, and in front of the tables, for the ladies, while the gentlemen were ranged in the form of a semicircle in front of, and facing the ladies. The “priest” was conducted to a chair a little forward of the center of the half circle, and also facing the ladies. The toast-master stood by his side. And now for the toasts; it being understood that time will be given after each one, for a laugh or a speech; just as the spirit shall move. One toast was read very deliberately and emphatically; but—all was silent as death. Another was read, and another. Still, not a smile nor a word. There was a rustle from the very painfulness of the silence. The toast-master then abandoned the reading of toasts, and called for volunteers. A few responded to the call, and a few toasts and one or two pieces of rhyme were given. One of the toasts was substantially this:—“Eighteen hundred and fourteen years ago, Jesus Christ was imprisoned for blasphemy; and — years ago, Abner Kneeland was imprisoned for the same crime; the latter a philosopher, the former a juggler.” The design of all the toasts, as well as the previous speeches, seemed to be, to deliver themselves of the gall and spleen they had treasured up against priests, priestcraft, and religion. But during the whole of this part of the celebration, there was little laughter, and not a single speech; a result very different from what they intended and expected. They were evidently under great restraint. Their consciences revolted at their own sentiments and performances. And judging from their appearance, one could not help thinking that they felt themselves thoroughly unmasked, and that the absurdity of their principles had been exposed. But they went through.

The grand finale was to be fiddling, and probably dancing. When it was announced that there were to be no more toasts, the writer arose and remarked that he came simply to see and hear, without the expectation of changing their views, or of having his own changed. He then thanked them for their courtesy and hospitality, and left. The next day, however, he received through the post-office, post paid, a letter from a prominent man of the occasion, saying he regretted that my remarks on leaving, did not receive a courteous reply, and he wished to express in writing what he considered due to me in the circumstances.

In closing, I would simply remark, that if any regard it improper for a minister to go to such a place, I have nothing to say. It is up hill business to go; but by going sometimes, one can learn how they elaborate infidel influence, and how they diffuse it abroad. Yet no labored argument, nor all the lectures on the Evidences of Christianity, which the writer could give would be felt, as was this method of taking them upon their own foundation. The most effectual method of dealing with infidels and atheists, is, to “answer them according to their folly.” For months after this encounter, the writer did not meet one of the company without witnessing a smile upon his countenance. They have been far more courteous and friendly ever since. And the writer has not heard that they have had another celebration since.

Salary Maxima.

He is a glutton who lives to eat, not he who eats to live: so he is a hireling preacher who preaches that he may take pay, not he who takes pay that he may preach—an important distinction, but overlooked by those who talk loudest and longest about hirelings.

“The Lord hath ordained that they who preach the gospel, should live of the gospel.” How do they explain this text, who wish to have their minister live, not by the gospel, but by farming or school-teaching?

The congregation who compel their pastor to spend two thirds of his time on the farm or in the school-house, ought to be satisfied if he gives to them the remaining one third; but they are generally the ones who demand of him four thirds.

If the care of souls is so light a matter as only to demand a few fragments of the preacher's time after he is exhausted with secular toils, then let us abolish the ministry, and every man do his own preaching; otherwise, let us leave the holy ministry on the basis upon which our Lord placed it.

The cant about hireling preachers takes marvelously with many, because the nearest road to their hearts, and the one most traveled, is through their purses.

Men soon become very fastidious about that which they have for nothing. How few thank God for air and water! It is, therefore, a wise arrangement of Christ that men should pay for the ordinances of the gospel, lest they learn to despise them.

A comfortable support to a pastor—not only voted, but promptly paid—is a three fold blessing—a blessing to him who receives it, and a double blessing to them who give it.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL, Mark xvi. 15.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

Vol. XXIV.

DECEMBER, 1851.

No. 8.

Why are not the Waste Places Built up?

THE AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY has labored for twenty five years to supply the Gospel to the growing population of our country. By a constant, wakeful attention to the newest developments, it has succeeded in effecting the lodgement of religious institutions in each principal section, simultaneously with the entrance of the people. In this way, the most important points of influence, along the lines of migration and trade, have happily been supplied with the means of grace.

When the Society was formed, Ohio was yet a frontier State. Since then, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Texas, New Mexico, Oregon and California, have successively sent up the Macedonian cry. Different portions of these new States have stood forth, each in its turn, more prominent than all others, "as the Canaan of its day, to which the emigrant tribes directed their course; but scarcely had the outline of its settlements been sketched, ere it was obliged to yield this distinction to some newer and more attractive territory beyond it." Thus, the resources of the Institution have been continually taxed to keep up with the most advanced settlers. Meanwhile, the process of filling up with people the vast interior of those States, has been steadily going on. More than two millions and a half have been added to their population within ten years. These are continually rendering the settlements more dense. What is this year a scattered hamlet, becomes, the next a compact village, encircled by its system of rural dependencies. Streams are occupied by mills and factories; the winding forest road is superseded by the straight turnpike, bordered by fenced fields. Every succeeding year, canals and railways open new routes of travel, create centers of local trade, and develope more and more the resources of the country. In this way, there has accumulated on the hands of the church a vast amount of missionary labor—that of filling up these vacant spaces in the interior with churches, ministers, and the means of grace. Every year adds to the sum of this unaccomplished work, and increases the difficulties of doing it.

Why is this work not done? The churches who have engaged with any considerable zeal in the propagation of the Gospel in our country, have their respective organs through which they operate, and into which they pour their contributions for this object. They hold these organizations responsible for the extension of religious institutions; and if the progress be not in proportion to the demand, they ask for the reasons. And this is right. If there has been any dereliction, either on the part of the public in supplying the means, or on the part of the societies in employing them, it should be ascertained and corrected without delay.

Having had no small share of the responsibility of our Home work devolved upon them, the Executive Committee of the American Home Missionary Society remark, in relation to the question propounded above, that the institution which they represent has done all that could reasonably be required of it to meet the increasing demand for the Gospel in the waste places of our land.

1. It has diligently sought for suitable persons to be employed as missionaries, and sent them upon the field. Not only has it been ready to accept such as might offer themselves for this service, with proper testimonials, but it has labored to excite a missionary spirit among candidates for the ministry, and to turn the current of interest and feeling towards the destitute portions of the land. A large share of all the statistical and other information which has been thrown before the public, and which constitutes the common fund of knowledge and interest respecting the West, has been developed by the research of the officers, agents and missionaries of this Society. This information has been wrought into appeals both to the ministry and to the churches. And the success of these efforts is seen in the annually increasing list of missionaries and missionary congregations. By far the larger part of the permanent work accomplished in the newer sections, by planting churches, sending out and sustaining ministers, and thus establishing religious institutions on some stable basis, has been done by the agency of this Society, and in the natural and appropriate operation of its plan and policy. In the States of New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, more than forty churches have risen by the aid of this Institution to a condition of self support. In New York, a similar work has been done for more than one hundred and sixty churches; while some three or four hundred others have received more or less aid. Sixty, out of seventy eight churches on the Western Reserve, which assume the support of their ministers, are the foster children of this Society. In the infancy of Ohio and Indiana, this Society and its present auxiliaries assisted nearly all the churches which received aid from any source, so that it is scarcely an exaggeration to say, that all the Congregational churches, and all the Presbyterian churches of both schools, have been directly or indirectly aided by it. Of the churches in the States of Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri and Iowa, it may be said that they have been created, instrumentally, by the American Home Missionary Society. Only three of the eighty Congregational churches of Michigan have arisen without its help; and the facts are similar respecting the one hundred Presbyterian churches of that State. In Wisconsin, one hundred and twenty ministers—all but thirteen of the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations who have preached in that State—have been sent or sustained by this Institution; and nearly all the one hundred and twenty six churches in the State have been either organized by its missionaries or aided by its funds. Seven eighths of the churches in Illinois, which sympathize in doctrine and ecclesiastical relations with this Institution, owe their planting and training to its timely and liberal care. And if we subtract from Iowa and Missouri the missionary results of its agency, we leave nearly a total blank. In short, within the period of its existence, “the Gospel has been preached by its missionaries at not less than three thousand five hundred stations; and not far from eight hundred churches, gathered or nurtured through its instrumentality, have passed from the list of beneficiaries, and are now supporting their own Gospel institutions.”

2. This Society has done more than all other agencies to explore the field, and take definite account of its extent and wants. While it has aimed, as fast as practicable, to limit the field of its missionaries to one congregation, it has employed from a fourth to a third of the whole number in districts of larger extent, each hunting up the sheep scattered over several townships and even counties, not only ministering to existing churches, but ascertaining the desirableness and practicability of organizations at new points, and in due time bringing them into being and giving them form and stability. Churches thus originated are immediately connected with the appropriate ecclesiastical bodies most convenient to them, and thenceforth appear as the natural growth of those bodies, rather than of this Society, by whose missionaries and at whose expense they are formed and fostered. Indeed, so largely are the Presbyteries and Associations of the West indebted to this source for the ministers and churches composing them, that they could scarcely have had an existence there without its agency.

3. This view of what the Society has been enabled to accomplish in times past, is evidence that its plan is adapted to do any amount of work of the same kind in time to come. What has been done by the Society may still be done, to any desirable extent, by the same machinery.

If, then, the waste places of our land are apparently (not really) increasing in a greater ratio than the process of supply, it cannot fairly be imputed to a want of adaptation, or inefficiency, on the part of the Society. Why, then, are they not supplied? The answer is to be found in such considerations as the following:—

(1.) There is probably a misapprehension in the public mind as to the relative increase of destitute places. True, they are painfully numerous, and their condition demands the active sympathy of the churches. But we think it is not true that, compared with the same class of cases in former years, they are more numerous in proportion to the number of supplied churches. We believe that the number of the population who enjoy the means of grace is gaining; and the number of those who do not enjoy those means, is relatively declining. The impression that has gone abroad in connection with recent efforts for “church extension,” viz: that there is an alarming deficit in the amount and efficiency of the present means of evangelization, has arisen from increased attention to the subject, rather than from a proportional increase of destitution. The churches have slumbered over the condition and wants of their dying neighbors, and left the work of supplying them almost wholly to the Society; and when at length they awake to the extent of the destitution around them, the newly discovered wastes affect them with the belief that comparatively nothing is doing to remedy the evil. The Society may justly say to such churches, “these are the waste places of which we have been telling you for years; destitutions explored and gauged by our agents, and in behalf of which we have appealed over and over again, through the pulpit and the press, beseeching your co-operation in all practicable ways for their relief. And it is in no small degree owing to the want of your coöperation that the process of supply goes on so slowly.”

(2.) Again, it is suggested, that an important reason why so many sections of our great field are imperfectly supplied with the means of grace, is to be sought in the limited supply of ministers available for the missionary work, and of means to sustain them. Before blame can be laid upon the conductors of Home Missions for failing to supply the vacancies which awaken so much sympathy, it should be shown that they have ever rejected the application of a single suitable candidate for missionary employment. Where is the minister, whose testimonials of standing and adaptation to the labor which he sought were such as they should be, who, on application for missionary employment, has not met with a cordial response? And is not the slow growth of congregations in our new settlements the necessary result, to a great degree, of the limited number of laborers? The country has expanded, the population has increased at a most unprecedented rate, while the numerical increase of the ministry has been in no corresponding proportion. And the hindrance to missions, arising from this scarcity of men, is further aggravated by

The want of means to sustain them. Many ministers are hindered from entering the missionary field, because the size or health of their families requires a larger support than can be made up by the feeble churches, even with the usual amount of missionary aid. But why does not the Home Missionary Society make a more liberal grant to such cases? Because it has not the means. The Executive Committee make the best disposition in their power of the contributions submitted to their control. They do not believe they could adopt different principles of appropriation without doing less good with the amount intrusted to them. Nor do we think it practicable for any society, or other arrangement for missionary operations, to place ministers in the field and sustain them, any faster than is done by the operation of this Society, without a more rapid multiplication of laborers, and a more liberal scale of contributions by the churches for their support.

The remedy for the evil complained of, then, cannot be one of sudden effect. It must be a work of time, a gradual and progressive process, by which the heart of the church shall be quickened and enlarged, a larger proportion of her sons and her treasures consecrated to the missionary work. No resolutions of ecclesiastical or other assemblies, no changes of organization can supply the want of the vital pulse of holy zeal, or dispense with the agency of more ministers, and more self denial in providing for them the means of subsistence. And what is wanted to repair the breaches in the walls of Zion, is not more explorers to find where they are; nor plans and resolutions in reference to the undertaking; but laborers who have a mind to the work, and materials wherewith to build.

VERMONT D. M. SOCIETY.

Thirty Third Anniversary.

The Vermont Domestic Missionary Society held its Thirty third Anniversary at Bradford, on the 18th day of June, 1851.

An abstract of the Annual Report of the Directors, was read by Rev. J. F. Stone, the Secretary. The meeting was impressively addressed by Rev. Messrs. Boutelle, Fisk, Thurston, and the President, Hon. E. Fairbanks.

The leading facts pertaining to this portion of the missionary field are contained in the following extracts from the Report.

The Treasury.

When the Treasurer's account was closed at the last annual meeting, there was a balance on hand of $154.07. There has since been received $6,688.96, making the available resources for the year $6,843.03.

Sums amounting to $1,148.95 have been sent to the A. H. M. S., at New York, without passing through our Treasury; so that the whole amount of receipts from Vermont, during the year, for Home Missionary purposes, is $7,839.91; which exceeds the amount of the previous year by nearly $2,000. But this increase is mainly from legacies. The amount from ordinary collections and donations, exceeds the amounts from the same sources for last year, by only about $400. And it must be obvious to all that we ought not to presume on an equal amount from legacies, for years to come, so that the question of sustaining enlarged operations must be decided by the contributions of the churches and congregations.

Had no more been realized from legacies this year than during the previous year, and had the contributions been the same as they have been, the Treasury would have been deficient by more than $1,000. And the Board cannot go forward and occupy the additional fields which Providence is opening before them with very encouraging prospects, as the Society have instructed them to do, without a large increase of means.

So nearly as it is possible to calculate, in view of present providential indications, not less than $2,000 more than has been received from all sources during the past year, will be indispensable for the ensuing year. And without such increase of means, the Board will have to refuse applications from fields of importance and good promise, or incur liabilities without the means of meeting them.

Summary.

Sixty one missionaries, including the Secretary, have been in commission during the whole or some portion of the year, and the ministerial labor performed by these, and which the Society has assisted to sustain, amounts to fifty years and about three months.

The aid of the Society has been extended to 68 fields, viz: To 61 churches, to 6 communities without churches, and by an itinerant mission of about three months, to the destitute parts of Essex county.

Twelve of these fields have been added to the list within the year.

Revivals.

It is with heartfelt joy and gratitude to God, that we are permitted to report that many of the aided congregations have been visited with the outpourings of the Spirit, by which the churches have been quickened and sinners converted. From 15 congregations there have been reported 125 hopeful conversions. And other reports speak of several conversions, without mentioning the number.

During the year 192 have been added to the aided churches—132 by profession and 60 by letter.

Sixteen have been reported as deceased, and 22 as dismissed to other churches. If these are all the removals, then it would appear that the increase of members in the aided churches is 154.

Thirty Self Supporting Churches.

On looking over the State with reference to the results of the missionary operations of past years, it is found that of the churches which have been aided by this Society within the last 25 years, thirty are now sustaining the preached gospel without missionary aid. Most of these are stable and efficient churches. But two of them, owning a meeting house in common with another denomination, have Congregational preaching only half the time. And two are supplied by ministers who have some other means of support, for a compensation that would not be adequate to the support of a minister in ordinary circumstances.

Churches Weakened.

Twelve other churches, whose names appear in the list for this year, had become independent of the Society, and for several years supported their own minister; but they have been again reduced to the necessity of applying for aid.

More than 30 fields which have been the scenes of missionary labor within 25 years, are now, and most of them have been for a long time, destitute. In several of these fields the churches have already become extinct, and in others, are rapidly wasting away, and must soon become extinct, unless efficient measures are used to prevent.

Had missionary labors been sustained in these places permanently, notwithstanding temporary reverses and discouragements, there would doubtless, long ere this, have been in many of them, stable and influential churches, supporting their own means of grace and co-operating with us to plant the gospel in other communities.

And the results of the past operations of this Society are seen in the present condition of the churches now receiving aid, as contrasted with what must have been their condition if no missionary labor had been performed in their behalf. Not a few of these churches would, in all probability, have become extinct before this, but for the aid and sympathy they have received. For it is well known that some, even of those that are now the most prosperous, were on the point of abandoning all further efforts, when they were taken up by the Society. In estimating results, we should consider the evil that has been prevented, as well as the positive and visible good that has been achieved.

Reasons of this.

On searching for the cause of the diminution of so many of the churches, and the protracted feebleness of many that have long been receiving missionary aid, it is found, that while the ordinary causes of decline have prevailed to some extent, many of the churches have been reduced, mainly by emigration to the West and to other parts. A large proportion of some of these churches has thus been transferred to other fields. Several churches at the West were originally almost entirely composed of members from these churches.

Of twenty five which were dismissed by a missionary church in Vermont to other churches, one resides in Kentucky, two in Wisconsin, four in Illinois, two in Ohio, two in Pennsylvania, two in New York, two in New Hampshire, and seven in Massachusetts; and only two in Vermont, one having died. Those now living reside in nine different States, and, so far as we know, are maintaining a christian life.

From another of the feeble churches, more than forty have gone to the West, and more than half that number to different parts of New England. Three of these are ministers of the Gospel—one the Pastor of one of the principal churches of New England, and two in the service of the A. H. M. Society at the West. Two are distinguished female teachers, Principals of female seminaries. More than fifty of the pupils of one of these, it is understood, are now teachers at the West.

From seven churches, the aggregate of whose resident members is only three hundred and twenty three, there have gone out more than five hundred and fifty, seven of them ministers; and nearly two hundred of them have gone to the West.

It should, perhaps, be considered, that emigration draws mainly upon the young, or at least, such as are in the vigor of life; while the aged and the feeble generally prefer to remain.

While such facts go far to explain the occasion of the protracted feebleness of so many of the aided churches, and the rapid diminution of others, they also show that the results of missionary labors are to be looked for, not wholly, nor in all cases principally, in the fields where those labors have been performed; but in other and distant parts. To the superficial observer, who casts a hasty glance at some of our missionary fields, the impression suggested is that very little has been accomplished; that the expense and toil have been in great measure thrown away. "Your Society have made a failure here," he says. "You have accomplished nothing; and you probably never will accomplish any thing in this field. The church is just about as feeble, and requires as much aid as it did ten years ago. Perhaps you have not the right sort of a minister here." We point him to other parts for the results of these labors. We point him to churches in Illinois, in Wisconsin, in Iowa, and other parts of the great field, composed wholly, or in part, of such as have gone out from these churches. We point him to meeting houses which those churches have erected—to the ministers which they are supporting—to the Sabbath schools, and other schools which have been established by their means—to the influence which they are exerting for morality, and good order, and intelligence, and the civil weal, and to promote the evangelization of the new but rapidly increasing settlements around them;—and we say to him, there are the principal results of the humble, laborious and self-denying missionary toil performed in connection with many of the feeble churches of Vermont.

And who can doubt that the churches of Vermont are doing more to establish and sustain the institutions of religion throughout the land, by means of the christian families and individuals that have been trained up in these churches for the service of God, and are now scattered throughout the land, than they could have done by any other means. And do we not see the hand of God in this? Is it not his way, in part, for spreading the gospel, and extending the church, till the land "shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord?"

Look at this.

The means and efforts hitherto appropriated to the cause of Domestic Missions, have been far from proportionate to its intrinsic and relative importance, or to the providential demands. We make but slow progress towards "taking possession of this whole State for Jesus Christ." Our Society has been in operation more than thirty years, yet even now, not less than seventy fields are destitute of Congregational preaching, and many of them of preaching by any denomination. In some of these fields, one generation has already grown up without the gospel, and gone out into the world. And little improvement is made to secure a better training of the next generation. At the rate we are advancing, another century must pass before the institutions of the gospel will have been established in every community; and other generations of undying souls will have exerted and transmitted their influence, spent their season of probation and gone to their account. The friends of religion in Vermont must take care of the religious interests of Vermont, or none will do it.

Missionary Correspondence.

MINNESOTA.

From Rev. J. C. Whitney, Stillwater, Washington Co.

It is as a dream, or a tale that is told, when I remember that two years have been spent in the employment of the American Home Missionary Society. Yet I trust that the means and the time have not been spent in vain. If I look at the real state of things as they now exist in this community, I feel as if little had been done; but when I trace back step by step, I feel as if much had already been accomplished. Our Sabbath service is better attended; our temperance movement is greatly encouraging, effecting more than our most sanguine expectations of its results.

On the 3d of August our Church was dedicated. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Potts, of St. Louis.

IOWA.

Frontier Activity in Diffusing the Word of God.

The zeal of the friends of truth, in circulating the Scriptures in this comparatively frontier country, may well put to shame the apathy of many older settlements.

A Bible Society for this county was organized a little more than a year ago. Since its organization $180 worth of Bibles have been purchased by the Society; $100 worth have been sold for cash, and one fourth of that amount has been donated to the destitute, by an agent employed for this purpose. $160 have been subscribed, and about $100 collected and paid for Bibles and for defraying other expenses of the Society. About two thirds of the county has been visited, and the destitute supplied by our agent. It is expected that he will prosecute his labors till every family in the county is visited, and all are supplied with the word of life who will receive it.

From Rev. J. W. Windsor, Maquoketa, Jackson Co.

Losses by the Flood.

The floods this spring have been more disastrous to our community than any thing that has occurred since the settlement. There are few families but have suffered; and many have lost not only the amount of their last winter's work, in the shape of logs cut and hauled to the saw mills; but also many farms, situated on the banks of the streams, have been stripped of their fences, and their crops for the present year utterly destroyed. I think the loss sustained by this immediate neighborhood, will nearly equal the whole amount required to sustain the missionaries of your Society in this State for one year. A portion of this has fallen very heavily on those who bear the principal weight of sustaining the Gospel in this place. Some of these are men who have long struggled with poverty and the difficulties of a new country, and were just beginning to feel themselves somewhat relieved from their pressing pecuniary obligations, usually attendant on the unnatural and extravagant amount of interest demanded for money in the West. Some of our farmers have had no alternative other than the loss of their farms, or to pay from 20 to 50 per cent. interest on the entrance money. I am glad to say this state of things is passing away.

Here is a wide field of labor, and must ultimately become a somewhat prominent point. The mass has yet to be moulded. The thought of this region's being thrown open for the wild beast of the wood, to enter and scatter the sheep and to devour, is distressingly painful to my mind, and I should prefer to endure privations to a much larger extent if necessary, rather than forsake the field.

At Maquoketa my congregations continue good. Sometimes we see considerable attention and seriousness under the word. We do not always retain the individual among us sufficient time to trace its development. This is one evil to which we in the West are much exposed; oftentimes, removals take from us our best members; and at other times those of the unconverted who appear most promising. We hope and pray, as they leave us, that they may diffuse light in the yet darker spots of the West. Still, we have reason to feel encouraged—the Lord has not left himself without witness among us. At our communion season in July, we were privileged to receive three members of one family by profession of their faith in Christ. Their mother, two sisters, and their husbands, were connected with the Church previously.

From Rev. S. D. Helms, Cottonville, Jackson Co.

Death of Mrs. Helms.

The blow which had so long been impending, at length fell upon me. In my former report I mentioned the sickness of my dear, affectionate wife. The Lord has taken her from me, to be with me no more while I stay in this world. While I feel a desolation and loneliness of heart which only those know who have learned by a similar experience, still there is a mitigation to my sorrow in the assurance that my loss is her gain. The last days of her life made me feel more than ever before, the preciousness of the Christian's hope. She was called to leave her family at a period most trying to a mother. She left behind her two children, but she gave them up with less apparent conflict of mind than I could have expected. She committed herself and her all to Christ, and the peace which the world cannot give was hers. The day before she died she said to me, "All is peace." She was buried on Saturday, and on the Saturday following I followed to the grave, to be laid beside the mother, our infant son. Thus stroke has followed stroke.

The neighbors were attentive and kind during my wife's protracted illness. My hope and prayer is that the impressions made by those scenes, so trying to myself, may yet result in the salvation of some souls.

From Rev. W. L. Coleman, Bellevue, Jackson Co.

Afflictions—Church Building.

Last fall the Lord visited us in judgment in suddenly calling into the eternal world two heads of families, whose wives had been for some time members of our church. These providences, giving occasion to a class of discourses of a most solemn character—which were continued for successive weeks—God graciously blessed to the awakening and gradually the conviction of some, who during the winter were hopefully converted to himself. These have augmented the forces of our little Zion; and we have felt encouraged in our prayer meetings, and have undertaken to erect a house of worship.

The past quarter has been full of solemn events. The Cholera visited our town during the last eight days of July and the first five or six of August, of which some seven or eight of our inhabitants died. There were also in our town and vicinity some four or five deaths about the same time from other diseases—one or two of them from delirium tremens. Not a member of any of our Protestant churches has been called away, nor have many of them been sick. This we esteem a remarkable providence. It has been my privilege to visit several houses of mourning, and to present the Gospel of consolation to some. One or two cases were peculiarly interesting. In one instance, where a husband and father had died, I found the widow and five little orphan boys—two of them twins—in deep affliction, and presented to them some of the declarations of God's word, which I was gratified to learn were the means of real comfort.

Though exhausted with care and watching during the hot weather, the Lord has been very merciful to us. I often feel my inadequacy to so grand and glorious a work as that of proclaiming the Gospel of Christ. A remembrance that "this treasure" is committed to "earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us," cheers me; and I learn to trust again in him whose promise is, that his grace shall be sufficient for us. Thus, when weighed down with conscious imperfections and inefficiency, the grace and manifold promises of our covenant keeping God uphold and strengthen me, and I have kept on at work, hoping and trusting that what is sown in weakness, will yet, by our Almighty Father, be raised in power.

I look forward with deep interest to the time when we may worship God and enjoy the ordinances of the Gospel in our own house, where we shall not be so liable to have our appointments infringed upon by others; nor be subject to many other inconveniences common to a new country. The walls of our church edifice are up, and we hope ere long to see the roof on, and the inside work going on briskly. Every thing in the shape of building moves on slowly here. But we are not discouraged. A year spent in erecting a church, and in getting things into a settled and permanent form, I think not spent in vain, in such a place as this.

From Rev. W. Jones, Cedar Rapids, Linn Co.

Christian Emigration.

Among all the new comers into this vicinity, I do not know of a single professor of religion who will become connected with our church; and our only present hope of increase, therefore, must be in revivals of religion and accessions from the world; and for that we intend to labor, relying on the blessing of God.

One thing connected with the building up of Christ's kingdom in these new parts, has occupied my mind some recently, viz: the forming of centers of religious, moral and educational influence, by means of the immigration of Christian families. Very many churches have already been founded by this means, and much good been done. But a vast deal more can still be done in the same way, by pious families, as such, coming from the older parts of our country, and from churches which can spare them without serious detriment to themselves, and settling down in places where churches may hereafter be formed. I would not indeed recommend them to settle so many together, nor so compactly, as to excite the jealousies of the community, unless they form a colony, and even then I should doubt whether they might not ordinarily do much more good in the long run, by diffusing their influence; but that five or six families, more or less, settle so near together that they could start a Sabbath school and day school, and prayer meeting, &c., and thus become a center, from which an influence for good might radiate all around. A few Christian families thus situated, would be the means of laying foundations which would endure while the world stands. And within my present field of labor, are several inviting places for farmers, which might also be made just such centers of influence. And I may add, that there is needed just such help, in order to their becoming such centers. The minister finds the need of a nucleus, around which he may gather converts, and on whom he can depend to sustain the institutions of religion, wherever he labors. O that christian families at the East would think on these things, and seek to know the will of God and their duty, as to the great western valley; and when they come West, seek not only desirable locations, but also a position where they can be efficient laborers in the Lord's vineyard, and lay up much treasure in heaven.

Movement Slow but Onward.

There has been no special excitement here since last spring, yet Christians seem evidently to be making progress in piety, and becoming more established in the principles of the Gospel. Almost the entire population have manifested a very desirable change in the spirit and habits of Sabbath keeping. The attention to public worship on the Sabbath is very gratifying. The solemnity and earnestness with which they listen to the truth, encourage me to hope that there are yet greater blessings in store for us.

The prayer meeting and Sabbath school have been well attended. The deacon of our church is superintendent, and he is indefatigable in his labors and zeal in this cause. We feel that our God is with us in his great mercy, and that the little church that was planted here last spring is a living branch of the true vine.

MISSOURI.

From Rev. F. Starr, Weston, Platte Co.

Visitation of the Pestilence.

My last gave you an account of my success in obtaining funds for the purchase of a small strip of ground immediately in the rear of our church building. We had just finished fencing, setting out trees, sodding, &c.; all was fair, and the prospects flattering. There had been eight cases of cholera, in eight successive days previous to the Sunday after my last report; and in the morning, thinking that the plague might come upon us, I preached from the text, "There is but a step between me and death." I learned immediately after service, that two persons had died in town that forenoon. In that twenty four hours there were eight deaths. Until 9 o'clock, Saturday night, there had not been a case among the actual residents of our city; but on Sunday, all those who died had long resided here. A dreadful panic spread through the town; the service at night was discontinued, the people being unwilling to congregate together, and I wished to be with the sick. The burning tar at various places through the town, gave it a gloomy and threatening appearance, and seemed to make visible the presence of the dreadful infection. The next day there were many new cases. I had been with one man a large part of the forenoon; he was a partner in one of the drinking houses, (23 public bars in all in the town,) and a bowling alley. He was attended by several large rough men, who lived in the neighborhood; they were men who never go to church; three at least among them had one time or another promised me that they would come to church; the poor dying man had weeks before promised me the same; but none had ever come. Such was the solemnity of these men, and the sense of near danger was so great, that in three hours, (while the poor man was able only the first time to hear or notice me,) I was requested to pray—"Pray if you will, it may do some of us good, if it can't him." And every time the women were summoned from the other houses, till there must have been as many as 15 present each time. The poor man died; his wife was also sick in the next house. My wife went round to show them how to prepare a shroud. She came home quite fatigued. That day there were five deaths, and at 4 o'clock P. M. my wife was sick with the cholera. For a week or ten days I was detained at home, for no help could be obtained. In fact the avarice of man showed itself in a peculiar manner—many of the servants in town are hired of masters living out of town; these servants were many of them taken away from their employers, lest they should die, and be lost to their masters. This made the condition of things worse.

At the end of that week, about 500 of our inhabitants had fled and taken quarters in the country. As far as was in my power I sought to quiet their fears, and be present with as many as possible. After three weeks the disease seemed to disappear, and in about ten days returned with great violence. We have lost about 70 by cholera this summer, and yet for two years past, while it has been above and below us on the river, we have had but two or three cases. About the middle of July I was prostrated by an attack of dysentery, and slowly recovered, and am again quite well.

Death of Ministers.

Three days after my last report, Dr. Fulton, the minister of the O. S. Pres. Church, died very suddenly, with a warning of but an hour and twenty minutes; it was from an affection of the heart and a congestive chill. During the second period of the cholera, Rev. Mr. Roberts, of the Methodist church, was taken sick; for three days he lingered, giving great hope of recovery, until about two hours before he died. He was a great loss to the community. For some six weeks, therefore, I have been the only Protestant minister in this community of 2,000 souls.

Program during the Year.

There have been united to us by letter this year, five; while two have been dismissed to other churches.

As you have learned from my preceding reports, we have done much this year to free ourselves from hindrances and discouragements. From foreign assistance and home exertion, about $1,500 have been obtained and expended, to free us from debt and place us so that we were safe from the interference of evil men.

The results are these, that the church which all thought ready to die, is in such a state that even without a pastor, they could live and keep together. We have paid $500 for which a mortgage was held on the house; we paid $125.50 for the steps which enable us to enter; we paid for a fence which the church promised to build five years before; we have added to our church lot a strip of ground necessary to preserve the walls of the building and the sanctity of the place; we have fenced in a lot before covered with weeds, old wagons, and rubbish from a neighboring wagon shop, and in place of them have 20 young trees growing rapidly. We have also the promise of a gallery, which will encourage our singers, and give them a comfortable place to meet for practice. We have also procured some plain curtains, to add to the comfort of the church, and have braced up the floor, which was settling badly. With a few dollars that remain on hand, we are to repair the ceiling, three or four large portions of plaster having fallen off some two years since. Thus God has blessed us, increased our numbers, encouraged our hearts, freed us from discouragements. We hope he will not withhold a greater, richer blessing, even the outpouring of his Holy Spirit. I think there are some encouraging signs; if he should bless us, our hearts will be full.

"Doing Religion."

There is here a prevalent disposition to rest satisfied with the externals of religion to the neglect of the spirit thereof. Hence, with a large number, Campbellism "takes," since it presents a very easy way of salvation, by preaching "Do religion," and making the great doing to consist in immersion. Hundreds in this State are taking refuge in Campbellism, and many of them from other denominations. Indeed, from the noise and great flourish of trumpets, one would infer that there is no safety, except in the ark of Campbellism. And now they have sent into this region one of their great preachers, who is going forth denouncing "the sects," and laboring with all his self sufficiency to make proselytes. And here and there he catches the "unstable" souls who are carried about by every wind of doctrine. But I will give a picture or two.

See that man lying upon his death bed. Soon he must leave this earth and go into the eternal world. But he feels unprepared to meet his God. Well, what shall he do? He is taught to believe that he cannot be saved without immersion. But he is too feeble to be taken from the house to the creek; nay, his physician says he cannot endure the cold bath. Well, what then shall be done? The man is going to die, and must perish unless immersed. Now see, they are taking a large trough into the house, warming water and putting into it. Presently, every thing is ready. The poor man is taken from his dying couch, and put into the trough; and thus, by a Campbellite preacher, he is prepared for death! His conscience is pacified.

But another one. See quite a crowd collecting on the bank of Grand River. "What is the stir?" Why, look there; they are carrying an old lady afflicted with the dropsy, in a chair down into the river. The Campbellite evangelist descends with them. They set the old lady down into the water. The Campbellite preacher takes hold of the back of the chair, and tips the occupant back under the water, the face excepted, which he sprinkles. And thus she is, we suppose, prepared for heaven. But some may ask, why not immerse her entirely? Why, because she could not bear to have her face put under, and, as that preacher says, "God takes the will for the deed," the sprinkling answers just as well.

The prevalence of this phase of error in many portions of the West, renders it probable that a great battle is yet to be fought in behalf of spiritual Christianity, against the formalism which results from teaching the exclusive efficacy of immersion.

From Rev. T. S. Reeve, St. Joseph, Buchanan Co.

Troublous Times.

Since my last report, sickness has been among us, making fearful havoc among our citizens. And, what is the more remarkable, is the fact that death has fixed his blighting look upon some of the best of our citizens and church members. We have been visited with three fatal diseases at the same time—Typhoid Fever, Flux and Cholera; all of which have been alike fatal. Indeed, it seemed as if they vied with each other in the work of destruction—for neither would yield to remedies, however skilfully applied. Indeed, they each laughed at physicians, for in as many days we lost three of our oldest and best physicians, one by Typhoid fever, one by Flux, and one by Cholera. I have lost two members of my church by Cholera. There were three days in the third week in July which will not soon be forgotten, for it seemed that death had received a "carte blanche" commission, and our city was literally filled with weeping and woe. For a week, four and five died daily in a population of a little more than 3,000.

We are a wicked city, and our great alarm was, that God was removing from us the best—the most intelligent, most pious—leaving behind but a "feeble folk" to contend against the overwhelming forces of the enemy.

But thanks be to the Father of all mercies, sickness and death have taken their departure, and we are now as healthy as two weeks since we were sickly. Suddenly the diseases came among us, and suddenly they departed from us; showing that they are God's agents, going and coming at his bidding. All glory be unto his name!

My church feels its loss. We mourn as a church; for we feel that one of its main pillars has been taken away. To an old church, in an old community, such an occurrence would be an occasion of joy, for they would think only of that glorious gain which the departed had obtained. But it is different here; the removal of an old tried soldier of the cross is a heavy blow upon our weakened ranks. Our only consolation is that our deceased sisters have gone to that happy land, where glorified spirits shout the praises of the Savior for ever.

From Rev. S. N. Grout, Memphis, Scotland Co.

Bereavement and Support.

During the last quarter God has been pleased to remove my dear companion to a higher sphere of labor. She died the first of last July, of consumption, at the age of 25 years and 6 months. But, though called so early in life, and when she had but just entered upon missionary labor, she bade the messenger welcome, and rejoiced in the prospect given her of soon being in a sinless and perfect state. She suffered much bodily distress, but her mind was calm and peaceful. Reason was continued, and she stepped fearlessly down into the dark valley, realizing the faithfulness of Him to whom she had committed her soul in covenant. Her cheerfulness in view of death, the great kindness of this people towards us, and my being fully employed, are to be reckoned among the external circumstances that have tended greatly to alleviate my sorrow. God has been very merciful to me in His providences and in the communications of His grace.

In a strait betwixt two.

At E—— the Catholics are making a vigorous struggle to take the place. They have a church there, and intend to have a school or college. It seems all important that I should be there. The people are anxious to have me go there; but I am more than ever encouraged to stay here. I want to be there, I want to be here; what shall I do? I wish you could send a good faithful brother to take part of the field; and then there would be more work than we could both do. Our Sabbath schools are flourishing. I have been getting some new books, &c., &c. Have preached on the subject of missions, and have established something as near a monthly concert as I can well do at the present. God has given me the affections of the children in a remarkable manner. They are my hope for good in this country.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. J. H. Kasson.

Five Years in Marquette County.

Having closed my labors there for the present, it may not be unfit to take a slight review of changes effected or good accomplished. First, I have to mourn that no revival has occurred under my ministrations, which may in part be attributed to circumstances peculiar to new settlements, and more it may be to my unfaithfulness. May my Master forgive my shortcomings!

On the other hand, I have witnessed cheering signs of advancement. When I came it was literally a wilderness in respect to temperance, Sabbath schools, Tract and Bible distribution and meetings. But God, through several of his servants, has wrought encouraging changes for the better. Public sentiment is exerting a more decided and stronger influence against intemperance; Sabbath schools have been planted in a large part of the settlements, and are waxing more efficient; and meetings are more steadily and generally attended. Then, the flock of Christ was without a fold; during the first year they were gathered in a little church of seven members, out of which has sprung another this summer, and another still has arisen by its side, this season, on ground that was then a part of my field.

It is some satisfaction, that in leaving the field of my former labors, it is not left destitute. We were reluctant to bid adieu to that scene of our first endeavors in the missionary work, but the preponderating reason was, that my health, which had suffered from my long rides over the cold prairies during winter, would be likely to improve in a field where I should only have to preach at one place on the Sabbath.

A Specimen of Many Fields.

There are multitudes of such settlements as this in the new sections of the West, whose condition demands sympathy, but which without a greater missionary force cannot be adequately reached.

There is no village in the town. The population is between 400 and 500. I have an average audience of perhaps fifty, and have organized a Sabbath school of about thirty scholars. There was no male to take charge of the school at first, but recently a young man has come in who has taken hold of it with much interest. Could sufficient labor be bestowed here the result might be happy. At present a church could not be organized—there is general indifference to the truth, and all labor must be gratuitous.

There are several places of this character in this region. Could a man go into them and devote all his time, he might, through the blessing of God, see rich results; but to have only an occasional appointment, does not seem to promise immediate perceptible results.

The Missionary in a Western Village.

There is only one place for worship—the school house. Soon after I came, by a vote of the district, four denominations—Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists and Universalists—were allowed the school house on alternate Sabbaths, and transient ministers were always to have the preference. This was to accommodate other sects whose ministers might occasionally come along. As other denominations did not occupy the house, I succeeded in obtaining it every Sabbath P. M. for several months. But recently transient men are becoming plenty. The “no soul” doctrine, particularly, is being promulgated, and my appointments are interfered with. The superintendent of the Sabbath school and others, embrace the belief that their souls sleep in death, and that precisely as they die so will they rise—that the righteous will then have the immortality Christ has brought to light, and the wicked be annihilated. The Sabbath school is beyond my reach—I can have no direct influence in it. And while there is such activity on the part of those who are opposed to Presbyterianism, and such indifference on the part of those who had as lief sustain that as any thing, I find it a very difficult matter to get any hold upon the community, or carry out any plans I form. There is no material for a church in the village—not even a man to come out and boldly maintain and make effort for the truth. At present a minister of the Cross must feel that he cannot put his trust in man. Still, there are some encouraging circumstances; my audiences are larger than any other, and the more intelligent portion of the community seem desirous to have me preach here.

The sacrifices which one with a family must make in coming to such a place, are to be learned only by experience. Had I known them, I might have hesitated in regard to my duty. But I am here, and have no disposition to turn back for myself, though I should rejoice in the privileges of Eastern society and schools for my family.

From Rev. S. W. Eaton, Lancaster, Grant Co.

I have been enabled, in the kind providence of God, to labor without interruption and with about the usual degree of encouragement. The school house in which we hold our meetings is not unfrequently crowded to excess, and sometimes persons are compelled to leave for want of room. I have been compelled by the urgency of the case to make great exertion to secure the erection of a meeting house. And I am happy to say, that after many discouragements, there is now a prospect of success. I have already had the pleasure of seeing the foundation laid and the frame raised, and in a few weeks I hope to see it so far completed that it can be occupied with comfort during the winter.

From Rev. J. S. Emery, Sheboygan Falls.

When I left the East, I went out in one particular, at least, like Abraham, not knowing whither I went. But he who watches the steps of his people, guided me in perfect safety.

This village is situated at the Falls of the Sheboygan River, some six or seven miles from its mouth. According to the last census, it contains some twelve hundred inhabitants. Its water privileges are superior to any in the county, and cannot fail to make it a place of importance. Indeed it is already a place of extensive business.

The inhabitants are a heterogeneous mass. I could take my stand at the corner of some of our streets, and in the course of a day find a representative from nearly every State in the Union, and almost all the nations of the earth. They possess but a very little “elective affinity” for each other. Whatever else they may have left behind them, they have been careful to transport a love for the institutions of their native soil. Hence there is a great diversity of opinion, which is yet, by some means, to be moulded into a proper shape. This fact gives to your missionary a peculiar responsibility; and he needs your sympathies and prayers.

Our congregation has, I should think, more than doubled, numbering now, in good weather, perhaps one hundred and thirty or forty. An average, perhaps, of seventy five.

We have in contemplation the erection of a church edifice, for which a generous subscription is made out, and the timber hewn. I do not think it will be raised this fall. All the materials will, I have no doubt, be collected this winter, and be prosecuted the next season. The ladies have a sewing circle, the avails of which are designed to be laid out in furnishing the contemplated house of worship.

From Rev. John Bantly, Platteville, Grant Co.

German Mission.

I come at the close of my year's labor, to tell you what God has done through my feeble instrumentality. I have nothing extraordinary to relate, but when I look back on the year past I can truly say, the mercy of the Lord manifested itself in a visible manner. An old, well experienced Christian, stated to me that the difference between now and the time when I first came here, is like day and night. Those that would first hardly speak with the minister of the Gospel, are now seen from Sabbath to Sabbath in the sanctuary, listening to the preaching of the glad tidings.

I have enjoyed continued health, so that I could preach every Sabbath twice, here, in Hazel Green and in Potosi. Here in Platteville, to judge according to the attendance on the worship, the Lord has blessed my labors. Never has the house where I preach been so crowded as on the last Sabbath. I think that a considerable number are under conviction, and several have come near to the solemn crisis of eternal decision.

Persecution.

There are two German Roman Catholic brothers who attended regularly my preaching, leaving entirely their own church. Some other Catholics threatened vengeance. On the fourth of July those Catholics assembled in the beer-house, as their general gathering place, where they got drunk. Now it happened that as the above mentioned brothers were passing peaceably by, the vengeance broke out in open flames. The general watchword was: "Now let us massacre the Lutheran heretics;" and like tigers they fell upon the helpless brothers, and nearly killed them. Other Germans of my congregation ran to assist them, but they were treated in the same way. It was an awful scene; but I hope it has tended to the good of the poor brothers. As it happened towards evening, they washed from their faces the blood, and came with their blue eyes, with us in the evening, to the prayer meeting. I exhorted them not to regret to suffer a little for Christ's sake. What the consequence of all this will be, I do not know; but they saw at least what kind of a spirit lives in their Catholic brethren. The assailants fled the very same night. Recently they came back and begged for pardon. The injured persons gave to them willingly and christianly the forgiving hand.

We are just engaged in building a house of worship. It is hard for a poor congregation like mine, to erect such a house. The building will be of brick, and 25 by 45 feet, and will be finished this fall except plastering, slips and pulpit, &c., which we will try to finish next spring. It will cost something over $1,000.

A German's Appeal for his Countrymen.

And now, when I look back on the past year—the first as a missionary of your benevolent Society, and the first as a minister of the Gospel—I feel encouraged—and as if God had laid his ordaining hand upon me. How glad I feel to work in the cause of Christ as your missionary! I thank you for all you have done for the Germans. O, my heart is oppressed when I look upon the thousands and thousands of Germans in this State alone, and so few laborers! I look on this subject just as if God had his own purpose in leading so many of every nation, and particularly of Germans, from a dark country to this enlightened and blessed land of freedom. They are rolling to our shores as the waves of the ocean; and why all this? I do not see any other purpose in it, than that they might be supplied with the bread of life; and how can this be done, if not by your Society? I know, it is a difficult work; it is not a work of a year; it is a work of perseverance. It is perhaps hard to reach those whose religious training has but confirmed them in spiritual death, but so much the more they need good men, to lead them in the way of righteousness. I address, in you, the representatives of the American Christians, and I beg you to have an open eye for the thousands of Germans; for now, just now, is the time to work amongst them, or they will fall into the hands of open infidelity or fanaticism. The devil is at work like a lion among the Germans. Paine's Age of Reason is published in German in the East, and finds its way in hundreds of copies to the West; and what will be the consequence of this, if Christians, American Christians, are not on their guard?

ILLINOIS.

From Winnebago Co.

A Tornado—Loss of Life.

The season has been remarkable for the amount of rain that has fallen, and for the tornadoes that have been formed in various parts of the country. One of terrible power passed very near, on the last day of May. It had been showery, with some hail; and the wind very fickle, changing to all points repeatedly; when, at a little past 5 P. M., I was called from my study to look at what appeared to be a very strange movement in the clouds. Instantly obeying the summons, I at once saw that it was a tornado of fearful power; I had never seen any thing so terrible. It was then nearly south of us, and something more than half a mile distant, and its course about E. N. E. Its whirl was tremendous, and its center, from the earth upward, till the dense clouds covered it, was blackened with our black soil. It covered a space in its passage of about thirty rods in width. When first seen, it seemed to be making directly towards the house of a neighbor, and we stood in great fear for the consequences; but when we saw only the roof flying piecemeal, we felt relieved. Its track was a little to the right of the house, and it had almost escaped. From thence, it passed immediately into a grove of young timber, and its effects, from our point of observation, we could no longer see. But its terrible work had been done just before we saw it. It formed on the prairie, about a mile and a half from where we first saw it, and after a course of about one mile, it reached a house built (as is often done here) with stone and coarse sand or gravel, called a cement house. This it leveled with the ground, leaving hardly one stone upon another. Then passing half a mile across a cultivated field (where it filled itself with earth), it struck a framed house which it tore all to pieces, and scattered them as feathers would fly, to a great distance. In the first house, there were three adult persons and a little child, and none of them were materially injured. In the next house were a mother and her two children, with her husband's brother, his wife and their two children. All were badly injured. The mother and one of her children died in about two hours, neither were sensible after they were hurt. The other child died the next morning. The husband and father was away from home at the time, but not far, and returned in season to help convey his senseless wife and children from the scene of ruin. He is a man of fine sensibilities and strong affections, and these were centered in his family. And in a moment, all unexpected, the hand of God hath torn them from him. What a bereavement! How heavily it fell upon him! Especially as he was without the Christian's hope.

That tornado destroyed five houses, and unroofed three others, this side of Rockford, but no lives were lost except those I have mentioned.

A Disorganizer.

This individual was a few years ago a popular lecturer, having the full confidence of many of our churches and ministers. He was then professedly orthodox in his religious belief, and an advocate for the Church and the existing institutions of religion. But from having met with opposition, or from some other cause, he has of late arrayed himself against the Church, the ministry, and the essential doctrines of the Gospel, assuming to be in advance of the age, and a reformer "par excellence." Having a few years ago received ordination by a council, he calls himself a Congregational preacher of the liberal and independent school; and being a man of ready talent and address, he carries influence with him wherever he goes, drawing after him Universalists, Unitarians, Swedenborgians, infidels, and other errorists; and the unwary and unstable of our churches, and all such as have itching ears and a penchant for novelty and excitement. Besides preaching, he now practices Mesmerism and Biology, and consults the "Rapping Spirits" to determine what is duty in a given case. He preaches statedly at different prominent points.

Obstacles still Remaining.

Through the liberality of Eastern Christians, bestowed by your Society, this section of the country is now, to a considerable extent, supplied with an able and faithful ministry. There are still many obstacles in the way of the complete triumph of the Gospel among us, which operate in many places as serious hindrances to the progress of vital religion; some of these obstacles I will mention as the result of my observation.

1. Worldliness in the Church.—While we have some faithful and devoted Christians, who live near to God, and maintain a consistent walk before the world, there are many others who are making such haste to get rich, that they fall into divers temptations, which lead them away from the Savior and to violate their covenant vows and obligations to God, and to the church with which they stand connected. Others suffer the cares and perplexities incident to a settlement in a new country, to destroy their religious zeal and interest, so that they hang as it were, as dead weights upon the cause of religion. In many of our churches, prominent members have gone to California to better their circumstances in the land of gold. But few of these have made out much, while their absence has, in many cases, weakened the hands and discouraged the hearts of their brethren at home.

2. The mixed character of the population in many places operates also as a serious hindrance to the success of the Gospel. Where people are thrown together from different parts of our own country, and the old world, some years must pass away before there can be that assimilation of habits, feelings and modes of operation that is essential to healthy progress, either in temporal or spiritual things.

Then again, 3, The number and diversity of religious teachers that come along in many places, cause the people to have "itching ears," and create a morbid appetite for novelty and idle speculation, and destroy all relish for the plain and soul-humbling truths of the Gospel. This seems to be peculiar to the western country.

Infidelity in Popular Forms.

There is also, much infidelity afloat in the form of cheap and popular publications. Not the open bare-faced infidelity of the Voltaire and Paine schools, but those specious forms of unbelief which are masked by professed regard for the Bible as a good book, and for the Savior as an excellent personage, whose example is worthy of imitation, and whose moral precepts should be obeyed. The writings of the Phrenological school have many admirers at the West even among professed Christians. The more recent publications of this class, with which the country is flooded, are eagerly read by multitudes. Through the past winter, I have had to argue, at great length in some instances, with professing Christians, who by means of the above mentioned influences, had been led to doubt whether the Bible were really an inspired book, every part of it; whether Moses had not made a mistake in his account of the creation; whether man is a totally depraved being; whether divine influence be really necessary to convert the sinner; whether such a thing as a vicarious sacrifice for sin were ever made by Jesus Christ; whether some new revelation is not necessary at the present day; and whether the spiritual rappings, and the writings of Swedenborg, are not worthy of being received; whether there be any other Providence than the operation of natural laws, &c., &c. Some popular work on the infidelity of the day in its more plausible phasis, is greatly needed in this country, if not at the East, to counteract the tendencies of much of the literature that is now extant.

Free thoughts of a Missionary about Support.

While we do not concede that the friends of missions at the East are so much in the dark concerning society in the West, as our correspondent supposes, yet as he has drawn a picture of missionary experience, which, we fear, has too many originals, we place it before our readers that they may the better sympathize with their pioneer brethren, and not only pray for them, but give them that which is needful.

I cannot ask this church to do any more for my support than has been pledged. But we have long since learned to be content with such things as we have. I wonder not that the young man shudders at the thought of entering the ministry and operating as a missionary, who has ever learned that stern necessity, with frozen fingers and icy hand is the cause of the extreme scantiness of the pantry, the wardrobe and the library.

I have been calculating to replenish my library; but my visions have vanished with the dreams of the night, and I shall be forced to catch thoughts from the thunder clouds, and learn theology by scratching an aching head that never was well furnished; but which by being constantly used finds itself minus, even of that old unshapely stuff that used to be better than nothing, before it was entirely worn out.

"The Home Missionary is shaping the destiny of this nation." This is a "big thought" that I learn, from your anniversary items, has been revolved by your great men until they imagine they have had all sides of it before the people. But it is only a "big thought" after all. The theory of the power of steam and the magnetic telegraph were big thoughts; but the people did not appreciate them until they saw and felt them in their practical workings. Just so with the Home Missionary enterprise. In the East you have it in theory; in the West we have it in practice. I well remember when Dr. ——— passed through the West; he looked out upon the country from such stand-points as St. Louis and Alton, &c., and no doubt, went back with the impression that he had seen the West; but the fact is, he did not learn any thing about the West in that way. He did not see the people at their homes. In large cities and along thoroughfares, every thing is fictitious. Each of our communities is a little world of itself; revolving upon its own axis; receiving influences from its own atmosphere, and enjoying its own sunshine. If there is a Home Missionary there, he will leave his mark upon every thing social in the community. The constitution of a "Library Association" is in his handwriting; "The Lyceum" has his name at the head of the roll; the Sabbath school has him for its spiritual guide; the orator of the day on most public occasions is the Home Missionary; he addresses the scholars and parents at the close of school term; in short, his fingerprint is made upon every thing of a social nature there. Every moral question is sustained or overthrown by him. Now if our brethren will come out West, and get right into the heart of one of these little worlds, and feel every throb; and then go from one community to another, away from the thoroughfares and cities, and enter into the circulation of the very fluid of life, until the electric glow is felt in their own souls, then will they know something of the West; then can they not only revolve that "thought" but feel its mightiness, until every fibre of their souls is convulsed, and they exclaim with an energy, felt, fiery, overwhelming, "The missionary is shaping the destiny of this nation."

Now if it be true, that the missionary is fashioning the destiny of this nation, how important it is, that he be furnished with first rate instruments. If the tools are dull and worn out; this one with a broken handle, and that one with a rough edge, and no grindstone to whet it down with, how can he work with efficiency? And still more worthy of censure is it, to send him out to do a greater work than was ever laid upon the shoulders of mortal man before, and give him no instruments at all; require him to make his own tools without the materials even to make them of, and at the same time to raise his own corn, pork, &c., and superintend a thousand other matters that devolve upon him in consequence of the scantiness of his support.

I wish some of our Eastern folks, as they dwell upon that "big thought" that I have spoken of, could just drop into the sanctum of one of our missionaries, and see him sitting by the bedside of his sick wife, where likely he had spent the most of the preceding night. His little babe is in the cradle, which he has to rock every now and then; his cooking and washing are done by himself and some kind neighbor; upon some shelves in one corner of the room are a few old worn-out theological works, which were old when he got them. His paper is arranged, his ink uncorked, and pen ready; the Bible is open before him; but not one train of thought on any subject can be sprung, except such as revert to the condition of his sick wife, who is evidently on the brink of the grave; away from her friends, and the home of her youth. His heart begins to throb, and he turns his face away from the view of his companion, while the scalding tears follow each other down his pale, care-worn cheeks; he finds he cannot study now, and the preparation is put off until at the last of the week, he is obliged to make a hasty preparation, and go before his people fully conscious that he is not furnished for his work. And who are his hearers? Perhaps there is Mr. A., a graduate of an eastern college. Here is Mr. B., an educated physician; Mr. C., an intelligent lawyer—it may be a judge; and there are half a score of intelligent females who have been trained in seminaries of learning at the East.

But enough of this. You will excuse me for this jaunt so far from the natural course of a report. I know that "it is not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of God, that this work is to be done."

From Rev. E. G. Smith, Dover, Bureau Co.

Humility and Thankfulness.

A painful sense of unfitness for this great work, makes me at times shrink from the responsibilities of the sacred office; but having put my hand to the plow, I cannot go back.

But the occasions of gratitude are so numerous, that I scarcely know where to begin. I bless God for granting the long cherished desire of my heart, to preach the Gospel; and it is an occasion of gratitude that he has cast my lot in this goodly land. The sun shines upon no fairer heritage than the West; and no section of it seems more desirable to me than this, "if partial feeling for my native place lead not my lyre astray." I ought to feel thankful for that kind Providence, that directed my steps to this place—visible from my father's house—to a village that has grown up within a few years, on ground that I have seen rescued from the prowling wolf; I had almost said, from the savage.

Revival—Church Erected—Further aid not needed.

During the year, a substantial brick church, which was nearly completed at the commencement of the year, has been finished and furnished, and solemnly dedicated to God. The pulpit has not been destitute a single Sabbath since I came here. I have not been prevented from preaching by ill health a Sabbath during the year. It has indeed been a year of the right hand of the Most High. Fifty have been added to the church during the year; thus doubling our number.

Our Sabbath school and Bible classes, have been at least doubled. A valuable library has been purchased by funds raised at home; some $50 having been raised for that object. The monthly collections for Foreign Missions have been taken up, and these have already amounted to about $40. A Bible society has been formed and a liberal subscription made. The Tract Society's publications have been circulated quite extensively in this vicinity. The subject of Home Missions has been presented, and a subscription made of about $25.

In addition to what has been done already, the church have voted to dispense with the further assistance of the Missionary Society. They hope to be able to support the Gospel unaided. This will require no small exertion and sacrifice, the year having been quite unfavorable to agriculture which is our main dependence.

Still the church do not feel justified in asking further aid. Some of our young men now feel a strong desire to obtain an education. Five have commenced or are about to commence their studies.

Allow me, in behalf of the church, to express our gratitude to your Society, and especially to God, who put it into the hearts of his people to undertake the Home work of the Church. We, as a people, are greatly indebted to the Home Missionary Society—as multitudes of the feeble churches in the land are—for your generous and timely aid.

Before Day.

Evidently, this missionary must wait for daylight to dawn on his field; but let him labor on in confidence, that no more surely does morning succeed midnight, than the blessing of the Master will follow the faithful labor and fervent prayers of his missionary servants.

This is truly a dark region. The church are in a cold, backslidden state. I have established a prayer meeting both at — and —. At the latter place I was told, that the thing was impossible. Not a single church member would give me the least encouragement; but all said it was no use to try. And the result has thus far shown, that it is in vain, except I take the entire burden of the meeting upon myself. I have tried repeatedly, and find it impossible to induce a member of the church to offer a single prayer, except two of the deacons. But I hope for better things in this respect. These meetings are now well attended, especially by the impenitent.

This is a Sabbath breaking community; it is a rendezvous for Sabbath breakers all over the country, for fishing and hunting. They come by wagon loads—sometimes on Saturday afternoon and sometimes on Sabbath mornings—with fishing tackle, rifles and dogs, and of course are joined by all the idlers of the village. They have formed the habit of thus spending the day. There are multitudes here of whom it may literally be said, they never enter the house of God. They would feel as strange and as ill at ease in a church, as can well be imagined. The great question is, how to reach this class. They can neither read nor write; they have no care for any thing beyond the supply of the present moment. They are perfectly reckless; have no fear of death; but meet it as stupidly as the brute, and seem to have no sense of moral obligation. They will not place themselves within reach of Gospel influences. Again I say, how shall they be reached? There are also many New England people, who were accustomed in early life to be regular attendants at the house of God; but here, the Sabbath finds them ranging the prairies for game, with their rifles and hounds. The Sabbath is also the day for social visiting. Individuals and families, spend the day thus. Every one is then at leisure, and is expected to have time to attend to visitors.

The truth is, Christians have a great work to do at home. The enemy has strongly entrenched himself in the very midst of us, and it will require a desperate effort to dislodge him.

INDIANA.

Ministerial Support.

At a time when so much is said about Church Extension, it were well if some efficient steps could be taken to insure more fidelity of the congregations in sustaining the ministry. Hundreds of ministers are struggling under burdens which they ought not to be required to bear. Many of them would be crushed were it not for this Society. Others abandon the service of the Church, and resort to secular employments, to keep their families from privation and ignorance. Is it not to be feared, that the denomination which allows its ministry to be so oppressed with poverty, will gradually run down the attainments and character of its teachers?

My family is increasing, and is now large, so that I cannot live on less than $300. I have talked this over with my brethren in the ministry; but still I cannot feel that it is right. If there were the proper view of this subject, in the churches, it would not long continue. I would teach school if I could endure the additional labor, and if it were right. The New Light minister has his store, and is a trading man; but if I turn aside, even in thought from my great work, devotion dies. I must be wholly given to the ministry. The standard must be raised higher with us, or an uneducated ministry will overrun us. I have seriously thought of changing my location, on the ground that another might be more useful, and have as often been told by my people that it would be ruinous to their interests.

A Western Tabernacle.

My places of preaching, with two exceptions, are very inconvenient, being too small to accommodate the congregations, and liable to occasional interruptions.

On one occasion, upon reaching the place of preaching in an embryo city, I found that for want of a better workshop some carpenters had taken possession of our tabernacle—the school house—and had almost filled it with benches, lumber, &c. It took some time and labor before the benches, work finished and unfinished, and shavings, could be stowed away; and then, as a storm was coming up in the west, my congregation crowded into it, filling it densely. I have thought I should like a picture of our place of worship on that afternoon, hung beside one of those large engravings of the Temple worship; just to illustrate the Savior's language, "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet in Jerusalem, worship the Father." The preacher in his shirt sleeves (for the afternoon was an exceeding warm one, and the crowded state of the room obliged me to throw off all unnecessary clothing,) his pulpit, a pile of chips and shavings, his desk the end of a carpenter's bench; while his congregation, sitting or standing wherever the means or sufficient room permitted—in about as much order or disorder as that arrangement of type the printers call pi—would certainly form a vivid illustration of the truth, that the appliances of costly sacrifices, gold, tapestry and incense, are not necessary to the worship of Him who is a Spirit, who seeks but to be worshipped in spirit and in truth.

Relief through Missionary aid.

I cannot express the feelings I experienced when I received the appointment as your missionary. We had well nigh given up all hope, and I very much feared I should be compelled to relinquish the field. But God has provided, and now I feel encouraged. It will be necessary for me, even with the assistance I receive from the A. H. M. S., to practice the greatest economy and exercise self-denial and patience. I thank God for the timely aid extended.

Rationalism among the Germans.

I preach in German exclusively, unless I fill the appointment of some of the other brethren in town, which has frequently happened. The German population in and about town, say three or four miles from town, numbers about 100 to 150. Soon there will be many more Germans here than there are at present; at least it is so supposed. These Germans are hard to operate on; little can be done for some time to come. Many of them are Rationalistic; and the greater part ridicule practical piety. There are some few exceptions, but they are few indeed. Many of them think nothing of going to church on Sabbath afternoon and then spending the evening in a social way, at a German inn. When spoken to on the subject, they reply, "It is no harm;" Jesus says, "the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath." Hence it is right and lawful to enjoy themselves in this way on the Lord's day. These people have been taught so from early childhood, and it will take a considerable time to correct their opinions and practices in this and other respects. By the blessing of God I trust something will be accomplished. Some time ago, the most of them refused to attend the preached word. They had become offended at some of my sermons, which were too pointed for them. They had been attending German balls for six weeks; one every week. Of course I could do nothing else but speak against all sinful practices, dancing and drinking among the rest. They are beginning to come back again, so that I have about 50 in attendance on the Sabbath.

I hope to be useful among this class of my fellow beings, and to be instrumental in winning some souls to the Lord. Relying on the promise of the Great Master, that he will be with us and assist us, I hope we shall be able to send you gratifying intelligence from this mission.

VIRGINIA.

Preaching to the Colored People.

I think there is a growing, prayerful solicitude on the part of the little church—an increasing spirit of exertion, and a tender sense of unworthiness and dependence, that show the budding of better times. And the increasing seriousness of a number of unconverted people, gives hope that the word is not without effect. Some are expected to unite with us at our approaching communion.

As frequently as possible, I make appointments for the black people, and preach to them. But very few of them feel any interest in ordinary preaching to their masters; but when the appointment is made for them, they come out in good numbers, and form truly interesting audiences. It would do you good to see them come in the afternoon of the Sabbath, on the horses and saddles and buggies which were used by their young masters and mistresses in the morning—a well dressed, orderly, and I might say genteel assembly. And to hear the singing of their mellifluous voices, you would say Jenny Lind has not monopolized all the music. And then their listening attitude and look of honest inquiry and satisfaction, as Gospel truth is simplified and illustrated, would make you feel these are people to preach to. Indeed, some of my most intelligent hearers say, that to hear my best preaching they come to the negro meeting.

From Rev. Robert Gray, Rocky Mount, Franklin Co.

Revival.

I thank the Lord that, of his abundant grace, my heart has been cheered, and my hands strengthened in the work of the Gospel ministry. My health has been very good, and I have been able to discharge the duties devolving upon me, and to see that my labors have not been in vain. To the American Home Missionary Society in part, we feel indebted for the blessings we have enjoyed; and therefore, with more than ordinary feelings of gratitude and pleasure, do I send the following account of a revival in this part of the vineyard.

Our church being completed, except the painting, we commenced a series of meetings in it, on the Friday preceding the third Sabbath in September.

We had two sermons daily, prayer meetings in the morning at the church, and several times, prayer meetings at night at private houses. On Saturday afternoon, it was evident that the Spirit of God was moving the hearts of sinners, and an invitation was given to those who felt any anxiety about their salvation to meet us in an inquiry meeting.

On Sabbath afternoon, stout-hearted men, women advanced in life, and young maidens, came tremblingly, asking what they should do to be saved? Oh what a breaking up of the fountains was seen in that house of God! Christians wept tears of joy, and sinners tears of sympathy, and some of fear and penitence. Aged, hardened sinners felt as they had never been known to feel before; some trembled; all were awed.

With this state of things was the meeting kept up until the Friday after the third Sabbath—Bro. Matthews remaining with me, and doing most of the work. The result has been that eleven, viz.:—three adult males, four adult females, and four young ladies, profess to have found peace in believing, and entertain a hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ. One backslider has been restored, and God's people have been comforted and strengthened. We hope several of the young converts will join our church; and we trust that the Spirit of God will leave none of those who are still feeling the burden of sin.

Grace Victorious.

Before closing, I cannot but give you a brief account of an incident which evinces the strength of sin, and the forbearance and power of the Holy Spirit. On Monday there was in the congregation a man, who in the morning went up to be prayed for; his wife accompanied him. In the afternoon, he would not go to the anxious seat because he was angry with a brother, to whom he had not spoken for several years, and towards whom, on that day, he cherished deep-rooted enmity. He was unwilling to forgive his brother, and knew that with such feelings he could not hope for forgiveness from God. He therefore rebelled, and left the church that afternoon in a rage, determined not to return the next day. But God's Spirit had hold of him, and would not let his conscience rest. He saw his difficulty, felt his danger, and his sin too; and resolved that the next day he would come to the house of God, and make acknowledgments to his brother. After the morning services, through a friend, he proposed to see and speak to his brother. The proposition was accepted, and touching indeed was the scene. Truly, this was the mighty power of God pulling down the strongholds of Satan.

Vol. XXIV.

JANUARY, 1852.

No. 9.

The Hand of God in America.

THERE is perhaps nothing in which the hand of God is so conspicuous towards America, as in the selection of the materials with which to rear the superstructure of religion and government in this new world. God had been preparing these materials nearly three centuries. Wickliff was the father of the Puritans; and from him followed a succession of dauntless advocates for the emancipation of the human mind from the power of despotism. The mighty spirits that rose at the time of the reformation were but the pupils of their predecessors. The principles so boldly proclaimed by Luther, and so logically and judiciously sustained by Calvin, were the principles, matured and more fully developed, of Huss and Jerome—of many a revolving mind in England and on the continent. Puritanism is the reformation reformed. The principles which led to the settlement of New England, and which pervaded her colonies, and became the only principles on which Heaven would smile throughout this wide continent, are but the principles of the reformation matured and advanced. Those extraordinary characters, who, for religion's sake, braved dangers incredible, endured sacrifices that seemed not endurable, and periled all things in these western wilds, were Heaven's chosen agents, to prepare a new and a wider field for the display of what Christianity can do to bless the world. Europe had been sifted, and her finest wheat taken to sow in this American soil. Her hills and dales had been again and again ransacked, to collect the choice few who should found a new state, and plant a new church. The Pilgrims were the best men, selected from the best portion of the best nation on the face of the earth. May we not, then, indulge the delightful hope that God has purposes of yet more moral grandeur to fulfill, in connection with this country?

Indeed, this idea seems to have been coupled with the earliest conceptions in the mind of Columbus, concerning an American continent. That great navigator is said to have been a diligent and devout student of the prophecies, and was actuated, in no small degree, in his adventures westward, "by the hopes he cherished of extending here the kingdom of Christ." And in the mind of his royal patroness, (Isabella of Arragon,) the conversion of the heathen to Christianity, was an object "paramount to all the rest."

It was a signal providence that prepared such materials in the heart of England and in the bosom of the English church, preserved them and proved them in the furnace of affliction, while in their own land, and during their exile in Holland, and in their journeyings on the deep, and finally, collected them on the iron-bound coasts of New England, and formed them into one living temple, fitly joined together, furnished and beautified as a model building for generations yet to come.

The longer the world stands, the more profoundly will be revered the character of our Pilgrim fathers, and the more religiously shall we admire the Divine agency which so controlled events, that one of the first settlements in the new world should be composed of such characters, and should so soon gain a preëminence over all the other colonies, and so soon, too, in all after time, exercise a controlling influence on the destinies of the whole country and of the world; for the institutions of this country, both civil and religious, were cast in the mould of Puritanism. Had any other of the colonies been allowed to stand in this relation to the whole, how different would have been the cast of American liberty and religion! As it was, men of the most unbending integrity and untiring industry; men humble and unobtrusive, yet courageous and immovable at the post of duty; yielding when wrong, yet inflexible when right; plain and frugal, yet intelligent and liberal; men who had been nurtured in the school of persecution, and suffered the loss of all things, that they might breathe the uncontaminated air of freedom; men who hated oppression, abhorred ignorance and vice—who were, in their very souls, republicans and Christians—these were the men, chosen out by Sovereign Wisdom, to control the destinies of the new world. And they have done it. The enterprise and intelligence, the undying love of liberty, the religious spirit—I may say, the population of our Puritan colonies, have spread themselves over the whole continent. And what is worthy of special remark, these only prosper in our country. You look in vain over the wide expanse of our territory to find thrift and prosperity, temporal or spiritual, except under the auspices of a Puritan influence. Who people our wide western domains, and plant there the institutions of learning and religion? Who found our colleges and seminaries, publish our books, teach our youth, sustain our benevolent enterprises, and go to pagan lands to make wretchedness smile, and ignorance speak wisdom? By whose skill and industry rolls the railroad car over the length and breadth of our land, and whiten the ocean with canvas? Who, if not the sons of the Pilgrims, nerved with the spirit of the Pilgrims? Tell me in what proportion, in any section of our country, the people are leavened with the leaven imported in the May Flower, and I can tell you in what proportion they are an enterprising, prosperous, moral and religious people. Time shall expire, before the immeasurable influences of Puritanism on the destinies of our country and the world, shall cease to act.

Massachusetts and Mexico furnish a forcible illustration of our idea. Mexico was colonized just one hundred years before Massachusetts. Her first settlers were the noblest spirits of Spain in her Augustan age; the epoch of Cervantes, Cortes, Pizarro, Columbus, Gonzalvo de Cordova, Cardinal Ximenes, and the great and good Isabella. Massachusetts was settled by the poor Pilgrims of Plymouth, who carried with them nothing but their own hardy virtues and indomitable energy. Mexico, with a rich soil, and adapted to the production of everything which grows out of the earth, and possessing every metal used by man—Massachusetts, with a sterile soil and uncongenial climate, and no single article of transportation but ice and rock. How have these blessings, profusely given by Providence, been improved on the one hand, and obstacles overcome on the other? What is now the respective condition of the two countries? In productive industry, wide-spread diffusion of knowledge, public institutions of every kind, general happiness and continually increasing prosperity; in letters, arts, morals, religion—in everything which makes a people great, there is not in the world, and there never was in the world, such a commonwealth as Massachusetts. And Mexico—what is she?

But who ordered all the circumstances which brought about an event so unexpected, yet so influential, as such a settlement of America? And for what purpose—if not that he might here plant the glory of Lebanon and the excellency of Carmel and Sharon? Here he “prepared room before it, and caused it to take deep root.”—[Read's “Hand of God in History.”]

Home Missions in the West.

WESTERN RESERVE AGENCY, O.

THE exercises of the Sixth Anniversary of the WESTERN RESERVE AGENCY of the American Home Missionary Society were attended in the First Presbyterian Church in Cleveland, Sept. 19, 1851, during the Sessions of the Western Reserve Synod at the same place.

After devotional exercises and the reading of the Annual Statement of the Board, Rev. George E. Pierce, D. D., President of Western Reserve College, preached on Romans i. 16, first clause: “For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.”

The public services of the occasion were then closed with the usual devotional exercises.

Annual Statement.

Within the year now under review, 33 Missionaries have been in commission by recommendation of this Agency. These have all been sustained, and also the expenses of the Agency have been met by funds collected within our bounds; and a balance of some hundreds of dollars has gone to supply the wants of the destitute in other portions of the land, and to Missionaries appointed by the Parent Society.

The whole amount collected on this field, including $67 expended by Portage Presbytery, which did not pass through the hands of the Society, is $3,835.52. This is an increase of $280.17 over the collections during the last year; and of $755.13 over those of any year previous to the last.

The 33 Missionaries sustained by this Agency have had charge of 44 congregations. By preaching, by prayer, by public addresses, by private exhortations, in Sabbath Schools and Bible classes, in the house and by the way, at home and abroad, they have labored for the spiritual good of our feeble churches and the communities in the midst of which they have been situated. These labors have been attended with God's evident blessing. Churches and individual Christians have been in a measure revived, and at least some souls have been, through their influence, made new creatures in Christ Jesus. Much good seed has been sown in a thousand youthful minds, which we may reasonably hope will yet bring forth precious fruit, such as will endure to everlasting life. God's word shall not return unto him void. It has glorified, and will still glorify his name.

The history of the Congregational and Presbyterian Churches on the Western Reserve, shows that nearly all of them have been dependent upon Home Missionary efforts for the enjoyment of Gospel institutions; and that by these efforts they have been greatly blessed. Within that portion of our territory which lies east of the west line of Huron Presbytery, are 184 Congregational and Presbyterian churches. Of these, 78, including several that are now temporarily vacant, are supporting, or are able to support, pastors without missionary aid; although in several instances these pastors receive far less from their people than will suffice for the support of their families. Sixty of these 78 churches have been aided, some of them for many years, by the American Home Missionary Society. Of the remaining 18, six, at least, have received appropriations from the Connecticut Missionary Society, for the support of their pastors or stated supplies. Others have been essentially aided by the Missionaries of that Society, while pursuing the itinerant system so extensively practiced in former years, or, by those of the Assembly's Board; leaving but a very limited number that have attained to their present strength wholly independent of foreign aid.

The money thus expended is not among the things that perish with the using. It is still doing good in the places where it was first expended; it is doing good, and will do good wherever the influence of these churches is, or will be felt throughout the world and to the end of time; and heaven itself will feel its influence in louder songs from more numerous voices throughout eternal ages.

And if we take a wider range and look over our whole land, we shall find more than eight hundred churches that have been thus built up and made strong and independent of foreign aid, within the last 26 years, by the labors of the American Home Missionary Society. They are scattered through the length and breadth of our land, and are among the most efficient churches on which all the great benevolent societies of the present day depend for men and means to carry on their work. And the eyes of more than two thousand other churches which are still in a state of dependence, are now upon this Society, as the only source from which they can hope for that pecuniary aid which they yet need to enable them to enjoy the institutions of the Gospel. For these 26 years God has blessed this institution, and made it a blessing to our land.

And a wide door and effectual is still open before it. Our spreading population never needed its labors more than now. With the tide of emigration setting westward with unexampled rapidity, overspreading the still unsettled parts of Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and Nebraska, extending also far to the south, and even overleaping the Rocky Mountains, and filling Oregon, and California, and Utah, and New Mexico, and Texas, with a hardy and enterprising people—with four or five hundred thousand foreigners annually landing upon our shores to mingle with our people—with the eyes of millions yet in Europe fixed upon our still unoccupied lands, and our mineral treasures, and our free institutions, with strong desires to emigrate and to enjoy the unnumbered blessings of this goodly land—there never was a time when the labors of such a society were more important than they are at the present day, or when the prospects of its usefulness were more bright and cheering.

Intelligence from the Missionaries.

IOWA.

From Rev. A. M. Eastman, Monona, Clayton Co.

We have as yet experienced no showers of divine grace, but I think there is essential advancement. Our school-house, which is large, is often crowded. Last year, one half of the seats would have been sufficient. The Sabbath is more respected. The people seem to think that perhaps it is better to go to meeting than to spend the day in hunting, &c. My appointments have all been attended to here, and I have been able to meet all my engagements abroad but two. I now visit settlements on and north of the upper Iowa River, the farthest point forty miles distant.

Our Sabbath school has not been as prosperous as it would have been could I have been here all the time, yet I think good has been done. We have new books, which have excited new interest. Another season there will be a number of schools sustained on this field.

From Rev. John D. Strong, Iowa City.

Mr. S. was commissioned and sent to this State last summer. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Des Moines, and located at the capital in September last.

The people of the Iowa City church unanimously invited me to remain a year, pledging towards my support more than they have ever before done to sustain their minister. The church is small and poor; the congregation has hitherto been very small, but is increasing, and prospects for the future are quite promising. Much has been done here for the externals of religion, yet little has been attained in spirituality. There are those here now who are looking for a day of reviving; and I need not tell you that some of us are looking for it tearfully.

All the churches here are now without regular pastors and preaching, except the Methodist Episcopal and ours. The cold condition of the churches, and the indifference and unrestrained sin and unbelief of the great mass of the population, fills the mind with distress.

From Rev. G. C. Beaman, Montrose, Lee Co.

Physical Improvements—Pressure of Labor—Helpers Needed.

My field has become so large, my labors so great, and duties so numerous and urgent, that I was compelled to apply to the Presbytery for a division of my church and field of labor, which will take place, Providence permitting, in four weeks. I hope some good brother will take one end of my field by next spring, if not before.

The Slack-water improvement on the Des Moines is now going on; and the improvement of the Rapids between Keokuk and Montrose, by a canal and locks, is already contracted for; both of these works are undertaken by a firm of New York. If these works go on, as I suppose they will, they will increase the labors and importance of my field, and of this whole region, very much.

It is said that there are men—young men—in the ministry, of fair talents, and adapted to do good, who are hovering about the altars of the East, and inquiring for places where they may minister. How can they bear without pangs of conscience these appeals from overburdened laborers at the West, entreating us to send them help? Should the multitudinous emissaries of error overrun those neglected fields, and the people of wide regions, for a whole generation, be led astray and perish, will not the blood of souls be found on the skirts of those who heard the call of the perishing, but heeded it not?

Fluctuating Prospects.

There are not a few who are influenced in their place of attending meeting by a love of novelty; and it has at times too much influence over some of those who are numbered among the people of God.

There is a want of that public spirit which characterizes many communities. There is no business to draw in settlers, and no one moves to set any thing in motion.

We have no emigration that is a help, and a large portion of the unconverted lean in their sympathies to other denominations. I think our members, as a whole, are as exemplary as is usual, and prize the Gospel and its privileges, and are ready to do what they can to sustain the Gospel; but their ability this year is very small. Most, if not all of them, will inevitably fall in debt as they have raised so little to sell. Money is scarce and commands a high rate of interest. There is to be a scarcity of provisions, I fear, and of course they will be high.

I received a letter from the Home Missionary Rooms, a few days since, notifying me of the shipment of a box of clothing to us. It filled our hearts with gratitude and our eyes with tears. It has not yet come to hand. We are hoping to receive it soon. We expect to see hard times this year, and I hope it will lead us to feel our dependence upon God and make us more faithful to him. If, in the midst of this, we may receive a refreshing from on high, it will be well, and we will rejoice in that for which we never pray.

From Rev. D. Knowles.

Welsh Mission at Columbus City.

By the blessing of the Lord I am enabled to report labor for another quarter. I have enjoyed good health, and have had great pleasure in the work of my Divine Master. The churches under my care have enjoyed peace, and the means of grace are attended to more and more. Though we have not been visited with any special outpourings of the Spirit, yet we hope that the good seed of the kingdom is falling into the hearts of many here, to spring up vigorously at some future time. Our public meetings on the Sabbath are well attended. On the 7th inst., I attended at the ordination of brother Pryce, in the Flint Welsh settlement. Brothers Salter, of Burlington; Gaylord, of Danville, and Lewis, of Old Man's Creek, were also there. We had a good meeting. I preached there about six years ago, in the Welsh language; and I believe that to have been the first Welsh sermon ever preached west of the Mississippi. Some, who rejoiced with us there at that time, have gone to their eternal home. It was pleasing to me to see how I was welcomed by the children whom I had baptized five and six years ago, when I went among them last week. I had a word for them all, and a prayer for them. May God enable brother P. to be wise and active. He seems to be a good servant of Christ. O how thankful we Welsh people ought to feel for the fostering care of the American Home Missionary Society. I often tell them so, and I believe that they feel grateful. These settlements are becoming stronger by degrees, and I trust that the time is not far distant, when they will not only sustain their own ministers without your aid, but will, with a willing heart, help to send the preached Gospel to others.

MISSOURI.

A Halper worth Having.

There are some here that ardently desire to see the conversion of sinners. Many an earnest prayer goes up for them. Our prayer meetings are well attended.

The Sabbath school is doing good. We have an excellent superintendent, who has taught Sabbath school in this place for twenty years. He dearly loves the cause; he pays forty five dollars per annum for the support of the Gospel; he has paid this year fifteen dollars to the Home Missionary Society; he gives liberally to the Bible, Tract, and Foreign Missionary cause, and proposes to pay one hundred dollars a year, for two years, to support a colporteur in this county, if a suitable man can be had. He is a man of feeble health; twice this year I have seen him when I thought he was near his end. But he keeps his lamp trimmed, and if his summons should be the midnight call, I think he would be ready.

Is this a higher style of christian character and devotion than is binding on all superintendents and church members? Oh, how would one such man in every parish, hasten the triumph of Zion!

One of our elders, a good man from Tennessee, teaches a Sabbath school, five miles from town, in a neighborhood of Universalists. The school is exerting a good influence; I preach there once a month, to good congregations, that pay fixed attention to the truths of the Gospel. I make no direct attack upon their Universalism, but I preach very plainly the opposite doctrine, at which they take no offence, but say they like to hear me because they can understand what I believe. The truth spoken in kindness seldom gives offence. There is reason to hope that labor there will not be in vain.

From Rev. Henry Grote, Beaufort, Franklin Co.

Mission among the Germans.

Another year having gone by, I am reminded of my duty to write my last quarterly report. The Lord be praised for having guided me with paternal care, and for having blessed me with health and strength for the discharge of my duties.

Several members of my congregation have been established in faith, and have become experienced Christians. They speak of what their hearts believe, and their conduct does honor to their profession. They abstain from every thing not becoming Christians, and, which is a cause of great joy to me, they do not desecrate the Sabbath, nor use spirituous liquors. The means of grace are regularly attended in both congregations. The people assemble regularly at the appointed hour, and I can depend upon finding my hearers at church, except sickness and bad weather intervene. They also take an interest in providing for my subsistence—more so than they have done before.

We have good reasons to believe, that our congregation will shortly be increased in numbers.

Another congregation, consisting of 10 families, requested me some days ago to preach to them as often as practicable. Some of them are not far from the kingdom of God. They have built a fine church, only four miles distant from my house. I gladly accepted the invitation. Still another congregation has requested me to preach, at least every fortnight, but that is at a distance of 15 miles. There is no church, as the settlers have been there only one year. They are, however, true Christians, which renders it the more desirable to grant their request. There are, therefore, four different fields for me to cultivate next year, if God grants life and health. With such prospects, I do not feel at liberty to leave this place, although in the course of the past year, I might have had several places where no assistance from you would have been required. I did not accept those calls, as there are people enough here, and the powers of darkness are not subdued yet. With the divine help, a congregation may be gathered here that will not only provide for the support of the minister, but also contribute liberally to the cause of God. I am well aware that my congregation cannot, for the next year, provide alone for me, but I am confident that it will be done in future.

WISCONSIN.Old Tricks under New Names.

The prospects of my church are more encouraging than they have been, though we have a class of obstacles to contend with, which we have not met before. A few men who claim to be Excelsiors, or men of progress, but who are, in fact, only reiterating the errors of German rationalists, hold meetings in the village on the Sabbath, and have lectures or preaching, but no praying. They began under the garb of scientific lectures. At first, they were fully attended; but now they are held on the Sabbath, and their real character being known, they are less popular, few professors of religion countenancing them by their presence. As a specimen of their teachings, I am informed that a few Sabbaths since, they endeavored to make out that heathen writers gave a more correct view of the divine character, than the Bible does. They deny the inspiration of the Bible, and discard its most important doctrines, as the atonement of Christ, &c. I have no controversy with them, but endeavor sometimes to provide an antidote for their errors, by presenting the proof of the scripture doctrines, which are the opposite of their teachings; e. g., as a corrective of the claimed superiority of the character of God, as taught by heathen sages, over the God of the Bible, I preached a sermon last Sabbath, on the moral character and tendency of heathenism, as shown from the character and conduct of heathen gods, and heathen people, as given by their own authors.

The great injury which I fear from their labors, is the blinding and poisoning the mind of some of our youth. They draw away but few, who were accustomed to attend our church on the Sabbath. Our congregation is larger than it has been for years before; the house is usually full, and sometimes so crowded that we are obliged to place temporary seats in the aisles.

At the last communion, five persons were received into our church by letter, and eight others were examined and propounded for admission on profession of their faith in Christ. The latter are fruits of a revival last winter. It is expected several others will present themselves next communion.

Responsibility felt—Growth in Holiness.

In looking on the past, while there may have been many omissions in duty, and unfaithfulness in effort, I must say, that it has been my earnest desire to preach the whole Gospel in its simplicity, purity and power, and to exemplify the same, in a holy and consistent walk. I trust I do, at times, feel the awful responsibility that rests upon me as an ambassador of Christ; one whose great work is to watch and labor for souls. May I more deeply and constantly realize this responsibility!

My field of labor for the last quarter has been unusually interesting, from the increased interest on the part of the people in the cause of Christ and a preached Gospel. My great effort has been to instruct and establish young Christians in the doctrines of the Bible and in practical godliness. And I have been greatly delighted and encouraged, in view of the evidence afforded of a change of heart, in every instance, from the teachableness of disposition and desire to be conformed to all the requirements of God's word; and this from persons of the highest intelligence and commanding influence in society. Often am I led to wonder and admire the power of the Gospel in its transforming influence upon the hearts and conduct of men—to see those who were once high-minded, proud, self-willed and looking with disdain upon Christians, now sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in their right mind, humbly seeking to know and do the will of their Heavenly Father.

For a time, during the summer, our prayer meetings were thinly attended, but of late have increased in number and interest. There is much to encourage effort in the Sabbath school. Many who once suffered their children to spend the Sabbath in roaming through the woods, or around our beautiful lakes, now bring them regularly to church and to the Sabbath school. And yet there are multitudes among us growing up in sin, careless of God and of the Sabbath.

It is extremely difficult to gather into the Sabbath school those children whose parents disregard the house of God, and profane his holy day.

From Rev. H. Marsh, Sheboygan, Co.

Gathering the Wanderers.

The destitution abroad over the newer regions of the county, are being partially supplied by efforts made during the past three months, and will receive still more attention.

At one place, six miles from the Falls, a beginning has been made, where our denomination has hitherto had no regular appointment. One of the leading men of the place, not a professor of religion, requested me to make a regular appointment at their school house, remarking, that they would give me a full house and some pecuniary aid. I inquired of him what part of the day would suit them best? He answered, "the forenoon; because, if your appointment stands at two P. M., many of our children and youth in the neighborhood, will be scattered abroad hunting; and they will not be likely to return for meeting or for Sabbath school. Whereas, if your appointment is in the forenoon, it will draw them together, and then we can retain them for Sabbath school." I liked the idea much, especially when coming from a man not professing religion.

At another place, eight and a half miles from the Falls, in a remote neighborhood, formerly included in the Sheboygan Falls church, a new church has been formed, under very interesting circumstances, called the Linden Congregational Church, comprising 20 members.

Four years ago last June, the Falls church, six miles from Sheboygan, was colonized and organized with 13 members; in four years it became 80. Now, eight miles farther in the interior, we stick another stake, and pray God to aid us in aggressive movements upon the kingdom of darkness.

Two and a half miles from Linden is the village of Plymouth, where we have commenced regular appointments, with fair prospects. Though the religious influence in that village is yet small, yet the congregation is respectable, and the people intelligent.

Also, three miles from Plymouth, is another small village, where we have commenced our labors in an unfinished mill for a sanctuary, and with a respectable congregation.

Thus you will perceive that four important points have been occupied during the last quarter, with Linden church, of 20 members, in the centre.

Three or four more similar places, yet farther on in this county, need attention; and it is hoped they will receive more or less during the coming quarter, as your missionary shall be able to extend his labors.

Contrasts.

At one end of my field, a young skeptic, or one that formerly was, is apparently on a bed of death, and he has been recently hopefully converted to God. He says he would now rejoice to have the privilege of burning the works of Paine and Voltaire, which he used to read and admire. It was good to converse and pray with such a youth, turned to Christ, and to thank God for his merciful kindness to a skeptic.

At the other end of my field, about 20 miles from this youth, a grey-headed and Bible-despising skeptic committed suicide, making, by his exit, a miserable though truthful illustration of the effect of skepticism; no solid comfort in life, and without any apparent insanity, putting an awful end to his unhappy career. Skepticism in various forms and dress, is rife in the West.

Oh, send us on evangelical and faithful laborers.

From Rev. Hiram Foote, Janesville, Rock Co.

Progress of a Missionary Church—Aid Relinquished.

The pleasant union which has so long existed between us is now to be dissolved. This church and society are now determined to try the experiment of self-support, and, by the blessing of God, I trust they will succeed. Five years of delightful missionary labor you have enabled me to bestow upon this field. Connected with the peculiar emotions of our mutual parting, is the precious reflection that the relation we have sustained has not only been most endearing, but that the seed you have enabled me to scatter, has already sprung up and is now yielding fruit.

A brief review of the past five years might be interesting to us both, and not altogether unprofitable to the friends of Home Missions. A meagre synopsis is all I can now attempt; for incidents crowd upon the memory as I glance at the past—things tending to overwhelm me with humility, and then fill my heart to overflowing with gratitude—and all prompting me to exclaim, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

Janesville, both at home and abroad, upon the chart of the reformer and of the Home Missionary, was formerly set down as a "hard place." Several things conspired to make its moral and religious features what they were. A portion of its early settlers of influence were men "without the fear of God before their eyes." This gave a tone to public sentiment, which became a serious obstacle to planting and sustaining the Gospel here. Five years ago four small and feeble evangelical churches were struggling for an existence. The Universalists had preaching every two weeks, and boasted of outnumbering the evangelical denominations. You can imagine how dark and forbidding this field appeared when I first looked in upon it.

Perhaps I cannot better state some facts connected with the progress of our church and society since I have been with them, than by quoting a few sentences from a discourse I preached to my congregation last Sabbath.

My text was, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped me." I remarked that "the present is a period peculiarly appropriate for us as pastor and church, to set up our 'stone of help,' and inscribe upon it the sentiment of our text. We have just entered our sanctuary since being enlarged and refitted for the worship of Jehovah; and as God prospered us in the beginning of this enterprise, so has his hand been seen every step we have taken, to the present moment.

"Another reason which suggests itself why we should to-day record the goodness of God together, is the fact that this Sabbath completes five years of my ministry among this people. The first two, on alternate Sabbaths; the last three, as settled pastor, on every Sabbath. This period is brief; and yet as my eye passes over this congregation, I see comparatively few countenances which I beheld at our first interviews. So great has been the change, so rapid the immigration, that not thirty individuals who have worshipped with us during the past year were members of my congregation the first year of my labors in Janesville. There are a few before me who can well remember that dark and trying period. This church had then been organized about twenty months. There were then upon the records twenty five members. Five of these had removed to a distance from us, with whom I never became personally acquainted. Thirteen of the remaining twenty lived out of the village from two to seven miles; leaving two male and five female members in town.

"My predecessor in the ministry, after devoting two years of faithful, persevering labor, left in the spring of 1846. During that summer, the congregation was disbanded, and the ordinances of the Gospel were not administered. Those who will remember the tone of public sentiment at that period, can easily imagine that this little church and its minister were ready to exclaim, 'By whom shall Jacob arise?'

"At the first communion season, no individual was received to the church. We have since enjoyed twenty-four communion seasons, at each of which additions have been made to the church. The present number of this church is one hundred and eight. Nine only of those who organized this church are now connected with it. Most have removed to other places; one or two have been summoned to their final account. Ninety-nine members have been added to this church since its organization, eighty-three of them during the last five years. Thus God has gradually, and I trust permanently, prospered us in numbers.

"Five years ago, our house of worship was the small brick school house upon the East side of the river. Our meetings were held in that crowded, uncomfortable place, for about twenty months. We then removed to the Academy, where we worshipped over two years; and from thence to this house of worship, one year since. And during this whole course, we have marked the hand of God. When, as a little and feeble band, three years since, we seriously proposed the erection of a house of worship, it was a very different thing from this commodious sanctuary. In our poverty we only aspired to a very plain chapel, with limited dimensions. With three or four exceptions, not a subscription was obtained from any member of this church which exceeded twenty-five dollars. In our poverty, we commenced and carried forward this enterprise, and to God be all the glory of its success! Now, as a memorial of eternal remembrance and gratitude, let us inscribe upon the door-posts of this our loved sanctuary, 'Hitherto hath the Lord helped us.'"

And now, in my own name and in behalf of my society, I wish first to record the goodness of God, and then to tender our heartfelt thanks to the Home Missionary Society, and to its patrons. But for the sympathy and aid furnished, our society might now be without a sanctuary or the preached Gospel, and perhaps without an existence. This has been Home Mission ground for seven years. During the past five years you have expended six hundred dollars here; with what result, eternity will soon unfold. Our gratitude shall be shown by our prayers and sympathy for your Society, and our systematic contributions, until we repay, many fold, what we have received.

This brief extract contains nothing peculiarly marked, and probably may not seem as interesting to others as to us; and yet it is one of the numerous proofs of the benefits of this Society, and gives evidence that the benefactions and prayers of our patrons have not been bestowed in vain.

Growing Desire for the Pastoral Relation.

Since my last communication, my people have taken the initiatory steps toward my settlement as their pastor. The church and congregation had felt for some time the importance of such a step, and had before proposed the matter to me, but I discouraged it only because we had no house, into which I was not ashamed to invite my brethren in the ministry to come and attend the exercises on such an occasion. My people had clearly demonstrated before them the advantages of a permanent, over a changing ministry. They had been supplied with such preaching as I could afford them, under very trying circumstances, for the last five and a half years; while during the same time, another church here had been supplied by five different preachers. If the great object of your Society is to plant the Gospel, and to build up Zion, you are acting wisely to encourage the pastoral relation. The tree removed every year cannot produce much fruit. How can the minister who is constantly on the wing, feel that deep interest in any place, necessary to produce the best results? Will a tenant feel the same anxiety to embellish and improve the garden or farm, as the proprietor? I feel that we have taken a most important step, and one, I hope, of untold benefit, both to minister and people. I could not refuse their call, made so dear to me by many tender associations, especially since God has seemed by his providence to shut me up to this course.

Another event of importance has occurred since my last. Our school house has been so far completed that we have met in it for worship. It has cost us an extraordinary effort, and will delay the erection of a church edifice for some time, but we have such control over it that we can use the school house without interruption. We shall hereafter be able to worship God under our own vine and fig tree.

I have received five members since my last, four by letter and one on profession of faith. Still, we feel that we are weak, and shall have to look to you for aid. I sometimes feel as if it was wrong for us to live so long on your bounty, when you have such a mighty work to accomplish; but, brethren, if left to our own resources, we must die—all our cherished hopes must perish forever. We love the Home Missionary Society, for, under God, it has made us what we are; and we hope to pay back to you, with interest, what you have lent us. May God give you a thousand fold greater favor with the churches; and so a thousand fold increase your power of doing good.

ILLINOIS.

They that would be Rich.

I have been called to preach two funeral discourses, having a bearing upon California adventures. Both cases, in many respects, were very trying, and excited a very deep and pervading interest in the community.

In the first case, the funeral service had immediate relation to the death of a widow, and a remote relation to the death of her husband, who, on his return from California, was buried in the Gulf of Mexico. The wife, after long suspense and grievous fear that her husband was dead, heard of the fact when two of her children were dangerously ill with the typhus fever. Before these recovered, one other was brought down by the same disease, and soon after she herself, and two other children, while one or two others still had the whooping cough. The widowed mother died, leaving seven orphans. And most, or all these evils, with some pecuniary embarrassment on the remaining inheritance, seem traceable to the ill-advised absence of the husband and father for the year previous, involving excessive care and toil both at home and abroad.

The more recent case was that of a highly respected member of our church, and leader of our choir, who, after a not very successful adventure in California, died at Chagres, within two weeks of home, after an absence of 14 months. A brother was with him, and returned in feeble health. The family of the deceased, though of course deeply afflicted, are left in good circumstances.

Thus, besides the immeasurable evils otherwise pressing upon families whose heads are absent in search of gold, about one-sixth of those who went from our immediate vicinity, are already among the dead, and about eight persons are yet exposed to the dangers of California, and of the return voyage.

Mission to the Destitute in the Illinois Presbytery.

Extract of a Report of Rev. Messrs. E. Jenny and B. Pond.

From the outset, we adopted the following plan of operation, as best calculated, in our view, to accomplish the work assigned us.

1. To explore the entire region of territory within our bounds, and ascertain where the points are, accessible to Presbyterian influence.

2. In all cases, where it is practicable, to hold a series of religious meetings, or form churches, if the material already exists; provided there be reasonable prospect that the anticipated results of such efforts, or the churches thus organized, will be guided and controlled by subsequent ministerial aid.

3. To exclude itinerant missionaries from the field, as soon as possible, by supplying, as far and as fast as it can be done, all the preaching points at which our denomination would be likely to labor successfully; that is, by securing for them the regular ministration of the Gospel, once, if not twice a month.

Acting upon this plan, we were not long in ascertaining much relative to the nature and extent of our destitution. And it is with gratitude we add, that we have been more or less instrumental in providing for them a stated supply, truly encouraging, if not equal to their wants.

Our "commissions" require us to labor within the bounds of this Presbytery, more particularly with those churches that do not enjoy the regular means of grace. And here we have found much to do, enough to tax our time and energies for no inconsiderable portion of the year. But we have frequently gained leisure to preach elsewhere, and improved it, as Providence opened the way; under such circumstances, however, as caused us to doubt whether we have there been the means of much, if any, good. A long experience, extending far beyond the duration of our itinerancy, has taught us that we can accomplish little among those, none of whom are in denominational sympathy with us. We have frequently tried to benefit such communities; but if successful in any marked degree, the evidence of this is yet to be seen.

It has, nevertheless, been our privilege, during the period embraced in this report, to witness displays of the power and grace of God, in elevating the character of Christians, and converting unbelievers from the error of their ways. Thus it was in Carrolton, Mechanicsburgh, Rochester and Shelby county. The number added to the several churches in those places, has been, by transfer, 31, and by profession, 24; making a total accession of 55 persons; while others have been hopefully converted and united with other branches of the Church, and several, it may be six or more, are waiting an opportunity to enter our communion. But we have reason to think that all the good effected, is not expressed by these statistics. If we mistake not, there has been attained, in the communities where we labored, a general impression more favorable to evangelical religion, and to that form of church government which we prefer, than previously existed.

It gives us pleasure also to state, that there are now no destitute churches under our care. A year ago there were six such; all of which, with one exception, enjoy the privilege of listening to the Gospel by preachers of their own order, more or less frequently.

But notwithstanding most of those churches which were so recently destitute of ministerial aid, are now wholly or partially supplied, there is a work yet to be done. We ought to ascertain whether there be not other points where the way is being prepared for us. In our opinion, there are.

Want of Men.

But where are the men to occupy the openings which investigation shall find, or effort create? One of the principles adopted by your missionaries, and which will be acted upon, we presume, by any who shall succeed us, forbids the forming of churches any faster than they can be supplied, wholly or in part, with a preached Gospel. If success, therefore, attends the work here contemplated, who will break to the famishing minds the bread of life? Our great want is men. Until more be introduced upon the field, we shall be cramped in our operations; at least, feel that we must proceed cautiously. "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

We have already, in a previous number, (Sept. 1851,) called attention to the useful and judicious labors of our two missionaries, in the bounds of the Presbytery of Illinois; and to the painful fact which limits the usefulness of these and other similar laborers; viz.: the want of men suited and disposed to go in and occupy the ground prepared by them. Of how little avail it is to fence and clear the field, if there be no laborer to cultivate the soil and sow the seed, but it must be left to bear only briars and noxious weeds—and how much labor and expense are thus almost thrown away—they know too well, who have seen the experiment tried a hundred times, with an almost unvarying result. There must be more ministerial labor provided, or all other efforts at church extension must prove abortive. There are the means of supplying some of this labor if they could only be secured. In all parts of the older portion of the country, there are ministers not employed in preaching; some of them, it is true, from impaired health, but more from discouragement and want of an adequate support. Not a few of them might be rendered available by the Missionary Society, if its resources would justify it in adapting its scale of compensation to their condition.

What shall be done for the Germans?

Almost every day brings to our knowledge facts showing that large portions of our immigrant German population throw off the restraints of Christianity when they arrive on our shores. Unless some means can be devised which shall be blessed of Heaven to the salvation of this class, there will speedily spring up among us a body of anti-christian elements, so compacted, intelligent and efficient as to present a more formidable hindrance to the Gospel than any other with which we have to contend. They who are mindful of the signs of the times, and are wont to spread them before the Lord, should not fail to make these things the subject of thoughtful prayer.

The Sabbath is a holiday among the Germans here, and Americans conform very much to their sinful practices. Recently a German died suddenly on Saturday evening. On the Sabbath, as he was one of the firemen, the whole company, in their red coats, and with martial music, attended his body to the grave, followed by a throng of boys and idle men. The most influential and intelligent Germans among us attend no church. They are good neighbors, fair in their dealings, and gentlemanly in their deportment; but they have adopted rationalistic sentiments. Many of them are at heart infidels, though they do not assume the name. One was asked to buy a Bible. He answered, "I want no Bible; I have the great book of the world. I want to know nothing about Jesus Christ; I have the guide of my own reason." The German church is almost entirely made up of skeptics and loose moralists. Their former pastor, whom I knew, and who gave me some lessons in German, is addicted to excessive drinking, and I believe is at heart an infidel. At this time he has a school and church a few miles in the country. In the reports of their celebration of the 4th of July, I noticed this toast, delivered by Rev. Mr. —, the Lutheran preacher,—“The noble Thomas Paine, whose writings awakened a spirit and courage for liberty!” When a people have been under such infidel-christian preachers, what could be expected better than we now see?

There is now and then a German that attends my preaching. There is now a young man of remarkable intelligence, who has been obliged to leave Germany for his activity in the Revolution, and for making a speech for liberty, which was printed. He attends my preaching and lectures regularly. I took him home and into my study one day, and he seems happy in getting my sympathy. He associates entirely with Americans, and reads only in English, and is making great progress. A merchant, who is a German, has been a frequent hearer of mine ever since I came to the place. He has no family, and associates much with our young men and young ladies. I once was hopeful of him—talked with him on the subject of religion—and loaned him Nelson's "Cause and Cure of Infidelity;" but he seems firm in his denial of the divinity of Christ, and is now going away. My heart almost bleeds when I see such cases. He has been under conviction, but has grieved away the Spirit.

Hindrances.

In consequence of the superabundance of the water, my missionary labors have been rendered fatiguing as well as perilous. No person, unless he has been over the ground—and through it I may almost say—can have any adequate idea of what a man must endure who has had to travel even short distances during this rainy period. Frequently have I been to my saddle girths in mud and water, and, in crossing streams, nearly to my horse's back. The sloughs, as the people say here, "have lost their bottom." On one occasion, when crossing a small stream swollen by the heavy rain, so as to flow over the road and wash away the bridge—which by reason of the turbid waters I did not discover—my horse went down, but fortunately came up safe, and then after him myself and buggy. In attempting to raise the buggy, my horse's harness gave way. I had to get out, and worked in the water for near an hour before I could extricate my carriage, and then had to ride some time in my wet clothes.

At another time, in attempting to cross a rocky ford at twilight, I came near being swept away by the rapid and deep waters—horse, buggy and all. But hitherto the Lord hath preserved and delivered me, not only from the deep waters, but from those who rose up against me. "Many bulls have compassed me, strong bulls of Bashan have beset me around. They gaped upon me with their mouths as a ravening and roaring lion."

Home Missionary Efforts cannot be Relaxed.

This village has nearly 2,800 inhabitants, of which about one-third are Romanists. They have a fine stone church and a priest; and, it is said, some nuns are soon to come here to take charge of their educational interests. As a people, they are more completely under the surveillance and control of the priesthood than any other Catholic community with which I am acquainted. Infidelity is exceedingly rife in the form of popular error, such as Universalism and Unitarianism. A multitude of the people have no belief, and stand aloof from all the forms of religion. In tracing out the cause of such a state of things, it is very apparent that it has come from the pressing of radical ultra measures to accomplish reforms. Some years ago the church, then numbering more than forty, was prevailed upon by an itinerant evangelist to disband, and such as chose to form a Union church, without a creed, throwing the door wide open for all religionists to come in. Time would fail to detail the bad results. Those who have affinity enough to remain together, are now feasting their souls on the reveries of Unitarianism and Swedenborgianism, as they are compounded and held forth from Sabbath to Sabbath by the veriest mountebank preacher. A few years since, some who would not go for the Union measures, and some who were drawn in ignorantly, united and formed the present church. They have had the very worst influences to contend with, but have maintained their ground. I found them disheartened, weak, and ready to die. The congregation had run down, the Sabbath school was very small, the prayer meeting little less than a name. Our congregation has gradually increased until our place of worship is wholly inadequate to our wants; the Sabbath school is greatly enlarged, and new scholars coming in every Sabbath. Men and women, and whole families, who have not been seen in the church for years, are becoming quite constant attendants. Five or six will unite with us next communion, three of them by profession, one a very interesting young man, and promising for usefulness, the other two, mothers of young families.

OHIO.

The Preacher, an Agent of Improvement.

There has been great improvement in the religious observance of the Sabbath and in the cause of Temperance. This cause is decidedly popular in this Village. There is now only one place where ardent spirits are retailed, and this is done contrary to law.

During the past winter, I distributed the Bible in four townships and supplied the destitute; and by the assistance of our people and the Agents of A. B. Society, this county and that part of the adjoining county in which I have been laboring, have been supplied. There has been great improvement in our S. schools. The most remarkable change, however, has been in the regularity, interest and attendance upon public worship. When I came here, our congregations were often small; now they are usually good—often the houses are full and sometimes crowded. I have organized two churches. One place has been decidedly infidel; but infidelity now is evidently losing ground. During the first fall that I preached there, I often had only from twelve to twenty persons present; now the regular congregation is not far from two hundred. The school-house is well filled. The change has been similar in all of the other places. Though we have not yet been made to rejoice in gathering in the fruits of our efforts, yet we hope that our labors have not been entirely in vain. I have been endeavoring to cultivate the ground and to sow the seed; and trust that in time, with the rich blessing of God, we shall be able to gather in a rich harvest.

One Hundred Ministers wanted in South-Eastern Ohio.

The seven counties of the Marietta Agency contain a population of almost two hundred thousand, with only sixteen or seventeen ministers of the Calvinistic order. The face of the country is rough and forbidding in its aspect, and does not present so pleasant a prospect for the agriculturalist as the greater portion of this great state; hence it has not been settled so rapidly as other portions of the state. Emigrants and ministers have considered this a hard field, and have gone on to other more inviting fields. But the time has already come, when the tide of emigration has begun to roll in more rapidly here. The great mineral resources of this territory are just beginning to be appreciated and developed; and when the contemplated railroad from Cincinnati to Marietta shall be completed, and facilities for transporting the vast quantities of coal, iron, and salt, that abound in all this region, we may expect to see the population that now exists on this field, soon doubled and trebled, if not quadrupled. A great question fills our hearts with deep solicitude; shall this region, with its teeming thousands, be given to God and the Saviour, or shall the Devil reign transcendent here? Unless more ministers can be employed on this field, we fear that wickedness will long reign here. We absolutely need on the field of the Marietta Agency, this day, one hundred ministers of the Gospel, and this number would not be a full supply. And now is the time for them to be planted on this field. If they are not sent to sow the good seed, the enemy will sow tares there, and thousands on thousands of souls will perish. You ask, are the people willing to aid in support of ministers? I do not suppose that they will do much till the Gospel is carried to them freely awhile. They will thus soon begin to appreciate its privileges, and will open their hearts and their purses to obtain and enjoy them. I could cite you to several instances of churches raised up in this way on this field; and the same thing that has been done in a few places, might be done in a multitude of others. My heart is often deeply pained in looking over the destitutions of this field, and my mind is often greatly agitated in efforts to contrive some possible plan by which the Gospel may be carried to these perishing thousands. Our Methodist brethren are doing a great work here, but they can't reach half the people.

Hard Soil.

I have continued my labors in my regular congregations, preaching generally three times on the Sabbath, together with occasional labors in other places, as opportunity offers. I should be glad to preach much more in the week time, in destitute neighborhoods, could I get the people to attend; but this, on ordinary occasions, is next to impossible. I have frequently made the trial in surrounding settlements, but after riding ten or twelve miles, have found little else than empty seats, my congregations being not more than six persons, counting children with the rest. In any of those places on the Sabbath, I could get a good collection of people; but on the Sabbath, my hands are full of labor in my regular congregations. If there is a funeral, there is a general turn out; and people who neither "fear God nor regard men," must have a funeral sermon at the interment of their friends. I have never declined attending on such occasions, if I was able to be up, unless some important appointment demanded my attention, at the same time, in another direction; and as there is no other regular minister within 16 or 20 miles, in any direction, I perform considerable of this kind of labor. Last winter I was called into a very wicked settlement to preach at the funeral of a woman whose husband has been once tried for murder, been one term in the state prison, and since then he has been sent again to the same place. I preached from Gal. vi. 7, 8, and tried to set before the unhappy man and his thoughtless neighbors the certain connection between our present conduct and future condition. I had a large congregation, many of whom, perhaps, had not heard a sermon for several years. This spring I was called into another settlement, 8 miles distant, that has been renowned for being a nursery of crime, and for furnishing a large portion of candidates for the penitentiary. There, too, I had a large turn out, and was permitted to point my fellow men to the judgment to come. On such occasions I have nothing to do with the dead, but try to bring the truth to bear on the consciences of the living.

Weakness and Dependence.

With your aid this church keeps the fire still burning on the altar, while without it, probably, it would have been extinguished ere this. I had hoped the church would soon sustain their pastor, independent of foreign aid; but without a revival of God's work, and the conversion of souls, we must continue to rely on our former sources of dependence.

One reason of feeling our weakness more sensibly, is the loss of both of our deacons, and the difficulty of supplying their places. One of them left before I came here, and the other recently took a letter to another church, because of his living in its neighborhood.

With some difficulty we succeeded, two weeks ago, in electing two persons to fill their places.

A very encouraging feature, that shows increasing strength, is an increased willingness to contribute to the Home Missionary cause. This cause lies deepest in the affections of this people. I preached a missionary sermon, and we circulated a subscription list, the signers mostly pledging themselves to pay their sums monthly for the following year. The amount pledged at present is $30.

Our Sabbath school continues in good circumstances, but would be more full if we were better supplied with competent teachers. The superintendence devolves on myself. Yesterday we were called to mourn the death of a boy, an interesting member of the school. He gave no special evidence of a change of heart, though he loved the Sabbath school; and in his derangement, which was for three days previous to his death, he often spoke of his superintendent; and also, in the school, answered questions as his teacher thought none but a Christian could answer. His death is the first in our congregation during the past year, and the members of the school seemed to feel it a solemn and severe bereavement.

Revival.

Since March, 1851, the date of my commission, the church of Johnstown has passed through a variety of scenes, some joyful, and some painful, indeed. Towards the close of the year, the session commenced discipline with some who were causing reproach. The last of February a revival of religion commenced. During the first week of March, in the midst of the revival, it pleased the Lord to take away one of our elders, who was a pillar in the church. At our communion, in April, fourteen, as fruits of the revival, united with the church by profession, and one who had before been a member of the Methodist Church. It was an interesting season, when five of the number came forward to receive the ordinance of baptism, and then, with the others, sit down with our little church, at the table of the Lord. A few others are indulging hope, who may yet unite with the church.

Miscellaneous.

Death of Rev. W. T. Wheeler.

This beloved missionary, after an illness of six weeks, finished his earthly labors at Union Grove, Illinois, October 17, 1851. For just a year he had preached regularly at Union Grove, Round Grove, Como and Garden Plains. Increasing interest and usefulness attended his labors; and only a few weeks before his decease, he had gathered another church at Clyde. It was expected that, ere long, he would be installed as the pastor of the church at Union Grove; and had he lived to carry out the enterprises which it was in his heart to prosecute, doubtless great good to religion and to christian education would have been the result.

In the former part of his ministry, Mr. Wheeler was a missionary to Africa, from whence he was compelled to retire by the uncongeniality of the climate with his constitution. After his return, and before settling in the field of his last labors, he had preached in the service of this Society in Indiana and Minnesota. It is sad to think of the four little churches which he was cherishing, as a nurse cherisheth her children, now left destitute and discouraged.

Our correspondent who communicates the intelligence of this bereavement says: "Brother Wheeler told me that he was too poor to buy a horse, and that to meet his appointments, 20 miles apart, he was sometimes obliged to travel on foot, and to wade through sloughs that were full of water during this very wet season. By his death I shall be put in possession of the horse which I had loaned him for a year; and if, as I trust, he has found a seat in Elijah's chariot, he will no longer need such poor facilities for travelling as I could furnish."

Mr. Wheeler is the second missionary in northern Illinois, (the first being Rev. James Hildreth) removed by death during the last season; and two others, not missionaries, have also died on the same field. Let us who remain watch, with girded loins, for our own summons, which cometh in such an hour as we think not.

Dangerous Elements of American Society.

Numerous and alien to our institutions as is the emigration of Irish Catholics, it is by no means the most dangerous portion of our immigrant population. We are receiving hundreds of thousands yearly from Germany, who are what are called in Europe, Red Republicans, or Communists, or Socialists; i. e., the enemies of all society. They are such people as have been reared under German Rationalism—the degenerate plants of a strange vine. And a prominent purpose of their immigration hither is, not to enjoy the advantages of our free institutions, but to destroy them; or, in other words, to take advantage of the freedom of this country, to apply their destructive principles, as they could not in despotic countries. Already in some of the cities, where Germans most abound, as in New York, and in St. Louis, they are forming political organizations, to carry these principles to the polls. In St. Louis, they have directed their attacks more especially against the Sabbath—combining, by military parades, and other disturbing expedients, to prevent the Sabbath worship of the Christian part of the people. In short, the principles and spirit of these new comers, are of the worst possible type. And as far as their influence shall extend, it will be disastrous. In one view, it is a matter of rejoicing, that but few of them can speak our language. For this confines their influence mostly to the Germans. But in another view, it is one of the most discouraging aspects of the case. For it prevents our bringing the light and power of the Gospel to bear upon them, as we otherwise might, and as the occasion demands. Our means for evangelizing Germans are very limited; but we must make the most of what we have; and pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into this harvest.—[Exchange Paper.]

Twelve Questions for Ministers of Christian Churches.

1. Why did I become a minister?—Was it vanity, ease, respectability, or the persuasion of mistaken friends? or was it love to Christ, the glory of God, and the salvation of souls, that induced me to step into the sacred office?

2. What evidence have I that I am called of God to the work of the ministry? Am I adapted for it? Have I the scriptural qualifications? Have I ever been the means of the conversion of one soul? Did God call me in his providence, or did I run uncalled?

3. What am I doing in this field?—Am I a witness for God? Do I bear testimony to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth? Is my testimony plain, earnest, faithful? Am I a laborer in God's vineyard, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth? Am I acting as a lord, or as a servant?

4. What are my views of the pastorate? Do I feel I am my own master, or God's servant, appointed by him to watch for souls? Do I feed the flock, or amuse them? Do I direct their attention to my Master, or to myself? Do I point them to heaven, or to the trifles of time?—Who is my master?—the church, the congregation, the world, or Jehovah?—What says my conduct? O, my soul, be honest! Do I feed, comfort, and watch over the sheep? Do I feel the responsibility of my charge?

5. Do I visit the people of my charge as I ought? It is true some people have strange notions about a minister's visiting, which have no foundation in Scripture, and the impropriety of which a little reflection would convince them of; but still, do I do my duty in this department? What is the character of my visits? Do I visit the sick, the wanderer, the backslider, and those who are out of the way? Do I visit as a pastor, to speak of and for Christ, or as a trifler, who has too much time on hand—time to “crack a joke,” to be “frolicsome,” to hear and retail the gossip of the day?

6. Do I love the people of my charge as I ought? Have I love enough for them to bear, forbear, and forgive? Do I feel resentment or compassion, when any of them do wrong? Do I despise them, or love them? Do I help to bear their burdens, or do I increase them? Do I rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep? Is the whole of my conduct kind, forbearing, and loving?

7. Do I pray for my charge as I ought?—not only in the sanctuary and the prayer meeting, but in the closet? Do I bear them before the Lord in private, frequently, earnestly, constantly, and in faith? Do I plead with God for the weak, that they might be strengthened; for the tempted, that they might be kept; for the tried, that they might be supported; for the mourners, that they might be comforted; for inquirers and the unconverted?

8. What is the character of my preaching? Is it the Gospel of Christ I preach? Do I preach it with energy, earnestness, and unction; or with coldness, weakness, and carelessness? Is it God's truth, or my own notions about it, that I preach? Will the truths I preach do to die by?—Do I preach plainly, clearly, so that all can understand me? Do I preach to the people, or at them; over their heads, or, through the understanding, to the heart?

9. Where do I get the food for the flock? Is it from the green pastures of the Word of God, or from other sources? How do I study the Bible? Are my head and heart in it at all times? Do I study it to make out the mind of God, or merely to find a text to hang a subject upon? As I pore over its sacred pages, do I sufficiently feel my dependence upon God, and look up for the Spirit's assistance, that I may bring out of this heavenly treasury things new and old? Do I study for God's glory, or my own?

10. Am I living a holy life, such as becomes a minister of Christ? Do I indulge in any “little” known or secret sin? Am I laboring to mend my own heart, as well as those of my hearers? Am I a pattern of good works to believers?—(Tit. ii. 7, 8.) Am I known by my savor as well as my service?

11. Do I live under the impression that I am accountable for time, talents, and opportunities of usefulness? How much time have I squandered? How have my talents been employed? How many opportunities of usefulness have I lost?

12. Am I prepared to die? Should my Master at once summon me into the eternal world, are my accounts correct—is my work done—is my soul prepared? How many souls will welcome me to glory, should I be permitted to enter, as the fruit of my ministry? R. F.

Misapprehension Corrected.

A writer over the signature of “PLANES,” in the Christian Observer of Nov. 22, 1851, has some animadversions on the American Home Missionary Society, in which there is an evident misapprehension of the principles of the institution, and its relations to coöperating ecclesiastical bodies.

The case which forms the occasion of the strictures alluded to, is this The Society has had a missionary of acknowledged ability, worth, and acceptableness, preaching, for a year past, at St. Anthony's Falls, in Minnesota. Before his arrival, but after his coming was expected, a portion of his hearers were organized into a Presbyterian church. A month after he commenced his labors, two ministers in the Territory and one in Illinois, were constituted the Minnesota Presbytery, and took the church at St. Anthony under their care. The missionary having declined to unite with the Presbytery, they decided that he could not be the minister of that church, declared it to be “without a supply,” and appointed a committee “to procure a supply as soon as possible, and request the American Home Missionary Society to assume his support for one year;” i. e., to sustain two where only one was needed, or to withdraw the former missionary. A correspondence relating to this case occurred, in which the general principles of the Society were alluded to by the Secretary. With those principles PLANES takes issue in the following communication, which we re-print, and make the subject of some remarks, not because of the intrinsic importance of the case alluded to, but of the principle involved; which we regard as fundamental to the existence of the Society, and which should be, if it is not, understood by all its patrons, and by all who coöperate with it in the missionary cause.

The quotations made from the letter of the Secretary are not entirely exact. In re-printing, we have supplied omissions and made corrections in brackets. These, though not essential, are not wholly destitute of importance, as containing qualifying expressions. It should also be remarked, that the statement of the article, that the church at St. Anthony "had been without preaching several months," can be true only in some technical, ecclesiastical sense; for we are quite sure that the same congregation, including the members of the church, and meeting in the same place, were regularly supplied with preaching by the same missionary, without interruption.

The Presbytery, at their last meeting, having always understood from the publications of the American Home Missionary Society, that the opinion of an ecclesiastical body was always the highest authority known to the executive committee, invited a minister to become stated supply of the church at St. Anthony, which had been without preaching for several months, the missionary on the ground having announced his unwillingness to be considered the Presbyterian minister.

Since the appointment, a member of the Presbytery has received a letter from one of the Secretaries, which shows conclusively that the tendency of the Society is to sustain a missionary, where there is a Presbyterian Church, to whom he will not be a pastor, in the way they desire.

The Secretary says, speaking of the Executive Committee, "that it would be unprecedented for them, after having selected a missionary for a given field, and sent him out and sustained him one year at large expense, to recall or abandon him without good and sufficient reasons, and whether those reasons exist in ———'s case it will be for them to judge; and it would be equally unprecedented for them to sustain, for any reasons, two missionaries at such an expense, on such a field.

It is also in accordance with the policy and usages of the Society, in prosecuting missions in new settlements, where the support of a missionary is to come [wholly] from the Society [and especially where that support is much greater than the average, to examine carefully into the importance, and necessities, and claims of a given field], to inquire into the importance, plans, and necessities of a given field, and the qualifications and promise of the man who may occupy it, before he goes to the ground and commences his labors."

The intimation is here given, that the Executive Committee may sustain the Congregational Home Missionary at St.

Anthony, and desert the Presbyterian church there, because that church are unwilling to have him as their pastor, because he expressed his unwillingness to join the only ecclesiastical body in the territory. It is here also implied, that the Executive Committee hold the right to sit in judgment upon, and annul the decisions of a Presbytery. Again it is asserted to be the usage of the Society to require a knowledge of the qualifications of a missionary, that a Presbytery may appoint, before they sustain him.

Now, Mr. Editor, it does seem to me that the American Home Missionary Society have no such rights as they claim. It is very true, that if the Presbyteries or Associations have not selected men, that it is proper for the Society to search out missionaries, and become acquainted with their qualifications, before they give them a commission.

But I doubt exceedingly whether the Presbyteries and Associations of the United States meant that that Society should ever refuse to commission men for fields within the bounds of a Presbytery, with whose qualifications that Presbytery was satisfied.

The Presbytery of Minnesota feel that they know better what is suited to advance their interests, than the Executive Committee of the American Home Missionary Society. They feel that their acts are subject to review by the Synod to which they are attached. If, however, the Executive Committee of a voluntary association are to refuse to appoint our men, and virtually annul our decisions, we have no ecclesiastical liberty—we are the trembling servants of an oligarchy in New York City.

It is time, high time, for the prosperity of the Constitutional Presbyterian Church that they should clearly understand their relations to the A. H. M. S.; a society which, notwithstanding its imperfections, has done a great and a noble work, and been under the charge of wise and judicious Secretaries.

PLANES.

It will be seen by a perusal of this article, that the writer creates an issue between the Presbytery of Minnesota and the American Home Missionary Society, in which he adjudges the Society to be in the wrong, in the following particulars. The Society claims the right, when aid is solicited for a given field, to inquire into its necessities, claims and importance. PLANES thinks they have no such right; but the opinion of a Presbytery on these points should be binding on the Society. Again, as to missionaries, the Society exercises the right of judging of the missionary qualifications of the men whom it supports, to occupy the particular posts to which they are appointed. PLANES denies this, and takes the ground, that if the Presbyteries are satisfied, the Society has no power to refuse assistance.

Here, then, we fairly meet the question of ecclesiastical control over voluntary funds. The issue is made, whether the courtesy due from the Society to the ecclesiastical bodies with which it coöperates, deprives it of the right to differ from them when it sees reason to do so;—whether the expediency of occupying a particular station, the suitableness of a given minister for a specific service, and the propriety of granting a given amount of its own funds are matters of which the Society has a right to judge; or whether it is bound to follow the decisions of the ecclesiastical bodies on these subjects.

The American Home Missionary Society is a voluntary association, composed, not of denominations as such, nor of their ecclesiastical representatives; but of individuals, who contribute to its funds. These contributors are the constituency from whom is derived the power to administer its affairs; the constitution was adopted by them; they choose the officers; and to them alone are the officers accountable for the measures pursued in fulfilling their trust. There is therefore no pertinency in the doubt of PLANES, "whether the Presbyteries and Associations of the United States meant that the Society should ever refuse to commission men, &c." These ecclesiastical bodies did not originate the Society, had nothing to do in defining its powers, and have no claim to control its action any farther than the Society itself may have sought their kind offices in the way of information and advice. The funds of the society are a sacred trust, which the Executive Committee are bound to administer under the rules of the institution. When a donor deposits his gift in the treasury, he passes over his right of control to the Committee; he expects them to exercise that control; and they cannot rid themselves of the responsibility of doing so; nor can they delegate that right to any other committee, or agency, except under such stipulations and guards, as shall effectually provide that the money shall be applied ac-ording to the principles and usages of the Society.

While the Society is thus, from the very nature of its organization, the arbiter of its own action, it has ever felt that it had a great and benevolent mission to perform, for the sake of which its bearing towards the churches should be deferential and accommodating. Accordingly, in seeking access to the subjects of its kindly aid, it has not put on airs of sovereignty, nor tried to make individuals or communities feel their dependence on its bounty. It has sought to inspire confidence and coöperation, not to raise the question of "who shall be greatest" between itself and other associated bodies. It has gone forth throughout the length and breadth of this land, in the spirit of a liberal and large hearted benefactor; desiring to be recognized, as a friend. It has acted on the principle, that mutual good-feeling is an essential element in all efficient voluntary coöperation; and therefore it has been slow to speak about its "rights"—has exercised a generous liberality towards ecclesiastical bodies, offering them every facility of access to the privileges of the Society, consistent with its own indefeasible obligations. Perhaps this very liberality, this absence of a formal assertion of its prerogatives, may have led insensibly to such impressions as those of PLANES, and caused the idea to grow up, that the Society is, somehow, the creature of Presbyteries and Associations, and is not competent to have a judgment of its own on cases of which they may have expressed an opinion. But though the Institution has thus sought to be recognized, like the atmosphere, by its vital power rather than by its pressure, it has its laws—its definite principles and modes of procedure; and these principles have never been compromised in the whole history of its operations. No Board of Agency or ecclesiastical body has ever had any control over the appointments and expenditures, except that which was specifically provided for by written terms of agreement. When, therefore, PLANES, or any other writer, dissatisfied with the share of influence and of bounty, which the usages of the Society concedes to him, raises the question of prerogative, and complains of the Executive Committee, as transcending their own rights and impinging on those of others, we call for the record; show us the terms of the compact. The right of control over its own appointments and funds is originally in the Society; nothing can be plainer than this. Now, wherein has it ever lost that right? In what document, and to what extent, has it put its appropriations and expenditures under the control of ecclesiastical bodies? We will answer that question.

PLANES refers to the "publications of the Society." Here is the article, published from year to year in the Annual Reports, and found in that for 1851 on page 99, under the head of "Relation of Auxiliary Societies, Agencies and Committees of Missions, to the American Home Missionary Society."

The American Home Missionary Society has ever regarded the Ecclesiastical bodies as the appropriate judges of the standing of their own ministers, and of the wants of the churches in their connection. Accordingly, the commission issued to every missionary requires that his credentials be acceptable to that ministerial body of his denomination, within whose bounds he is appointed to labor. And the various Presbyteries, Associations, &c., are invited to appoint, each, a Committee of Missions from its own members to receive applications from its churches, and suggest to the Society the action proper in each case. Such a Committee constitutes the official source to which reference can be had for information and advice, in all matters pertaining to missions in the connection to which it belongs.—This mode of coöperation has been preferred by numerous ecclesiastical bodies, from the first formation of the Society. It guaranties to the churches of each denomination represented in the Society, that their respective claims shall be fairly considered, with all the advantage of having the endorsement of the body to which they belong. The advice of such a Committee, acting in the name and by the direction of the ecclesiastical body to which they belong, is regarded as the highest authority in matters pertaining to the standing of ministers and churches in their connection, and has the same influence with the Society, as that of a Board of Agency appointed by itself.

These are the general terms of coöperation between the Society and ecclesiastical bodies whose destitutions it has sought to supply. And what is the amount of influence here ascribed to the action of those bodies? Only this: 1. They are recognized as judges of the ministerial standing of their own members. "Standing" is an ecclesiastical affair; it is made or destroyed by votes of ecclesiastical bodies; and in the extract above quoted, it is guarantied that the standing of a minister or a church shall be determined by their own appropriate ecclesiastical body in whose bounds they may be.

But missionary qualifications—the suitability of talent, age, health, &c., for filling a particular post—is a different thing from ecclesiastical standing. A man may be in unimpeachable standing, and yet he may not be the man for a given church. And men are no more fitted to give advice as to qualifications, when assembled in an ecclesiastical capacity, than when not thus assembled; or than others may be. Acquaintance with the case, experience in missionary business, and often specific inquiry and examination, are needful to settle this question. The Society, therefore, not only may, but is bound to get the testimony it requires from all quarters, ecclesiastical and otherwise.

Accordingly, in the above-mentioned terms, it invites the opinions of ecclesiastical bodies—applications, suggestions, information, endorsement, &c.—but it nowhere invites decisions. It guaranties that this preliminary counsel shall "be fairly considered," but it does not pledge that it shall be implicitly followed. The advice of such an ecclesiastical committee is regarded as "the highest authority appertaining"—not to the duty of appointing, or the amount of salary—but to "the standing of ministers and churches in their connection." It has "the same influence as the Boards of Agency appointed by the Society itself," and that is only the influence of information and recommendation, which may be overruled by more perfect knowledge of facts, the better judgment or the general rules of the Executive Committee. But 2. The Ecclesiastical Committees are recognized as judges of the wants of their churches. But this does not concede to them the right to decide whether they shall be aided in preference to other cases, or to how great extent. They may judge rightly that a given church needs $500, and the Society may know that another church is in equal need of $200; and if it have not enough for both, it must refuse one, or make a division of aid according to its own judgment, formed by knowledge of the case, and experience of other similar cases.

Admit for a moment, that the decision of an ecclesiastical body may bind the Home Missionary Society to a given appointment and pledge of funds, and its treasury is at once placed at the mercy of many different committees, each interested especially for its own vicinity, and probably quite unprepared to judge how much its claims should be modified by those of other sections. There could be no efficient system for properly distributing the benefits of the Society; its aid would be accumulated in undue proportions upon those sections where the committees were most active; and no uniform principles of appropriation could be pursued. In short, the missionary work would be an aggregate of disjointed and heterogeneous operations, instead of a harmonious system, at once consistent and comprehensive in its scope and exact in its details. Again, many of the ecclesiastical bodies in the new States are made up largely, and some of them wholly, of missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society, or of ministers of feeble churches liable to require aid. It is no uncommon thing for these to be members of the Missionary Committees in their respective Presbyteries and Associations; and thus may become judges in their own, and each other's cases—virtually called upon to say how much they themselves shall receive from the Society. An illustration is furnished by this very Presbytery of Minnesota, which has but three ministerial members, only two of them resident in the Territory, and both are missionaries of this Society. And it is with reference to their action, that the high ground is taken by PLAMES, that their decision is to bind the Home Missionary Society, to pay money on their appointment without the exercise of any discretion of its own. Now, although we should be slow to believe that good men, thus situated, would intentionally be partial to themselves and to cases nearly connected with them, yet only a slight knowledge of human nature is requisite to see that the sense of their own necessities might insensibly affect their judgment. At least, any benevolent institution which should have no stricter principles of disbursement than thus to admit the recipients of its means to help themselves, ad libitum, could not retain the public confidence, nor long have any resources to distribute.

What the writer says—when he charges the American Home Missionary Society with invading the “ecclesiastical liberty” of the Presbytery, because it does not assume the expense of supporting whomever the Presbytery may appoint—reminds us of the demagogue who, on being pressed for his definition of liberty, replied, “My liberty consists in making you do as I please.” Does the “ecclesiastical liberty” of the Minnesota Presbytery include the right to make any engagements it may please, and oblige the Society to foot the bills—and no questions asked?—to put their hands into the treasury when and as deep as they may think proper? May they overrule all general principles, and the results of experience for many years, embodied in the rules of the Society, and substitute therefor simply their own fiat? If this be liberty, it is all on one side. If this be ecclesiastical liberty, what becomes of the civil liberty of the Society, to do what it will with its own?

Finally, we submit it to the sober second thought of PLAMES himself, whether it is exactly grateful or gentlemanly in him to speak as he does of the Executive Committee of the American Home Missionary Society; and to call the relation which the Presbyteries hold to the Committee—a relation which has done so much to build up those bodies—that of “trembling servants of an oligarchy in New York City.” A different feeling and expression are due to the band of fathers and brethren, who, without any reward but the joy of doing good, have labored and prayed for this cause; and in every variety of times, through evil report, and good report, in prosperity and in pressure—with their counsels, their influence, and their purses—have kept this machinery in motion for a quarter of a century; and, during this period, have collected and paid over some TWO AND A QUARTER MILLIONS OF DOLLARS, for the assistance of feeble churches and their ministers, and to send the Gospel to the destitute, who were ready to perish.

Notice to Missionaries of the A. H. M. S.

MARCH REPORT.

Dear Brethren—By the terms of your Commissions, a Statistical Report is to be forwarded to the Society on the 1st of March. The data supplied by such reports are indispensable for making out a full exhibition of the doings of the Society for one year. We therefore make early and earnest request, that you will furnish the particulars named in the following list, in a special communication, mailing it as early as the FIRST DAY OF MARCH NEXT.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL, Mark xvi. 15.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

Vol. XXIV.

FEBRUARY, 1852.

No. 10.

"Church Extension."

AFTER a long season of comparative apathy, during which the Missionary and other Societies for spreading the Gospel have found it difficult to attract public attention to the condition and wants of the country, there has been a recent development of interest on these subjects, which has found expression under the name of Church Extension. Sermons have been preached, articles inserted in the religious newspapers, reports and resolutions adopted in ecclesiastical bodies, &c., looking to increased exertion for sending to the destitute the means of grace, as ministered by the denominations among whom these measures originate.

These measures doubtless have a philanthropic origin. Christian hearts are affected by the moral condition of those who are living and dying without God; and their sympathy seeks expression in appropriate endeavors to remedy the evil. Those who for a quarter of a century have been sounding the appeal of the destitute in the ear of the Church, and wept because the cry was so little heeded, cannot but rejoice at this awakening earnestness to repair the desolations of Zion. Let efforts for this end be multiplied; let them be carried forward with wisdom and discretion, and with a simple aim at the glory of Christ; and progress in the salvation of our land, of incalculable value, must be the result.

Among the various notices, reports and resolutions, which have recently appeared on this subject, a great variety is manifest, often showing a lack of information relative to existing facts; and that all the bearings of proposed measures have not been very attentively considered. We may refer to some examples; for instance, in a Western paper we find the following account of the views embodied in the action of one of the Synods:

"There seems to be no way to do this [caring for and feeding the scattered sheep] but by some system of itinerancy, or sending out evangelists to travel through a given section, and have set times and places to preach, even if it be only once a month. This will be the only course, in many places, to prepare the way for a settled pastor. It is believed the present organization of 'Home Missions' can meet this want, if its board will coöperate with and second the efforts of presbyteries within the bounds of which these destitutions are found. Some of our pres-byteries and synods already have in operation a Board of Church Extension, or Committee on Missions, whose wishes and recommendations, in regard to the fields of labor, and the men and measures best calculated to occupy them, ought to be regarded as law; as they must be better acquainted with the fields, and more deeply interested in them than any others can be."

The reader will perceive in this extract an implication that the thing proposed—the sending out of evangelists—is something new, a process just now hit upon to remedy evils whose magnitude is but lately revealed. But this is not so. The plan of employing a portion of the missionary force in circulating through districts of larger extent than a single parish, has ever been an integral part of the system of operations of this Society. It is true, that the United Domestic Missionary Society, which was merged in the American Home Missionary Society in 1826, had been led by the experiment of exclusive itinerancy made by previous Societies, to verge to the opposite extreme, and had announced it as their "deliberate purpose" to employ, for the most part, "only those ministers who desire to settle"; and had expressed the hope that "the practice of employing missionaries to travel from place to place, preaching here and there a sermon, consuming a great portion of their time in journeying, and remaining at no one point long enough to accomplish anything likely to be permanent, will be universally abandoned." But when the National Society was organized, this whole subject underwent revision. It was then determined, in the light of further experience, to employ itinerant labor as an indispensable part of the missionary work; modifying it, however, by assigning definite limits to the missionary, and making his labors point to the permanent supply of one or more churches, at some future period. In the "Address to the Christian Public," issued June, 1826, a month after the American Home Missionary Society was formed, the Committee declare, that—

"The extent of field appropriated to each missionary of the Society, must be frequently modified by circumstances. In those territories which have been most recently settled, where religious societies are unformed, it may be necessary to allow to each missionary, a considerable extent of country, as his circuit. Ultimately, however, it is believed that in most cases, a single town or parish will afford ample scope for the labors of a faithful pastor."

And the first Report of the Society, speaking of the policy of stationing ministers at fixed points, remarks—

"But this system, though the best in general, cannot be made universal. The circumstances of the most remote and destitute states and territories, require a departure from this rule. There, congregations are seldom sufficiently organized to unite in calling a minister, nor are the people sufficiently impressed with the importance of Gospel ordinances to desire these inestimable blessings. Most of our frontier settlements, therefore, would remain destitute of the preaching of Christ, if it were not carried to them. But who shall carry it except they be sent? The young men who enter the ministry, are generally unable to reach these remote settlements and prosecute their labors without assistance. It has, accordingly, from the beginning, been a prominent object with the Committee, to send out well qualified ministers to our frontier settlements, with instructions to gather new congregations and labor, as they may find opportunity, until, with the choice and coöperation of the people, they may become permanently established in the pastoral office."

In accordance with this expression of their views, the Committee, for nearly twenty five years, have employed this modified system of itinerancy; so that, every year—as was stated in the Home Missionary for December—from one fourth to one third of all its preachers, have labored in circuits more or less extended beyond a single congregation; in many instances, covering a county or a group of counties, the territory of a presbytery, an association, or a synod.

If, therefore, any suppose that a missionary laboring beyond the bounds of a stated pastoral charge, is a novelty which is yet untried by this Society, or that the policy of the Society in reference to this species of labor is uncertain, they cannot be fully informed of its plan and history. There is, therefore, no occasion for the doubt implied in the language of the above extract—"the present organization of Home Missions can meet this want, if its Board will coöperate with and second the efforts of Presbyteries." Has not the American Home Missionary Society made express provision for such coöperation in its rules and usages? Has not the very body from which these expressions emanate enjoyed this coöperation and aid for years? And has not almost every Synod in the West, more or less missionaries sustained within its bounds by this Society, and operating substantially on the plan above suggested?

We should not have adverted to this subject again, so soon after the notice in the Home Missionary for December last, were we not persuaded that there is misapprehension in some minds in reference to it.

But there is another remark in the above extract, which demands notice.

"Some of our Presbyteries and Synods, already have in operation a Board of Church Extension or Committee on Missions, whose wishes and recommendations, in regard to fields of labor, and the men and measures best calculated to occupy them, ought to be regarded as law; as they must be better acquainted with the fields, and more deeply interested in them than any others can be."

There have often been attempts on the part of bodies receiving aid from the Society, to overrule the judgment of the Committee, and dictate what they should do in given cases; but not until lately have we met with the grave assertion of the principle, that the Executive Committee are to have no discretion or power of judgment in the administration of missionary matters, but that the several missionary committees, scattered throughout the land, may prescribe what shall be done in their respective bounds, and these prescriptions shall have the force of law. We ask our brethren to consider this position, and see if it be sound. Admitting that they are best informed as to their own destitutions—which, unfortunately, is not always found to be true—does this fact entitle them to be imperative in claiming aid from a Society, which is equally bound to provide for others? If the missionary committee of a Presbytery may give to their wishes the force of law, in regard to fields, and the men and measures best calculated to supply them, the funds needful to fulfill their demands are of course included; and it follows that the Treasury of the Society is subject to the irresistible claims of as many different bodies as choose to present them. But can this be seriously believed? Have the thousands of contributors, whose charity supplies this stream of benevolence, committed to those who disburse it no responsibility but that of treasurers—mere receivers and payers of money? Are they not expected to take original cognizance of different sections, and consider their relative claims, and distribute to the various applicants, according to their own conscientious judgment? The Executive Committee of this Society—composed of ministers and other professional gentlemen, merchants and men of business—have for many years, with much self-denial, pains-taking and devotion of time, assembled at the office of the Society, to hear and deliberate concerning the calls of the destitute, and to appropriate funds for their relief. They have supposed they had some responsibility in this business; and if responsibility, then some right. Have they been all this while mistaken? Had they no proper function of judging and distributing according to their own convictions? Might they have spared themselves many an anxious hour, many a ream of correspondence and inquiry, many a prayer for direction from on high, by simply asking, What do the judicatories direct? No, their deliberations have not been a mere empty form; the Committee has done what the 4th article of the Constitution of the Society authorizes it to do—appointed the missionaries, instructed them as to the fields and manner of their labors, and has had the disposal of the funds, &c. And in this they have not mistaken the intention of the christian public. The donors, who entrust to them their charitable gifts, expect them to do this very thing; and, we have every reason to believe, are satisfied with their discharge of the duty assigned them. Neither the constitution of the Society, nor its generous supporters, ever intended or would be satisfied, that the Executive Committee should merely “collect and disburse funds;” but require them also to judge how and to whom they shall be appropriated.

There is another feature, in the recent action on Church Extension, which deserves notice. While there have been numerous expressions of grateful attachment to the American Home Missionary Society, and resolutions to seek its coöperation in endeavors to enlarge the borders of Zion, we are struck with the absence of all mention of contributions to the Treasury. It seems to have been forgotten, for the time, that the Society is already committed for large sums in behalf of the very bodies who pass these resolutions. While they lay out a vast amount of work to be done, and propose “to use the Society,” to “tax its liberality to the utmost,” they say not a word about putting anything into the treasury, which is relied upon to bear the expense. In the published ecclesiastical action on this subject, during the summer and autumn past, we have seen no measures adopted, or even proposed, to increase the resources of the American Home Missionary Society, to any important amount; but rather to turn away contributions to other departments of Church Extension. Such diversion must inevitably follow any important movement for “supplementary” organizations, which some friends of Church Extension are proposing. We do not ascribe this to indifference, or to a want of affection for this Institution; we would rather impute it to an overweening confidence in its resources—to a feeling, that a Society which has been found equal to past emergencies, cannot want means for any amount of expansion in its business. But we assure our Western friends, that even now, it is hard work to keep this machinery in operation; that any farther increase of our responsibilities, must be attended by an increase of resources; that the eastern churches, already heavily taxed to sustain the present scale of Home Missions, will expect some tangible expression of coöperation, on the part of the West—something besides appeals for aid, or even thanks for past assistance. Last year, the Society pledged to missions in Illinois, more than six times as much as was contributed to its Treasury from that State. The disproportion in Indiana was still greater. The amount appropriated to Kentucky, was nearly $1,400; while the churches of her Synod returned to help on the object only $126. Similar statistics might be multiplied, showing, that regions settled for many years and abounding in physical wealth, are still multiplying their demands on the Society, and claiming that those demands shall be “regarded as law,” while they seem to feel but slight obligation to assist in supplying the fountain from whence these streams are drawn. The Society is not the less disposed to aid in supplying the spiritual wants of the forementioned or any other portions of the field, because of the smallness of their contributions, provided they coöperate with it in good faith, doing all they can to lighten the burden of expense. But the coöperation should be reciprocal. It can hardly be expected that when one class of the churches, acting through this Society, shall withdraw their aid to any considerable extent—shall coöperate in receiving but not in giving—the other churches will feel that the equity of the partnership is preserved, and will continue the proportion of their own liberality unabated!

Auxiliary Anniversary.

NEW HAMPSHIRE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This Auxiliary held its Fiftieth Anniversary at Acworth, August 28, 1851. The occasion was one of peculiar interest, particularly as the Annual Report, drawn up by Rev. B. P. Stone, the Secretary, contained a detailed historical account of the Missionary affairs of New Hampshire, arranged under such heads as these:—Missionary Efforts previous to 1801; Origin of the New Hampshire Missionary Society; Its Object, Missionaries, Fields of Labor; Changes of Missionary Policy; Principles of Action; Finances; Agents and Management; Success of Earlier Missionaries, &c. The whole document must be one of great interest and value to the churches of New Hampshire, and finely illustrates the gradual development of that system of evangelization, which, in this and other States, is doing so much to beat back the encroachments of irreligion, and to spread the institutions of the Gospel. We have room in our periodical to make only a few brief extracts.

It appears from the Records of the Convention of Congregational Ministers of the Province of New Hampshire, that in the year 1770 the attention of members of the Convention was first called to the moral and spiritual condition of those portions of the Province that were destitute of the stated ministry. "Upon a representation," says the Records, "of the state of the inhabitants of the back settlements in this Province, who are destitute of the privileges of the Gospel ministry, by a letter from a number of ministers in the western part of the Province, communicated by the Rev. Dr. Langdon, which had been previously laid before some Associations in this Province, the Convention took into consideration the expediency of applying to the General Assembly (the Legislature) for such helps to those destitute people as to their wisdom shall appear meet."

A Memorial to the General Assembly was accordingly drawn up, directed to the "Governor and Commander-in-Chief, to the Honorable, his Majesty's Council, and the Honorable House of Representatives of his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire," stating—"That from the late conquest of Canada, there has been a large and rapid increase of inhabitants in the interior parts of this Province, and a great number of towns are now settling at once by persons who have moved into the wilderness under such circumstances that at present they are utterly unable to procure or support a Gospel ministry among them; by which means they are deprived of the religious instructions and exhortations they formerly enjoyed: That, by authentic information, it appears that many of them are in danger, for want of these privileges, either of falling into an heathenish state, and bringing up their children without any knowledge of God and religion, or of being drawn away into gross errors, and heresies, and disorderly practices, contrary not only to their spiritual welfare, but to the interests of the civil government to which they belong."

After presenting some reasons why they solicit the aid of the government in this matter, they say:

"Your memorialists, therefore, humbly beg leave to propose this important matter to your Excellency, &c., * * * that you will make such provision for the instruction of these destitute people as to your wisdom shall seem meet."

This memorial was not presented, and no farther action was taken by the Convention on the subject for seventeen years.

From 1787 to 1800, nothing important was attempted. At the annual meeting of the Convention in 1800, we find the following record:

"Sundry communications from the different associations respecting the encouragement they can afford to missionaries to the new settlements, were taken into consideration. It was Voted, To raise a committee, consisting of three, the Rev. Messrs. Smith, of Gilmanton, Coe, of Durham, and Potter, of Lebanon, to consider those communications, and direct the routes of the missionaries who shall be appointed."

At the same meeting the Rev. Messrs. Page, Bell, Livermore, and Prentice, were appointed missionaries of the Convention, who were directed to "keep a journal of occurrences in their routes, and of observations on the state of religion, and exhibit the same to the Convention."

The next year, 1801, the Convention appointed five missionaries to the new settlements. In 1802, the same number of missionaries was appointed, viz., Rev. Messrs. Harris, Smith, of Gilmanton, Hazelton, Fullerton, and Stickney. These missionaries were for the most part pastors of churches, and were absent from their people only a few weeks each; their pulpits in the meantime, with the exception, perhaps, of one Sabbath, being supplied by their brethren of the Convention. They were literally travelling preachers, searching out and visiting the sheep scattered without a shepherd in the wilderness, and preaching here and there, as they could collect the people in meeting-houses, school-houses, private dwellings, or in barns. In the records of the Convention for 1803, we find the following entry:

"Voted, To discontinue for the present, the practice of sending out missionaries from this Convention, on account of the Missionary Society, which was instituted for that purpose."

Some of the district Associations, particularly the Piscataqua, sent out missionaries to the new settlements in a similar way at an early period. As yet, no general or particular statistics had been collected, informing the christian public of the number of towns and churches destitute of the means of grace, and needing missionary attention. Home missionary operations in Connecticut had commenced, under the auspices of the General Association of that State, in 1792, and under a Society formed for that purpose in 1798; also in Massachusetts in 1799, under the direction of the Mass. Miss. Society, which was instituted that year. And while their missionaries traversed the new regions of Vermont, Maine, and the northern parts of New York, we have no account that any of them penetrated the wilds and desolations of New Hampshire.

Having learned that missionary societies had been organized in these States for home or domestic purposes, and feeling the importance of something more efficient for searching out and supplying the destitute population of their own State, many of the ministers began to think of forming a State Missionary Society. Hence the influences which led to the Origin of the Society.

At the annual meeting of the Convention which was held in connection with the annual State Election, at Hopkinton, June 3, 1801, a few ministers met at the house of Rev. Ethan Smith, to confer together respecting a State organization for missionary purposes. The result of their deliberations was, a Convention of Congregational ministers and laymen assembled at Hopkinton, September 2, 1801. Having spent the day in examining the constitution and address to the public, prepared by a committee previously appointed, they adjourned to the next day, and having met according to adjournment, they formed themselves into a society, under the constitution proposed. The title given to the society was, "The New Hampshire Missionary Society," which became a legal title by an act of incorporation passed by the General Court in 1807.

The distribution of books was connected with the early efforts of this Society. In this department of effort, a large amount of its funds was expended during the first twenty five years of its existence. The first action of the Trustees relative to the distribution of religious books, was in 1804. They then voted to procure $6 worth of books for distribution, viz., "$2 worth of the Columbian Primer, $2 worth of Watts's Divine and Moral Songs, and $2 worth of Janeway's Tokens for Children." In addition to the books and pamphlets purchased by appropriations made by the Trustees, they received many donations from individuals and Female Cent Societies, which were generally distributed by the missionaries. Money was also often contributed for the same purpose. In a few years the number of books, sermons, pamphlets, and tracts distributed in a year became quite large, involving an expenditure of hundreds of dollars. In 1814, over $400 of the funds contributed by the Cent Institution were expended in these publications. In 1815, between five and six thousand books, tracts, &c., were distributed. In 1816, between six and seven thousand were distributed.

In 1814, the Trustees established twenty "reading circles," as they were called, for the benefit of young people in destitute places, and placed each under the care of some suitable person to act as librarian. Five ministers, in different parts of the State, were appointed as agents to establish such circles where they might seem to be most needed. The libraries were composed of such religious books of a practical and doctrinal character, sermons, tracts, pamphlets, and periodicals, as were published in those days. These "reading circles" were gradually increased till they reached the number of fifty, which was the number reported in 1818. They were finally disbanded, and their libraries broken up and scattered. Up to 1820, the Society performed the part of a Bible, tract, and religious book Society.

Missionaries and their Fields of Labor.

The first action of the Trustees in relation to the appointment of missionaries was at the meeting in June, 1802. Rev. Noah Worcester, of Thornton, and Rev. Samuel Wood, of Boscawen, were the first missionaries engaged, for three and two months respectively. The following is the outline of their instructions.

"1. It is expected that your general route will be among the destitute towns above Lancaster, on Connecticut river, and that you will vary it as you may judge most conducive to the general design of your mission.

"2. That you will keep the benevolent end of your mission always in view, and make the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom your only object, carefully avoiding all sinister views or worldly speculations, and all debates on political subjects.

"3. That should any donations be offered, we expect you will inform the donor that you cannot receive them for your personal advantage, but in behalf of the Missionary Society, to whom you are accountable.

"4. It is expected that you will keep a journal of your missionary labors, and make return of same to the Trustees."

"They met with the most favorable reception," says the report of the Trustees, "and we have much reason to hope, according to their journals, that their labors were far from being in vain." Thus commenced the missionary operations of the Society. It was not a day of "small," but of "great things." The men of that day had great hearts and wise heads. In systematizing a plan of missions to the destitute, they not only embraced the scattered population without the Gospel, in our own State, but the destitute of other States on the west and north, and even the poor Indian of the wilderness as the object of their charities. As early as 1803, the attention of the Society began to be called to the spiritual condition of what was then called the west. "The Rev. Jacob Cram was sent this year on a mission of twelve weeks to the northern part of the State of New York," extending as far west as Oneida county.

The Society continued to send itinerant missionaries out of the State every year, from 1803 to 1820. Since the last-mentioned date, its missionary appointments, with one exception, have been confined to the limits of New Hampshire. Those parts of the State to which the attention of the Society was first directed, were the whole of the inhabited portion of Coös county, and some 60 destitute towns in Grafton, Old Stafford, Hillsborough, and what is now Merrimack and Sullivan counties, but the greater part of these towns were in the two first-mentioned counties. The Trustees for many years established several points of missionary labor, which they called stations. The Monadnock station was in the northern part of Coös county, and took its name from Monadnock mountain, on the Vermont side of Connecticut river. The Canaan, New Chester, and Wentworth stations were in Grafton county; the Ossipee and Farmington stations were in Old Stafford county. There were other stations, but those just named were the most important. These stations were made sort of centres of operations for the regions in which they were situated. Missionaries were sent to them under commissions of from four to twelve weeks, and occasionally for a longer time, who preached, visited families, distributed books and tracts, and administered the ordinances of religion in a circuit of towns sometimes amounting to twenty or more.

These missionary Bishops, for such they may be truly called, continued to be sent out by the Society till about 1825, after which time the spheres of missionary labor were restricted. A change of policy from the itinerant to the permanent system of missionary labor, was never formally adopted by the Society. It has been the gradual result of experience and of current exigencies of the cause from year to year, all along down to the present.

Summary for 1851.

Missionaries and Churches.

There have been in the service of the Society during the whole or part of the year, fifty one ministers of the gospel. This is six more than the number in commission last year. During the year, eighteen new commissions have been issued.

The whole number of churches and congregations that have been aided in the enjoyment of a preached Gospel, either the whole or a part of the year, is fifty three, which is an increase of eight over the number aided last year.

Short Missions.

Agreeable to the wishes of the Trustees, expressed at their last annual meeting, four young men, of the present senior class of the Theological Seminary at Andover, were commissioned to spend their spring vacation in missionary labors on our field. These brethren labored with zeal and fidelity, and not without some very interesting results.

Influence of two Families.

One of these writes respecting his station:

"The two families, Messrs. W—— and H——, have done wonders. When they went there, three years ago, it was a drunken hole. The two Sabbaths I spent there were the most quiet Sabbaths I have spent in New England. For many years these two men have kept up, without intermission, public worship (reading sermons,) and a Sabbath school, and it is the best conducted Sabbath school I have seen. They have a library of over three hundred volumes, presented to them by friends, and take more than thirty copies of the Well-Spring, and at their Sabbath school concert contribute about $1, i. e., $12 a year. The school numbers between sixty and seventy; the congregation about one hundred, and these are all out, whether they have preaching or reading. I found the school-house full. One young man has been converted through their instrumentality, and is now preparing for college with an ultimate view of the ministry. It would do your soul good to spend a Sabbath here, and witness the avidity with which they seize upon knowledge and truth. They would here raise from $75 to $100 for a minister half the time. Only these two families could give much, and they are far from abounding in this world's goods, but all would give something. They are living in hope, and praying for some one to break unto them the bread of life."

The Treasury.

The balance on hand at the close of accounts the 15th of August, 1850, was $1,758 28. There have since been received, from all sources, $8,069 86, making the available resources of the Society for the year $9,828 14. Of the receipts, $1,220 42 were designated by the donors for the A. H. M. S., leaving $6,829 44 for the exclusive use of the cause in New Hampshire. At the last annual meeting the Trustees appropriated $1,000 of the balance on hand to the Parent Society, making $2,220 42 paid out of our Treasury for the cause beyond our bounds. In addition to this, various churches and individuals have sent to New York, $1,878 61; viz., $928 61 in legacies, and $950 in donations, making the whole sum devoted to the West $4,099 03, and the whole sum raised in the State for the cause of Home Missions $9,948 47, which is the largest sum by $686 67, ever before raised in any one year. The disbursements for the year have been $7,135 12, leaving a balance on hand of $2,693 01. Of this sum the Trustees at this meeting have appropriated $1,000 to the Am. Home Miss. Society. The receipts for the present year have been larger than they ever were before in any one year. This has been owing to an unusual amount of legacies received, viz., $2,487 54 cents, leaving $5,582 32 for the ordinary receipts, which are still somewhat larger than the same receipts for the year preceding. The amount raised by the Cent Institution is $1,522 68, which is $358 86 less than last year; but this has been owing to the failure of some twenty societies to forward their collections before the account closed.

Tidings from the Missionary Fields.

OREGON.

From Rev. G. H. Atkinson, Oregon City.

The first quarter of my fourth year has passed with the usual duties of preaching, and with other public labors in the cause of religion and education.

The only change with us, is a weekly prayer meeting of the Protestant ministers of this place. We enjoy these seasons of fraternal converse and prayer, and trust that they will result in good to the general cause. Certain it is, they will increase our mutual acquaintance, and we hope our mutual charity.

Business has somewhat declined during the year, at this place, as the retail trade has been commenced in the country above us. Families, that we supposed were to be permanent, have moved upon "claims" and to other towns, thus leaving the burden of schools and of all moral enterprises, upon the small number who remain. It is one of the severest trials we endure, that people change abodes so frequently, and impose upon a few the responsibilities, which all assumed together.

As the winter rains are commencing, I shall preach in town for the most part. It is difficult going into the country then with a horse, and without one it is impossible to meet appointments.

I have not been able to resume Sabbath schools out of town, for want of efficient teachers to conduct them. Hence, many children meet to spend the Sabbath in play, or remain at home in idleness. We hope the day will speedily come, when none of our settlements will be destitute of a weekly and Sabbath school. Our usual autumn temperance meetings are just commencing. We have to meet an increase of intemperance.

We begin to experience the evil effects of inflated prices in a corresponding depression, and in a rapid decrease of capital. You are well aware how seriously these things affect the external prosperity of the church, but if I mistake not, they have always proved useful to its piety and stability.

The immigrants have been arriving for two months. The number is estimated at from 6,000 to 10,000, comprising, for the most part, families who design to make Oregon their home. They have generally gone into the country to "take claims." We have reason to hope that they will prove a valuable accession to the Territory, in respect to intelligence, industry and morality.

A Laborer Disabled.

I am sorry to report that Rev. H. Clarke, so long a pioneer missionary in this valley, is, for the present at least, laid aside from his labors by a pulmonary affection. He has too long borne heavy burdens under peculiar trials. It is to be hoped that he will give up all care, and strive to recover strength, that he may still bless the church with his experience and piety and labor. Some one is at this moment greatly needed to supply his place. He has the oldest and largest church of our order in the valley, but should it be long left, the members would seek homes elsewhere.

We have looked in vain for new appointments for Oregon. May we not expect them?

IOWA.

From Rev. E. Adams, Davenport.

I announced to my people yesterday, as we gathered around the communion table, that we were commencing together the eighth year of labor in the vineyard of the Lord. It was an interesting moment to me, and I trust so to them. Oft had we gathered there in times past. Oft held sweet communion together in the circle of prayer. Sometimes, God had granted the special tokens of his presence, filling our hearts with joy, and making his house the gate of heaven. Some, indeed, are with us more no longer on earth. But they, we trusted, were in heaven, and ours is the hope to meet them there.

Present Condition and Prospects.

Aside from the fact, that there is not that special religious interest which there ought to be, and in certain times past has been, there were never greater reasons for courage than now. Harmony is in the church, and the relations between the people and pastor are mutually pleasant. For myself, I return from a visit to my eastern friends, feeling that this is my chosen field; a field every year growing in interest. This place is fast rising in importance. Since the railroad from Chicago to Rock Island, just opposite on the other side of the Mississippi, has been made certain, and its completion within two years so probable, many eyes are turned hither; and never were there so many strangers in town at this season of the year, looking for places, and going away for the want of them, as now.

Notwithstanding my absence during the summer, my congregation begins with an increase. The college opens this year with an advance, corresponding to the growth of all things about it. The day is past when I queried whether this were a field of labor. I am as one whose work grows upon his hands. I have need only to work—to pray more, study more, to appear more among my people as a shepherd of the flock, to stand in this community as one knowing nothing but "Christ and Him crucified."

New Points to be Occupied.

The county is fast filling up with people, making points of labor here and there, which ought to be possessed. Yet what can I do? I may as well give up the place as to divide my labors so as to be inefficient here. But the claims of these points your Agent will press. He will doubtless tell you of the German element fast growing in this place and around us, calling for labor that we cannot give. May the Lord furnish men and means, and multiply instrumentalities to the saving of this land and the glory of his name!

*From Rev. Robert Stuart, Cascade, Du-

Desire for Ministerial Labor.

Within the church and within its sphere of influence, no perceptible advancement has been made during the quarter. The same desire for ministerial labor throughout this region, is still every where manifested; yea, this desire is every day increasing. The time, undoubtedly, will soon come, when there must be another laborer in the field. The temporal prospects of the region, and of Cascade in particular, are brighter than they ever were. Though nature has made our small log village a centre of influence to all the surrounding country, still the moral atmosphere about the place has ever been such as utterly to forbid its thriving. A permanent influence, however, has been brought to bear, which has served in some measure as a check to vice, and the results have been manifested. Our village, from a point of some eight years' standing, or retrograding rather, has apparently entered upon a new era. Amid the continuous struggle for occupancy, we hope that truth will prevail. The dark shades that have so often and so long hung over our prospects, we hope will at length clear away, though we cannot expect it till many seasons of trial, toil, and labor, are passed through.

From Rev. J. V. A. Woods, Red Rock, Marion Co.

In reviewing the labors of my missionary year, we are led to ask, What has been its results? I answer, They have been solemn, indeed. Some to whom I have ministered, we trust are now singing the song of Moses and the Lamb; while others, we fear, are lost forever. To the one the Gospel has been a savor of death unto death, and to the other a savor of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things? Are not the results of preaching the Gospel solemn?

Last Sabbath was communion day in the Pleasantville church. It was a time long to be remembered. All were interested and attentive, and Christians were strengthened and encouraged; while others were alarmed, and inquired what they must do. One lady, not less than 60 or 65 years old, was led to the Lord Jesus Christ, and publicly professed faith in his great name. And just three months before this meeting there was an interesting conversion of another lady of wealth and influence. Others are indulging a hope, and will soon, we trust, unite with the people of God.

In this church, (Red Rock) the work of the Lord is prospering. Seven months ago this church was organized, with five persons; now it numbers eleven—making six conversions in the year. Had it not been for your Society, would these happy results have occurred?

This church will, in a few weeks, have their house of worship enclosed. The prayer meeting, Bible class and Sunday school, are most interesting, and the cause of temperance is gaining strength.

From Rev. J. B. Madoulet, German Missionary at Dubuque.

There has been much opposition from without, and but little spirituality within the church. It is, however, an important point, and a place where a faithful church and minister can exert an influence on the Germans around. The church at Sherrold's Mound affords considerable encouragement; and the French church is quite interesting. The German settlement at Tete des Morts, I think will afford also a good preaching point, and a church of upwards of twenty evangelical members can be gathered there, and a house of worship built. I am paying attention to English as much as I can, and I hope in the course of a few years more, to be able to preach some in the small settlements to the Americans, and by combining labors in both languages, do more good.

There is a great demand for ministers of evangelical views, and acquaintance with the German language, to preach to this increasing class of our immigrant population. Whence they are to be obtained, it is hard to conjecture. For various reasons, many of those educated in the old world do not appear to accomplish the work which American Christians have most at heart.

A Good Bed to Sleep on.

The first three months of the present year are passed; and I hope the time has not been altogether lost. Our accustomed meetings, Sabbath schools, &c., have been very well attended during the past summer. We hope to have a house in which to worship God. We have circulated our subscription, and most of it is either in work or materials for building. Oh, that some rich man would send us money to the value of the bed on which he sleeps! How it would cheer our hearts. Would not the bed be more agreeable, and the man sleep better for having aided in erecting a meeting-house west of the Mississippi? We wish to get the materials this winter, and erect the house next summer. A day is set for the people to go, en masse, to the quarry, to get stone for the foundation. We can work, and are willing to work. How much $50 from some kind friend in the east would aid us!

Our New Meeting-House.

Our new house of worship is not entirely completed, but we expect it will soon be done. We have it so now that we can worship in it, although it is not seated as yet. It has been by hard struggling that we have been able to bring the work forward thus far; but by the help of a kind Heavenly Father, we have succeeded, for which help we praise his holy name. You would not probably know how to sympathize with a missionary's feelings upon exchanging a rude, inconvenient school house, for a neat house of God. Between a breast work of a chair for the pulpit, and a plain, but appropriate desk, the contrast is great; and I cannot feel thankful enough for the change. Most gladly now will I forget all the labors and trials of the past, that have laid upon the mind of your missionary, as he has hauled lumber, boarded the workmen, been a member of the building committee, paid money out of his own pocket—when the work could not advance without it—become painter, glazier, &c., &c., as circumstances would seem to direct. That day of trial has passed away, and the star of hope begins to dawn.

MISSOURI.

The early history of a western mission, especially when located on a thoroughfare, is often that of protracted dependence, hope deferred, and frequent disappointment. The following is an example. In such cases, there seems to be no other way of success but to continue the aid of the Home Missionary Society, until the Lord restore the captivity of Zion, and by his providence and Spirit, give the victory to his people.

This communication closes up eight years services as a Home missionary at this point. In looking over these years, I see much that has been accomplished, under God, and, alas! I see much to regret. During this period, a city has sprung into being, where just before, the footprint of the red man alone was impressed upon the soil. Churches have been organized—one, two, three, four, five, six, seven—where previously the song of the bird was all the praise offered to Jehovah. Of these, two are Methodists, one Catholic (large), one Campbellite, one Baptist, one Episcopalian, and one Presbyterian. The latter, though last mentioned, was the first, and I believe I may say, the most important of all, and one which wields as much or more moral power than all the rest. Four buildings have also been erected, and consecrated to the worship of God; two of which I have built myself. Now, one is a Catholic church, one Methodist, one Baptist, and one Presbyterian. The last is the largest and best constructed house in the city.

All these churches have been, and yet are, struggling for existence. None of them have as yet been able to walk alone. A population of four thousand, divided among seven organizations, (and I ought to have said eight, for we have a Mormon church here) gives five hundred to each. But it must be recollected that the population of a frontier town is not very friendly to religion, and we may, with every attention to truth say, that one-half belong nowhere, and go nowhere to church. Then the average is two hundred and fifty. This is somewhere in reach of facts. The Methodist church South, will average about that number. My congregation will average about two hundred, perhaps a little more. But none of the rest do, or anything like it. This will at once give you an idea of the value placed upon the institutions of religion in a frontier city. Of these congregations, the great mass are non-professors, and most non-carers for religion.

I organized my church one year after I commenced preaching at this point, (the 15th of September, 1844,) with ten members, of whom three were males; since that time, I have received forty-one on profession of their faith in Christ, and fifty by letter, making a sum total of one hundred and one. Of these eighteen have been dismissed to other churches, and eight have died—total twenty-six; leaving the number seventy-five, as being the members of this church. Of these, several, say fifteen, are so scattered, that they are of no assistance to us; then we have sixty resident members left, of whom, ten only are male members. Such are the statistics of this church, which shows that we are still struggling for existence.

Working up Stream.

Whether my labors will be of lasting benefit to this community, God only knows. I do not feel discouraged in my labors, though a missionary that would be instrumental in building up the cause of Christ in this county, must expect to endure hardness as a good soldier of the cross.

I have preached twice upon the subject of Temperance, within the last three months.

I have heard, that a part of my sermon, at one of the places where I preached, displeased one woman very much. I was speaking of the evils of intemperance—that the drunkard would bring his family to want—the wife would be broken-hearted, and the children in rags—his family deprived of the necessities of life. Now, her husband is fond of “the good creature.” I learned that she said, that her children had as plenty to eat and wear as mine had. This I have not disputed. The poor woman has not, as I believe, been to hear me preach since. May this hard-working old man refrain from his cups, and his wife and children not come to want, and realize what hundreds and thousands of wives and children have done, through drunkenness on the part of their husbands and fathers!

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. C. L. Adams, Neenah, Winnebago Co.

Trials of a First Missionary Year.

My first year of missionary labor has closed. To myself and my companion, it has been an eventful year. Its history would embrace many chapters which real life is every day penning.

It has been a year of trial, and we trust, one of profitable discipline. It commenced with sickness, and has closed with sickness. For nearly four months of the year, we have known what it was to watch the progress of disease, as it alternately fastened its withering hand upon one and then upon the other. 'Tis a year that we look back upon with no little interest. A review of it brings us to some conclusions that may be of interest to you.

What we have had to pass through, has not, as yet, caused a single regret, that we left the comforts of the East, to labor as missionaries at the West. Before leaving our eastern homes, we were told that such regrets would appear in our experience. Yes, after I received a commission from your Society, I was told I would regret ever having asked for it. Conscientiously were these discouragements urged, and our friends may think we ought to be satisfied now, that the steps we took were wrong. But we cannot see it in this light. We believed, and still believe, this to be the path of duty.

So strong a hold has this world upon us, that it requires much pruning ere we shall bear fruit to the glory of God. If there is any part of the Lord's vineyard, where entire consecration to the work is demanded, it is at the West; and the prayer of the Church should be, that God would speedily raise up such a ministry for the West.

The Aids of Prayer.

A lady, at the close of my Sabbath service, invited me to visit her house as early in the week as convenient. I knew her as a pious woman, and as having an impenitent husband.

But that husband had become a man of prayer, suddenly smitten down by the Spirit of God. Away in New England, there was a praying mother. That mother had been pleading with God to rescue an impenitent son at the West. Christian mothers, have you sons at the West? Do you desire their conversion; and would you cheer the heart of some servant of Christ who is laboring amid discouragement? Pray for those sons.

From Rev. J. B. Preston, Berlin, Marquette Co.

An Encouraging Beginning.

With this report, my missionary year closes. Truly, as a family we can say, goodness and mercy have followed us. Never have we been more sensible of the care of our heavenly Father, than during the past year. Formerly, for years, we have had more or less sickness in our family; during the last, we have enjoyed uninterrupted health.

In reviewing the results of the past year, we have much to encourage us, and also to convince us that we must perseveringly sow the good seed of the kingdom, and patiently wait for the harvest. Great changes have taken place among us, as is frequently the case in a new country. When I arrived at this place, in Sept., 1850, there was but one place of meeting on the Sabbath, and that a small room over a store; but one sermon preached, (the different denominations meeting together and worshipping with the Baptist brethren), but one Sabbath school, with an average of 50 scholars. Now, we have three cheap but convenient houses of worship. Besides our own, the Baptists, Methodists and Episcopians, are organized denominations. At the commencement of the year, our church numbered 12. Six have united with us on profession, and 20 by letter. Our Sabbath school varies from 60 to 75. Our shanty meeting house is becoming too small; we need a larger house, but cannot at present build it. The inhabitants have mostly removed to this place within three years, and we have not among us a man considered wealthy. Each one, on arriving, has his lot to buy, his house to build, and his family to support. The entire property of our church would not exceed $7,000. Yet they begin to talk about building a meeting house, or commencing next season.

At our communion, in September, seven united with us, four by letter, and three by profession. One of the number, an interesting citizen, was visited with affliction. An only child, 18 months old, sickened and died. The mother could say, "Thy will be done." The father, overwhelmed with grief, cried out, "I know why this has come upon me. It is the direct infliction of God upon me to lead me to do my duty. I deserve it, and my prayer shall be, that the affliction may be sanctified." I trust it was sanctified. He publicly acknowledged his Saviour, took the seal of the covenant upon him in baptism, and promises to be an active and useful member of the church.

Our stated meetings are, a weekly prayer meeting, which had its beginning with the organization of the church; a monthly church meeting, at which the church are more generally present than at the prayer meeting; the Sabbath school concert, in which we unite with the Baptists and Methodists. These concerts are exerting an extensive influence through the community. They call together not only the children, but the youth and the parents.

The monthly concerts for the conversion of the world, have been among our most interesting meetings. Great satisfaction has been expressed by many, in being permitted to hear such intelligence from different parts of the world. We take up a contribution monthly, for this object; the last month it amounted to $4 40.

I have presented to my people the Home Missionary cause, and took up for the Society $12 25. This people love to give as they are able. We have but 11 male members, and as I stated above, the entire property of our church does not exceed $7,000, but they will make sacrifices for the cause of Christ. A large majority of our congregation are young people; many young men, commencing for themselves. They give at our concerts and for all benevolent purposes. We cannot depend upon them yet for the support of the Gospel, and were it not for the A. H. M. S., this people could not enjoy the means of grace. The last year, they raised for my support $100; but 25 cents is all I have realized in money. Money they have not, but such as they have, they give. I love this people. I love to labor for, and with them. I have received invariably from them kindness, and been treated with respect, and am willing to spend and be spent for their good. We shall be under the necessity of looking still to the A. H. M. S. for aid. Could the churches, contributing to the A. H. M. S., only see what they are accomplishing for their country and their Saviour, they would bless God for the privilege. What results of their labor will eternity reveal! The Lord bless them.

"Provided a suitable Man can be Obtained."

This phrase, or its equivalent, is found in hundreds of instances in our missionary correspondence. Thus, in a letter from the Pinery of Wisconsin:

A man is very much needed in Columbia county, and another at Prairie du Sac and Lodi. The former in Sauk county, and the latter in Columbia county. The Wisconsin Pinery I regard as an important field, which ought to be occupied by a missionary forthwith; and Dodge county ought to have another. In some of these places included within the limits mentioned in this and my last report, Presbyterian churches and societies can be built up eventually, but if left to take care of themselves, the things which remain will die. There are now no less than three denominations within this field. The more I become acquainted with their mode of dealing with immortal souls, as a general thing, the more I deplore their influence.

During the last quarter I have preached in Dodge, Calumet, and Marquette counties, and upon the Indian land, besides supplying O., one-fourth of the time. The prospect of building up a flourishing church there, appears to me to be flattering, provided a suitable man can be obtained to go in there.

Called Unawares.

The weather was delightful, and the audience was from settlements five or six miles distant. My subject was, "But God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." The audience was not large, but appeared very intelligent and attentive. To me, it was a deeply interesting occasion, for it appeared to be the first planting of the standard of the Gospel upon ground very recently reclaimed from savage men and savage beasts, and where I hope to see a church of Jesus Christ established to the praise and glory of his grace.

Just as I closed my meeting in the morning, a messenger came, bringing intelligence that a young mother, about eight miles distant, was in spasms, and not expected to survive. Being strongly urged to go and see her, as there was no physician near, I set off, but arrived too late; apoplexy and death, before the sun went down, closed the scene.

It was, indeed, a spectacle long to be remembered, to see a young wife, of only twenty years of age, cut down so suddenly. She was one of the great number everywhere to be found in this State, who had been a professor, but at the time of her death, was not in connection with the church, but resolving by and by to return and do her duty. In the meantime death came, and as she had lived, she was summoned to give up her final account. The disconsolate husband was wholly unprepared for the event, and had not the consolations of the Gospel to support him.

Presbyterianism Overturned!

When I arrived at O., an intelligent member of the church informed me that Presbyterianism had been demolished there the Sabbath previous, by a certain learned preacher. For after mentioning over a number of passages relied upon by Presbyterians to prove their doctrines, some of which it appeared were "wrongly translated," at length he came to the Apostle's declaration, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, &c., shall be able to separate us from the love of God," &c. But, added the preacher, as though endowed with more penetration than Paul, guided by the Holy Spirit, "The Apostle did not mention sin; for that will separate from the love of God."

Growing Steadily.

From Rev. L. Foote, Delavan.

In looking back during the four years of my continuance with this people, I see much for which to be humbled, as the under shepherd and watchman of this people, and much also for which to be thankful. In some things there has been gradual, but steady and real progression, in that which may be said to constitute prosperity to Zion. Sixty persons have been added to the church during this time, and nearly half of these by profession; all of whom yet "run well." Our congregation, too, has more than quadrupled. Our meeting house has been finished. Our benevolent operations have to some extent advanced, and our call for missionary aid has decreased from $200 to $75. We are, therefore, encouraged to labor on—if God permit—with hope and joyful expectation of seeing the Lord yet "shine out of Zion, the perfection of beauty." For this we earnestly pray.

From Rev. C. W. Matthews, Sun Prairie, Dane County.

What affords us peculiar pleasure in recounting, and for which we would call upon our souls and all that is within to bless the Lord, is, that he has been pleased to grant us a few mercy drops. Most of the time since I have been here, there has appeared to be considerable feeling in the minds of a few. During the summer, a series of prayer meetings was held, with occasional preaching. Quite a number expressed a determination to forsake sin and serve the Lord. Most of these persons belonged to Methodist and Baptist families, and if they hold out, will, I presume, unite with those churches. Two have already presented themselves for reception to our church, and will be received at our next communion. We also expect one or two to join us at the same time by letter. Thus the Lord is adding to our number from time to time, of such, we hope, as shall finally be saved. In view of what God has done for us, we would say, "Not unto us, O Lord! not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."

We greatly need a house of worship in which to meet. Our school house has been full to overflowing. O, that men's hearts might be opened to build temples in which to worship their Maker.

ILLINOIS.

Grateful Appreciation of Missionary Aid.

It has been six years since I came to this place. Two of the six I got along without calling on you for assistance; for the other four, I have been commissioned by your Society. I have for the most part felt this to be a barren field. The opposing forces to the prosperity of our church have been many, and very active, from the time I first came here till very recently. I have more influence here to-day than I have ever had before, and our church, although few in number, is yet strong in influence. Truth has triumphed and virtue shines.

Words will not express the gratitude which I feel towards your Society for the aid they have so cheerfully given me. I shall not, at least for the coming year, be under the necessity of applying for aid; yet, in the providence of God, I may again be placed over feeble churches, where my only reliance for support will be the A. H. M. S.; in which case I shall return to it with an affection resembling that of a child to his father's house.

From Rev. E. D. Holt, Rock Island.

Closing of the Second Year.

Two years have passed since I commenced labor on this field under a commission from the Home Missionary Society. Those years have been eventful ones to this community. Great changes have been wrought during that time, but greater still need to be effected, or a great company will, in spite of all that can be done for their salvation, press their way down to death. Our hope is in God, that he will yet do a great work among us.

The spirit of infidelity is rampant among us, while the number who disregard the Sabbath is constantly increasing. We have had, of late, frequent visits from a set of preachers who regard the Sabbath merely as a day when they are to meet together and commemorate the death and resurrection of the Lord; after which, the day is no more sacred than any other. Their preaching, with the wholesale denunciation of all "the clergy" who disagree with them, as "knaves and fools," has seemed to many, to afford them a license to spend the Sabbath as they list.

Yet with all this that is apparently unfavorable to our success in planting the Gospel and its institutions at this point on the "Father of Waters," there are many indications that encourage our hearts to persevere. While it is a hard field—much harder than any one would suppose who had not made the trial of laboring among us—yet there are things that are pleasant, and cheer us amid our toils. During the past year some souls, we trust, have been converted, and are now among our most efficient members. One, a lawyer, and a sound theologian, we hope may yet preach the everlasting Gospel. Our Sabbath school maintains its interest, and is doing much to implant religious truth in the minds of those who receive none at home. I have, during the quarter just ended, been preaching discourses in the evening of Sabbath, more directly aimed at the impenitent and the young men. The attendance has increased, especially of young men, with whom the place abounds at present; and a good attention has been given to the truth. We hope some good may thus be done.

From Rev. J. A. Hawley, Augusta, Hancock Co.

Impulse Imparted by a Revival.

The year has been one of great interest and profit to us. The revival already reported has been a great blessing, not only to the individuals converted, but we hope also to the church and community.

We have found enlargement and strength. A school, which I have established, and thus far sustained, and in which the revival commenced, is now, I hope, rendered permanent, and will add to our influence and usefulness, and still farther to our strength.

Although the members of the congregation have suffered much this year from the failure of the crops, yet the committee propose the enlargement of their subscription, and hope to be obliged to ask for only a part of the assistance which was necessary last year.

Awakenings.

Since our revival, the neighboring churches of Round Prairie and Plymouth, have enjoyed a copious outpouring of the Spirit, and 100 hopeful conversions are reported. A majority of these have united with other churches, but 40 have joined the Presbyterian and Congregational churches. During the last quarter, three church members have been called to their rest. They have all borne decided testimony to the power of the Gospel to sustain the believer in the sorest trials. Two of them for a long time suffered the acutest pain. But the bestowment of grace "sufficient" fulfilled the promise of God.

Stephenson Co.*

Providential Visitation.

For the first time since our residence here, the angel of death has visited the people of this village. A woman whose husband is in California, after a protracted sickness, and almost unprecedented suffering, died. She was one of a large circle of relatives, almost all of whom make no profession of religion. Her mother being the only open and decided Christian among them. The peculiar circumstances of her death produced a strong sensation, not only among her friends, but through the community. In early life, she thought she had experienced the power of saving grace, but had since been a wanderer from the fold; within the past year, she had come to reside here, and it is believed that the Lord had again visited her, and she contemplated making a public profession of her faith at our next communion season. But we trust that her master has called her to commune with himself, face to face. Scarcely had we returned from the grave, when intelligence came that an old man, the head of another large family circle, had fallen dead in his field. The news seemed to fall upon the community like a dark, gloomy cloud, and while we were yet looking one upon another in silence, a widow, who had buried her husband here some years ago, and removed to Freeport about a year since, came into the village bringing the dead body of her little boy, an only child. In most communities these events would excite little attention, but they come to us as special providences, and there is reason to hope that they will result in good to some souls.

Heathenism at Home.

I was quite interested, a few weeks since, in the case of a little boy about seven years old, whom I met in a neighborhood about five miles distant. I overtook him as I was riding, and invited him to take a seat with me. He immediately sprang into the wagon, but took a seat so far behind me, that I could not converse with him. After many urgent invitations, he finally consented to sit beside me. His bright black eyes, and the general expression of his countenance, indicated thoughtfulness and intelligence. And yet he was entirely ignorant of God, and of Christ. His parents had a Bible, he said, though they never told him anything about it, and neither they nor himself ever went to meeting. His inquiries about God—for he was very inquisitive—deeply excited my sympathy for him, and for his parents, and for the neighborhood where he lives. When I told him something about the presence of his Creator, and about his particular residence in the sky, he wished to know how God could keep himself up there, and whether he had any body to live with him, and whether he could see us, and whether I loved him, &c., &c. All the ideas I communicated, seemed to be new and wonderful to him, and I trust that the seed sown in the heart of that young heathen, will yet spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God.

From Rev. H. Hyde, White Lake, Oakland County.

A Retrospect.

I came to a church which had been distracted and divided—some twenty having just gone off to form another by our side—so much disheartened and discouraged as to doubt whether they could do anything more. About fifty members were left.

They had not a decent house of worship, the only one in the place being an old log building occupied by all in common. We have now a new, neat, good-sized house of worship, paid for; a good Sabbath school and library, and an interesting Bible class. Our house is ordinarily well filled by an attentive congregation. A large and elegant school house is in process of erection; and best of all, between forty and fifty have been added to the church. Much the larger portion were received by profession of faith, the fruits of God's Spirit working on the heart. The church now numbers over ninety, though death and removal have taken many from us. By this past goodness of our heavenly Father, we feel greatly encouraged, and believe that "goodness and mercy will follow us all our days."

I cannot but feel, and I would express deep gratitude to you, and to God through you, that your sustaining hand has not been withdrawn from us. If villages and towns in New England, one or two hundred years old, still need help—and doubtless they do—it need not be thought strange if every church at the West does not grow to full adult vigor and self-support in ten or fifteen years, amid the almost insurmountable obstacles they often encounter. Division into minute sects, and fragments of sects, never was carried to its extreme in New England as it is here. This is one of the greatest foes to growth; and I am well convinced, by personal observation, that Christians here do far more, according to their ability, than they do there. We, too, suffer by emigration, as well as the churches farther east, for the "boundless West" is still beyond us.

From Rev. A. L. Payson, Schoolcraft, Kalamazoo County.

Hindrances within and without.

There are evident indications that the church here has secured, more extensively, the confidence of the community. There is no open hostility as heretofore; though we know there is quite an anxiety on the part of the open enemies of evangelical truth, perceiving, as they think they do, that the influence of the church is extending. But progress in religious matters must, of necessity, be slow. There is a great want of efficiency—that spirit of action, calling all the powers of one's being into the required service—that spirit of benevolence, kindled and kept alive in the heart—which leads one forth in the faithful discharge of every duty. Our leading men are fixed and staid in their habits, far better adapted to an eastern location, where the principles of society are firmly rooted and grounded. The church being so widely scattered, it is very difficult to sustain those meetings so well calculated to keep up that tone of piety in the church which is greatly needed here, to meet the opposing influences. To a greater or less extent there is an entire and open disregard of things sacred. There is a wide-spread influence from Universalism, though its adherents openly say that the Bible is not fit to be read—that it has no relation to man, as it regards his future state—still they claim to belong to this class, and sustain, from month to month, their so-called services.

Our Sabbath school, I hope, is brightening in its prospects. I find it very difficult to enlist the interest of the church in this work, but time and patience, I hope, will remove all existing evils.

To Read the Bible through in a Year.
Much of the value of the Scriptures is lost, by reading them in disconnected portions, and not in the natural relation of their parts ; and many persons, from the want of a plan in reading, are in danger of omitting some portions altogether. Hence much benefit may result from pursuing a regular system, such as is pointed out in the following table. Multitudes have tried it, and all are ready to testify to its usefulness.

It will be observed that, by means of the dates given in this table, one can commence at any time, with the chapters set down for the day.

Read 3 chapters daily, and 5 on the Sabbath ; that is, 2 chapters in the old Testament, and 1 daily—3 on the Sabbath—in Ps., Prov., Eccl., Sol. Song, and the New Testament.

The Old Testament, without these four books, contains 2 chapters a day for the year, and the New Testament, with the four books, has 1 chapter a day, and 3 for Sabbath days, minus 8 chapters.

Read Psalm 119, as 11 chapters of two divisions each, and connect the short Psalms 117 and 131 with the next, and 133 and 134 together, thus adding 8 chapters to complete the year. February 29 in leap year is left out, so as not to derange the list.

Commercial Prospects of North America.

There is no continent so fitted as America to receive the benefits of steam-navigation ; and, of all America, there is no region where it can be used so extensively as in the Line of the Lakes. There, at America's greatest breadth, an almost level tract of country spreads for nearly four thousand miles from the Atlantic to the Rocky Cordilleras, unbroken by any mountain-range, and whose highest peaks cannot vie with those of our own little island. With the exception of a single narrow break between Lake Superior and the River La Pluie, and which may possibly be connectable, one long, vast line of water-communication extends from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the very foot of the Rocky Mountains ; while an offshoot of two rivers connects it with Hudson's Bay ; and so intimately connected are the wide valleys of Ottawa, St. Lawrence, Hudson, and other rivers, that from the shores of Long Island Sound in the south, to Hudson's Bay in the north, a vast network of water-communication penetrates and unites the different parts of the country in all directions. Here, then, will steam-navigation, one of the greatest triumphs of man over nature, display its marvels. Over those lakes, up those rivers, will it impel the ships of commerce, laughing at the winds, virtually annihilating tides and currents, and ascending even rapids, in its irresistible course. And along with it, will man and civilization penetrate the wilderness, displaying, amid primeval forests, the triumphs of art, and rearing a temple to the God of nature in her deepest solitudes. Stream and lake, field and forest, will yet be converted to the uses of commerce and civilization; and long after the red man and the buffalo have disappeared from the plains, the fair, white-skinned sons of Japhet will "increase and multiply" upon the prairies of the West.

When we reflect upon the gradual extinction of the aborigines of America, from the Frozen Sea to Cape Horn, and the unceasing spread over its plains of the people and religion of Europe, two designs of Providence—or rather, perhaps, one grand plan—seems to dawn upon us. Are we not warranted in supposing that Providence so long held America from our knowledge, in order that Christianity, after fighting its way to a contested supremacy in the Old World, might there find a new world in which to develop itself untrammelled; and that the northern and largest half of that continent was reserved for the noblest of human races, the Anglo-Saxon? The blessings of Christianity, the freedom and energy of the Anglo-Saxons—do not these sum up all that a land can wish? And these are the gifts of America. Fast and surely the wave of emigration is moving over the prairies of the far West; from Hudson's Bay to the Gulf of Mexico, mankind are advancing abreast, "like an army with banners," thirteen miles every year. Fearlessly the pioneers of that vast host plunge into the wild places of nature, armed only with their axe and their Bible. Let them cherish that Bible, and their empire will flourish. It is the charter by which they hold the land. It was to make way for Christianity and a new civilization that the old tribes were permitted to die out; and to carry these to their fullest development is the mission of the race who has succeeded them. May they be true to their mission!

In the course of ages yet to roll, should Christianity, amid the corruptions of old civilization and the violence of infidel revolutions, become lifeless in Europe, and the rude but regenerating arms of Muscovites spread in triumph to the shores of the Atlantic—America, let us hope, will still reflect to her sunny skies, from her thousand hills and rivers, a land of Christians; and then and there will the Anglo-Saxons, over-shadowing the fane of their tiny but brilliant home in Britain, erect their mighty empires, unrivalled and omnipotent, the lords of the New World.—Dublin University Magazine.

Wives of Western Missionaries.

By REV. PROF. ALLEN, of Lane Seminary.

The East has given to the West, of noble women not a few, of whom some continue to this day, but many, very many, have fallen asleep. I look back over the last twenty years, during which period I have been conversant with western scenes, and call up family after family of missionaries and pastors, counting them by scores, from which the young wife and mother has been taken away by death. The men who entered upon their work here at about the same period with myself, for the most part still live, and now in the maturity of their strength and in vigorous health, are rejoicing in the fruits of their labors. But of the companions of their early toils and sacrifices, comparatively few are here. The second, and in more instances the third, and even the fourth have been called to take their place. Now why is this? Must we refer the fact to the mysterious dispensations of Providence, or can we find a sufficient explanation in the history itself of these early victims of the destroyer? In most instances, could we read this entire history, we should at once discern, that the event, so far from being mysterious, was natural and necessary. Let us for a moment look in upon some of these domestic scenes of missionary life in the West. The missionaries themselves are often brought before us, and we are permitted to sympathize in their trials and labors, and expected to contribute for their support. This is right. They deserve all and more than all they receive of sympathy and aid. But I wish to put in a plea for their wives, also. They, too, deserve our sympathy. They toil on in silence and retirement, under the burdens of care and poverty; but they do it joyfully, even if it be unto death, in view of the glorious results of missionary labor, which faith anticipates in this vast and noble field.

The missionary has selected for his companion a young lady of refined and cultivated mind and manners, accustomed to the privileges of an intelligent and educated community, and brought up in the enjoyment of the comforts, perhaps the luxuries, of a respectable family in the older States. And now they have entered upon their work, in one of the more destitute regions, perhaps one of the frontier States of the West. They find an enterprising, high spirited, generous people, who receive them heartily and gratefully, but they are all beginners in the world, and expect their minister to be partakers of their poverty. They have gathered from all parts of the land and the world, and have no settled habits, and many of them no correct idea about supporting the minister's family. They at once lay over upon him and his wife, the entire labor and responsibility of taking care of everything pertaining to the interests of the church, and too often of taking care of themselves also. That young wife is expected to take charge of the female prayer meeting, the sewing society, the young ladies' Bible class, and of every other good enterprise in which females are immediately concerned. If none of these things are in existence, she feels in duty bound to start them. Then every family in the parish will expect a good, long, substantial visit from her; not a fashionable call; that they know nothing about. Presently she finds that it is next to impossible to get domestic help, or, if help can be found, their narrow means will not permit her to employ it. Probably in her anticipations of missionary life, she had thought only of ways of doing good to the people of her husband's charge. The unpoetic verities of the wash-tub and the kitchen had formed no part of the picture. But here they are in stern reality, and herself the only actor in the scene. To this, however, she submits with cheerfulness for a while, the romance of it reconciling her to the abandonment of her books and of her plans of mental culture. House-keeping in a log-cabin of "two pens and a passage," has its pleasures, while the family is small and while the novelty of the thing lasts; but by and by come the anxieties, and perils, and sufferings, and cares of an increasing family, and these, too, must be borne by her alone, or with the occasional and irregular assistance, and borne too, in addition to all she had before. Her husband is overlaid with his own appropriate work and she is anxious not to intrude upon his time. Often, too, he is absent to fulfill distant appointments, and look after his widely scattered flock. The wife, the mother, toils on alone. Wearied, thin and pale, she watches the cradle, she teaches the little prattlers about her, she cooks, and washes, and makes and mends for all her household, and still the prayer meeting and the Bible class find her at her place, often if not regularly. At length one of those sickly seasons to which every new country is peculiarly subject, with its dreadful train of fevers and chills and "shakes," sets in. The minister's family is not exempt. The husband, the wife, the children, all in turn are prostrated. Neighbors are few, and perhaps are themselves all visited in the same way. Alone, alone, must they toil on, and suffer on, helping each other if they can, and grappling with disease unaided if they cannot. Is it strange that those tender cords, already stretched to their utmost, now snap asunder, and that wearied frame finds rest in the grave? Is it not more wonderful that any survive? My picture may seem to be too deeply shaded, and I would by no means intimate that every missionary's family has such an experience; but such scenes are not rare, and they are inseparable from the work of planting the Gospel in these frontier States, springing up as by magic from the wilderness. I have seen them, I have oftener heard them described by those who could say of them, "magna pars fui."* But even in much more highly favored spots, in the older western States, and, I doubt not, it may be to some extent farther east, the wives of ministers are worked to death. Their early training has unfitted them for such labors and cares as are inseparable from their position, and then these cares are multiplied by the demands of others upon them, at a most unreasonable rate.

Is there any remedy or any relief for this state of things? If I might be permitted to take my stand beside the grave of the missionary's wife, and plead with christian mothers all over the land, I would say, look first to the physical training of your daughters. Fit them "to endure hardness as good soldiers'" wives. They may be called to it, fitted or unfitted. If you can give them nothing else, give them, if possible, a good constitution, and that, with a good heart and a good share of Anglo-Saxon common sense, will make them good wives for anybody. I would put in a plea, too, in behalf of the wives of missionaries now in the field. Let them not be forgotten in your prayers, and forget not to send every one of them a box of well-made clothing. In no way, perhaps, can those at a distance, so effectually relieve their burdens.—Mothers' Magazine.

* "I have shared in them largely."

Tendencies of Emigration.

THERE are some points of resemblance in the development of the life of a society, and that of an individual. The first pulses of thought in the infant mind carry it out of itself into the external world; towards those visible, tangible, rapid, odoriferous and sonorous bodies by which it is surrounded, and with which, through the medium of its physical organization, it is brought in contact. In the midst of these objects, it is designed by its Maker to spend its earthly existence. From them it is to derive the support of the wonderful scaffolding of bones, muscles and sinews, by which it is surrounded and fitted for its earthly mission. Nature, therefore, true to the necessities of its condition, directs its first attention, its first interest, its first curiosity, to the vast panorama and the wonderful whispering gallery by which it is environed. The simpler laws of the objects presented by the senses, and its own relations to them are, as in its circumstances it is meet they should be, the first topics of thought.

But does the current of thought and interest run forever in this direction? Does the eye never become sated with seeing, and the ear with hearing? Has man no higher life than the life of the body? And if so, however long curiosity and the necessities of the body may cause the thoughts to linger about the outward and the physical, must it not at length turn backward upon its track? Must not the human spirit, by an act of "self-reduplication," at length survey its own wonderful powers? Must it not, at length, propose to itself the great problems of its being? the great questions of its destiny? The period at which these questions will arise will vary with the varying character of individuals, and the interest and attention which they will receive will vary with the force of favoring or opposing circumstances. But come they must. Sooner or later they will force themselves upon the attention, and demand consideration, so surely as man is not a brute. They are a part of the proper development of humanity.

If now we could find a body of men unlettered and poor, banding together with a view of colonizing an uninhabited region, and of realizing for themselves and their children the protection and the various valuable results of civil society, what are the objects which we should predict would naturally first claim their attention and engross their thoughts? Plainly the provision for their physical wants. Hunger is clamorous, and summons attention with an importunity which will admit of no delay. All the various wants of the body solicit immediate notice. In a society thus constituted and circumstanced, it is plain that the external and physical would engross the attention almost exclusively. Animal courage, strength of muscle, would of necessity command high admiration. Those qualities would be most highly valued which contribute most directly and largely to physical comfort and security. In such a community, shut out from the world, from the action of those spiritual influences which God in the beginning provided as the aliment of man's spiritual nature, the period at which the higher problems of his being would begin to agitate the mind of man might, it is true, be long delayed. In such a community the development of those higher attributes of humanity, the combination of which, perfectly developed, constitutes true civilization, would be slow and feeble, and at the best it would be imperfect and distorted.

Men have indeed sometimes thrown themselves into circumstances like these, but they are circumstances in which God never designed the human being to spend his earthly probation. This, it may be, is the natural history of barbarism. This, it may be, is the process by which communities have sunk successively through all the grades of the barbarous, and thence, by repeated emigrations, to the savage state of society. When Cain left the presence of the Lord, the Shekinah of Eden, and colonized the land of Nod, he abandoned the only influences which can develop and sustain the spiritual life, and with it, the true civilization of a people. And the history of his tribe is the history of the triumph of the physical over the spiritual, of the animal over the human. Behold it! First idolatry, then atheism, then every form of unnatural and outrageous crime.

The Pilgrim Fathers of the West.

But this is not of necessity the history of all emigration. It cannot, I am persuaded, be the history of that emigration which is taking possession of yonder wonderful valley, and whose magnitude and rapidity are the astonishment of mankind. The day when the first white settlement was made within the limits of the Northwest Territory, is still fresh in the memory of many living men. It has been my privilege often to converse with the first white female, a noble daughter of New England, now I trust in heaven, who from the May Flower of the Ohio, landed at the Plymouth of the West. It is my privilege every Sabbath, when at home, to worship in a sanctuary which the piety and the poverty of that little band of occidental pilgrims reared and dedicated to the worship of the Triune God. What a change has sixty years produced? The little opening in the wilderness at Marietta, made by the axes of that hardy band of Christian pioneers, has waxed into an empire, and the roar of its mighty population now rolls over the vast prairies of the West. Its reverberations are sent back upon us from the rocky barrier which curtains the Pacific. The history of the pilgrims of Ohio exists as yet only in fragments. But the time will come when the world will "know it by heart," and when the 7th of April, 1788, will stand in the calendar of America second only in reverent observance to the 22d of December, 1620.

None of us are ignorant where these pilgrims originated. None of us are ignorant of the spirit which they bore, and the views which they cherished, touching the elements of social prosperity and the true producing causes of a high and Christian civilization. They are the very views which have made the States from which they emigrated the wonder of the world: which have filled them with a population at this moment better fed, better housed, better clothed, better governed, more universally intelligent, and possessing, in the aggregate, a higher degree of social prosperity, and a higher type of civilization than any other continuous population of equal amount upon the surface of the globe. Such were the fathers of the West. For one who has stood in the scenes hallowed by the memory of their enterprise and their piety, who has mingled with their children, bearing unmistakable moral marks of their honorable descent, not even the testimony of Washington, full and explicit as it is, is needed to enable him to form a correct estimate of their intelligence and moral worth. These men knew what are the essential conditions of permanent social progress and development. They knew the agencies and instrumentalities which must conspire to produce this result. The Church, the School, the College, and their necessary adjuncts; these are the agencies upon which they relied. They did not believe that one of them could flourish without the others. They well knew that in the absence of either, the others would languish; and that in the absence of all, Christian civilization could not be perpetuated for a single generation. Their plans, therefore, in laying the foundations of Western society, embraced all with an equal affection.

But what at that period, what in 1788, was the physical condition of the West? It was, as the hand of nature left it, an unbroken wilderness. What is it now? A land flowing with milk and honey. Look at its leveled forests, its cultivated fields, its cities and villages, and roads and canals and railways, its mines and nascent manufactories. Count up the 1200 steamers, and the 4000 flat boats floating its commerce, which in 1849 was valued at $439,000,000, a sum equal to twice the value of the whole foreign commerce of the nation. Do this, and remember that this vast physical change has taken place within a little more than sixty years, and that it is greater than was ever before wrought in any thirty consecutive generations in the history of man. Do this, and then answer me the question: What must have been the chief direction of the human will, of human energy and enterprise and effort in that valley, during these sixty years? It must have been towards the outward and the physical. Nothing but an intensity of interest in the physical, and of devotion to it well nigh unparalleled in history, could have produced, in so short a period, the astonishing results which we witness. But a vast amount of cultivated intellect, a high degree of knowledge, have mingled in and presided over those miracles of industry and art, which the hands of men have wrought upon that great theater.

The Ministry of the West.

During a residence of eighteen years in the midst of one of the most destitute of our Home Missionary fields, I have often visited the dwellings of ministers, and seen them at their work; and I cannot but declare my conviction, that the whole field of Christian Missions presents no nobler specimens of self-denial than are to be found among the evangelical ministers of the West. With native powers of mind, with a discipline of education, with an energy of character which, if devoted to secular pursuits, would place them among the intellectual magnates of the land, and surround them with the comforts and elegancies of christian society, many of them must be content, in their present vocation, to sustain life upon the merest pittance; must often forego not ornaments, but necessities, and must moreover be content to receive even that pittance, not as a right, but as a gratuity, doled out, often, I fear, by the hand of a reluctant charity. How can any but men of strong faith consent to a position and to sacrifices like these?

O ye who love Zion, and who pray for the coming of Christ's kingdom, gather, I beseech you, with your sympathies and your prayers, about the Western ministry of reconciliation. Lift up your petitions in their behalf, that they may be able to endure hardness, as true soldiers of the cross; that they may count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus their Lord. And may the Great Head of the Church stand by and sustain his own commissioned ambassadors, the leaders of the sacramental host of God's elect. May he make them understand the unspeakable dignity and glory of their great work. When tempted by the seductions of the world, may he be present with his aid. When faint and fatigued, when wounded and weary in their conflict with the powers of darkness, when deserted by friends and hard pressed by the foe, when stunned and confused by the roar and tumult of the enemies of righteousness and of God, they are just ready to yield the victory, then, O Lord, do thou unstop their ears to hear upon every hill-top the rushing pinions of that heavenly host wherewith thou dost succor thy Zion in distress; then, O Lord, do thou open their eyes to see that glad vision of the future, when yonder valley, when this whole nation, its entire population, redeemed to God, shall become the most lustrous star in that bright constellation of nations which shall constitute the universal empire of Christ!—PRES. SMITH, Marietta College.

IOWA.

Exploring New Fields.

I have been making an exploring tour for some miles around the neighborhood, and have been much interested in my visit. I have discovered a wider field of labor than I was previously acquainted with. The appearance of things changes so rapidly with us, that it is hard to keep ourselves rightly informed of matters. Where scarce a shanty was to be seen two years ago, I find there are now growing and interesting settlements.

In the course of my visit, a respectable female, living seven miles from the house where I had appointed to preach, came to me with a pressing invitation to visit her neighborhood; urging, as a reason, a total destitution of public means of grace. She stated they supposed they were neglected, from the circumstance that formerly the settlement was noted as a rendezvous of horse thieves; but now the gang was broken up—that nearly the whole of them had died wretched deaths; and now they had a settlement of eastern people, and would gladly welcome a minister of the Gospel. I promised to visit them, and make a regular appointment if possible.

The inconveniences and suffering endured by many new comers, certainly are great. In many places which I visit, they are protected from the piercing blast of the winter's wind, coming over a large extent of prairie, only by a single thickness of board—mere shanties, hastily erected, as a temporary shelter, but oftentimes, of necessity, made the residence for a year. With the thermometer ranging from 10° to 25° below zero, as has been the case during the past seven days, we could seldom find a house warmed sufficiently to warrant the collection of a congregation for preaching. If my life be spared, it is my intention to pay such visits frequently; making them preaching tours of ten or twelve days. I know not how to reach many who live at a distance, except in this way. During the past quarter, I have taken up two points, for regular preaching appointments, each once in two weeks.

Southern Iowa.

Before I close, permit me to repeat what I have stated to you in former letters. Southern Iowa is rapidly increasing in population, and daily becomes more interesting as a field of missionary effort. New points of interest—places where churches might be organized—are frequently presenting themselves to my view; and I am often solicited and urged to go and preach at points where there is no preaching, or none that is likely to benefit the people. If I were to comply with all such requests, I know not that I should be at home one Sabbath in a quarter. Here is a rich harvest of souls. Can no self-denying ministers be found who will enter this field—already white—and gather the precious fruit into the garner of the Lord?

MISSOURI.

Lo, I am with you!

By the kind Providence of God I have been brought to the close of my second year of missionary labor; a year of trials, but a year also of corresponding mercies. God is good; the Saviour is precious; and precious is the privilege to labor in his service. I have not enlisted in the service of a hard master; although the service appointed me requires all of my time and strength. Let me but witness the smiles of his approbation, from the mercy-seat and in his providence, if he shall be pleased to bestow additional encouragement, and I will cheerfully go onward, regarding even hard and self-denying labor a pleasure. It is happiness on earth to know that God approves. Before the smiles of his countenance the darkest clouds flee away, and the severest toil is pleasant. And if upon earth, where there are so many checks to one's enjoyment, the grace of God can so overbalance the evils of life, how great must be the bliss of those who shall be admitted to the fountain above, where no counteracting influence will be experienced!

Seclusion from Ministerial Intercourse.

During the last quarter I had the privilege of seeing the faces of my brethren, and of meeting them once more in Presbytery. I had not been present before, for eighteen months, nor had I seen all the members of Presbytery within that time, nor, with two exceptions, had I spent more than an hour or two in the society of any of them. Two of them paid me a visit each, and preached for me. I had spent nearly two hours in conversation with three others. And this has been all my ministerial intercourse for one and a half years.

On the fourth Saturday and Sabbath in September, I held meetings at —, preached twice each day, and also administered the sacrament. I had appointed the meetings with the expectation that Bro. W— and L— would be present; but neither of them came. So I had to gird on again the "single harness," in which, it is true, I have become somewhat accustomed to work, and to go forward.

It is a general fact here, that men will not attempt new things of a public character, though they have their own judgment, the law of the State, and the influence and earnest entreaties of good men, urging them forward. I have been greatly disappointed in regard to the church, though I am not wholly discouraged. I trust I have one resource left; and sometimes I feel that help is very near, when I can come before the throne of grace with the language of the Psalmist upon my lips: "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him." And may I not solicit your prayers, and the prayers of the friends of Zion, that God may remember this part of his vineyard with favor?

Pray for the Missionary.

Sometimes, the most faithful labor is ineffectual, through the accumulated difficulties that beset the missionary. Diversity of sects, sickness, removals, and similar hindrances, often cause a greater loss to a missionary station, in a given time, than all the gain which the most sedulous attention to the duties of his calling enables the missionary to accomplish.

Such cases are no argument against the attempt to build up the wastes of the land; but they most abundantly illustrate the duty of prayer for the ministry, which is spending the prime of its strength in such efforts to sustain the standard of evangelical truth amid surrounding opposition.

I have now spent nearly two years in this village. The result is very far from what I had hoped, so far as outward appearances are the index, and now as I close this year, I am in great darkness as to what course I ought to pursue. I look back over the months I have spent here, and remember the inspiring hope I felt as I commenced my work. There were good reasons for believing that in the course of two years, or even of one, that we should see indications of good; sinners coming to Christ, and Christians joining our standard, and our own people enlarged and strengthened together with Zion.

The year has gone, but my hopes and expectations are not realized. I have not found a readiness to cling around our denomination and myself. I have not been successful in gathering to myself a circle of power and influence, such as to mould or control public opinion. There has been no season of special religious interest, and no inquiry, "What must I do to be saved." One year ago, my brethren in the ministry aided me in the organization of a church. I am not sorry that it was done, but I lament that so little aggression has been made by it, into the ranks of the adversary.

In one respect I have been greatly encouraged, through the hand of a kind Providence—that is, in the building of a church edifice, neat and commodious, in all our weakness, during the past year. With but five church members in our town, and these poor and able to do but little, some $500 or $600 were raised to begin and complete the building, which has been in use since May. This is the more surprising, as it was nearly all obtained without having recourse to either of the other denominations in the town.

But, on the other hand, there have existed many circumstances which have rendered my situation a difficult and discouraging one.

The concentration of influence of another denomination, has brought a powerful current to bear against me, which has defeated my efforts for good, and swept from the circle gathering around me, many who were disposed to adhere to us. Their preachers, since I came, have gathered strongly here, and their presiding elder and circuit riders have made it their home, so as to have their own people under their own supervision and training. Being vastly in the majority, they almost control public sentiment, setting up and putting down whom they please. Most evidently the people are taught strenuously to condemn Presbyterianism, and I have had my own sermon attacked and vehemently answered by them, in my own pulpit, on the same day that I preached it, as if any approach to the doctrine of the Sovereignty of God, were full of the foulest heresy, and the people were to be warned against it, as though it would plunge them in perdition. Their preacher condemned, to my face, the American Messenger, as full of Calvinism, and greatly to be avoided, refusing to have anything to do with its circulation. Several families refuse to receive the paper any longer, and this without reference to the conclusion of the year of their subscription, or giving any reason. The Campbellites, or Reformers, rank next in power and influence; and as I have taken a decided course, not favorable to them, they are my staunch opposers. With wonderful unanimity, they concentrate their influence, band together, and make as much of a public feeling against me as possible, which carries many out of the reach of my influence.

Having these powerful influences to encounter, and being few in numbers at first, we have found sufficient discouragement; but it is increased when we learn that a large majority of these few have been providentially led away to other parts, or removed by death. Our most influential and wealthy friends, who first welcomed my coming, and aided in my too small support, including two families and three members of the church, were induced to remove, leaving but a small remnant behind. Two other families then removed, including three church members, dwindling our numbers to two church members, and both of these females; and by a most unfortunate circumstance, one of them, a widow with a family, fell under the frown of many of the community, for the misconduct of her son. Her influence, therefore, is lost, and even worse than lost; for others are led by prejudice to dislike a church with which she is connected, though her own conduct, so far as I have knowledge, is consistent, and far more so than that of many. For the last few months, it has been my lot to board in this family, and I am told that the odium attached to them, has fallen upon me, because I boarded with them, and that therefore some have warmly asserted they would never set foot in the church again while it was my lot to preach there. I am sorry that, in my ignorance, I should have offended others, and driven them from the church, by merely boarding in the family; and that, too, when most evidently it was the most suitable place otherwise, that could be found in all the town.

Thus you will perceive that unexpected difficulties and discouragements have been brought to bear upon me. The bright prospects of one year since have darkened and almost disappeared. There is not now a male member of the church here to stand by my side, or speak the encouraging word. There is not a female member who has a husband of our denomination to join with her in our cause. There is not a man who is Presbyterian, and not biased by the prejudice I spoke of, but has moved away; and hence I am at the close of this, my second year, alone, without sympathy, without christian supporters, discouraged and cast down. I know not whether I shall attempt to supply this pulpit another year. The Lord direct.

Need of Efficient Laymen.

Next to a deep and thorough work of grace in the hearts of myself and people, we need in this place, as well as throughout this State, good substantial laymen, who can hold up the hands of the minister as he battles for the truth as it is in Jesus. In the three little churches to which I now minister, there are but two members who will pray in public; and but a single one who will take the responsibility of superintending our Sabbath schools. Consequently we can have no prayer meetings as a church, and our Sabbath schools are poorly conducted by a superintendent from another denomination, who, at every "big meeting" that occurs in the region, finds it convenient to leave the school, and attend these gatherings.

We need ministers in this State, double the number we now have. But could each church in Missouri have two or three working, God-fearing laymen, whose example would be felt by the rest of the church, and by the world, and by whose prayers and coöperation the minister's hands should be held up, I have no doubt that within five years, by the blessing of Heaven, these now feeble vines would become strong, and the influence of the church increased a hundred fold.

WISCONSIN.

Laboring amid Prejudices.

We have had a goodly number of converts, considering the smallness of the population we have to operate on, the Americans being reduced to fifteen families in the village; and the Welsh, English, and Norwegians, who compose the greater part of the population, being so strongly sectarian and clannish, that, with a few exceptions, they will not come into our congregations. Yet we are on friendly terms with them, and we trust their prejudices are wearing away, and that the rising generation, with some few others, are receiving benefit from our influence. Eleven united with our church at the last communion, ten of them by profession. Others are expected to unite soon.

Course of Labors with the Young.

Last spring, there was more than usual attention among the children and youth, and four or five hopeful conversions. These, with five others, I formed into a class for religious instruction, to meet once a week. Of late, quite a number of others have joined the class, so that it now numbers more than twenty, who are from 9 to 18 years of age; most of whom give some evidence of piety. Six of the number have already become members of the church, and several more will probably join at our next communion. Considering this class as a most hopeful part of my charge, and the course pursued with them as highly acceptable to the parents, as well as productive of their knowledge of scripture truth and moral culture, I will briefly state my manner of conducting the class. All who manifest a desire for salvation, promise to seek the Lord, abstain from vicious practices, and attend the weekly meetings, are permitted to unite with the class. The class meeting is held immediately after the Sabbath school, in the afternoon of the Sabbath. It is opened with prayer and singing; a few remarks are made; after which I inquire of each one the state of his mind, his progress in religious knowledge, trials and temptations, giving such as choose an opportunity to pray. We then close with a few words of advice, encouragement, and admonition, such as their cases may require, and with singing one of the songs of Zion. As there is more than usual interest in the class at the present time, a prayer meeting is held every Wednesday eve, at 6 o'clock, for one hour, when no one makes an excuse for want of feeling or lack of gifts. I have scarcely a doubt that I shall meet them all in heaven. It appears to me that such a class is just the thing for most, if not all, of our congregations; and where a judicious course is pursued with the members, there would probably more or less from its ranks unite in church fellowship every communion season. It is to be feared, if we may judge from the annual statistics of the churches, that far too little attention is given by pastors to the youthful part of their charge. They certainly form a most promising part, are more susceptible of religious impressions, and are far easier led into the way they should go than adults are; and when hopefully converted, are not half so likely to fall away, if tenderly nursed and taken care of. I merely throw out these hints; if there be a better way, let it be pointed out, that we may walk therein.

Temperance Revival.

There has been quite a revival here of late on the subject of temperance. We have lectures and discussions one evening every week, and are determined, if possible, to have a law passed this winter by our legislature like that of Maine. The people are wide awake throughout the State for such legislation, and are determined the rummies shall no longer have it in their own way. The trial of two cases for murder in this county at the last term of court—both committed in grogeries—cost the county more than $3,000. In fact, about three fourths of our county tax accrues in a similar way. The people will not endure it much longer.

Drain of Emigration.

I am not given to forebodings of evil, yet I fear that at the close of another quarter, I shall have to report numerous dismissals from this church to the churches of the "El Dorado." According to present appearances and calculations, near 30 of our 40 members will be on the plains, or crossing the Isthmus, in a few months, with many others of the congregation. Is not this too bad? Is it not truly discouraging to a minister who has been toiling and laboring with much self-denial to build up a church, that after five or six years of hope and fear, he finds that out of about 80 persons whom he has received into the church, only about 15 remain; the other 70 having gone to other fields, taking with them the dear youths and children, whom he has nurtured and watched over with a shepherd's care, and who were the hope of future years? I assure you it is a sore trial to part with them. It seems that no one of your 1,000 missionaries is so severely tried in this respect as I am. Many in whose minds the seed of the kingdom had been sown, and in which it had begun to vegetate and spring up, who were truly hopeful, are suddenly removed, before they were rooted and grounded in the truth; perhaps to wither and die in some ungenial soil.

But it is a consolation to remember that "The Lord Jehovah reigns!" I do therefore rejoice, and will rejoice; and trust in him who is the hope of Israel, and who has said, "Lo, I am with you always," and "My grace is sufficient for thee." God doeth all things well.

The California excitement never was greater than now. Several persons have recently returned from the mines with their bags of gold, and in a few weeks are to return with their families, to take up their abode in the land of Ophir. This is too much for poor human nature to resist; hence this great stir to go and gather the golden harvest.

Interest in Bible Studies.

My Bible class increases in number and interest. We attend to it during the intermission, in connection with the Sabbath-school. Our lesson yesterday was upon the offer of the Gospel by Paul and Barnabas, to the Jews, and upon their rejection, its offer to the Gentiles. It was a deeply interesting subject, one which occupied our time, and truly enlisted all our feelings. I endeavor to make it as familiar as possible. We sit down with the Bible in our hands, and talk it over, and when we close, our hearts, like the disciples on their way to Emmaus, "burn within us." Our Sabbath school is interesting.

Excursion.

I have made a missionary tour into the country for the purpose of ascertaining the spiritual wants of the people in the back towns of this county. I left home on foot, in company with one of our deacons, on Friday. We had previously sent out notices of our contemplated visit, into several settlements, but did not fill the appointment on Friday evening, as the small-pox had broken out in the district, and no collection could be had there; nor did we feel safe in venturing too near it. We therefore took a circuitous route, preaching from house to house, and leaving tracts, which I had recently obtained from the Society in New York. On Saturday, at evening, we arrived at the most distant point and put up for the night. In the morning we were informed that the people had hired a preacher in that place, and that that was the day for his appointment. We called him in and explained to him the object of our visit. He received us very cordially, and invited me to his school-house, and to fill his place. As I had apologized to him I thought the same courtesy was due to the people. After I rose to name my text, I remarked that I was not aware, until that morning, that they had the Gospel preached statedly to them; had I known it, I should have spent the day at some place where it was not preached. As the sentence fell from my lips, an elderly gentleman replied, "We don't have it much, sir;" leaving me to my own conclusion, either that they did not have much preaching there, or if they did, that they did not have much Gospel with it. Be that as it may, I preached to a very attentive audience, and when I closed I was almost instantly surrounded, and intreated to visit them again. As I had another appointment in a neighboring district, I made ready and started for that place. In the afternoon I preached again to a less congregation than in the morning. After tea, we wound our way to another appointment, and in the evening preached a short discourse, and then turned the meeting into a conference, and had a very good season. We then retired for the night to a beloved brother's house, where, after a seasonable chat, we bowed and committed ourselves to him who watches, with more than a father's care, the tents of those that fear him, and retired for repose. Nothing of uncommon interest transpired until I reached my humble mansion on Tuesday morning.

I do not suppose, dear brother, that you can feel the interest in this story that I do; but when I look at the goodness of God manifested to me—who, but a few months since, was unable to walk half a mile, or to preach at all—now able, in the course of a few days, to travel twenty miles or more, preach thrice on the same day, and during my absence from home, visit twenty or thirty families, and hold religious conversation with all to whom I could gain access; I am sure that I ought to record his loving kindness.

This matter, however, is valuable to me chiefly because I have had an opportunity to see for myself the condition of the people, both as it regards this world and the other.

As it regards this world, the people in general are in a thriving condition, though most of them poor. They are composed of two classes, so far as they are American, who are young, with small families, and have come here with small means to make them a home; and those who are more advanced in life, either to retrieve a lost fortune, or to enlarge their farms and settle their children about them. There are in this county improvements of from forty to a hundred acres, which ten years ago were an unbroken wilderness. Some have good dwelling-houses and barns, others only log-houses. Their school-houses are generally comfortable.

Their moral condition, is what you would naturally suppose it would be. They have but "little Gospel" among them; consequently the Sabbath is but little regarded. There are some, no doubt, of the people of God, who are thirsting for present privileges, and mourning over past ones, which, while they enjoyed them, they too lightly esteemed. There are many backsliders, some apostates, and many who care for nothing beyond this world. We need here one who can go into these settlements and comfort Zion, and labor with the wandering, and seek out the lost, and preach Christ to all. This, indeed, you have attempted to supply in the person of brother M——; but what is one missionary among so many?

From Rev. John Lewis, Platteville, Grant Co.

The "mining region" of Western Wisconsin, has been regarded as among the most forbidding fields of missionary effort. The diverse origin and character of the population, the nature of their pursuits, and the almost entire absence of evangelical influences in the early history of these settlements, have created obstacles, many and great, to the progress of the truth. Yet the seed planted and watered with much self-denial and prayer has not been lost. God has given the increase. The statements which follow, will be the more grateful to the friends of Missions, in view of the peculiarities of the field to which they relate.

Further Aid Declined.

The church under my care has enjoyed, during the last quarter, a good degree of temporal and spiritual prosperity, and everything among us seems to be taking a more stable and permanent form. They have decided to undertake my support in future without the aid of the A. H. M. S. In consequence of emigration to California, their pecuniary ability has not increased for two years past, but they are disposed to exert themselves to the utmost, rather than ask continued aid from your funds. It will cost them a hard struggle to meet all the expenses of the churches, but I trust they will succeed and thus enable you to extend aid to some other feeble church. By the blessing of God, they hope hereafter, not only to sustain themselves, but also to increase, from year to year, the amount raised for the various benevolent operations of the day. I can assure you, that you have the thanks of this church for your past aid, when without you they could not possibly have sustained the institutions of the Gospel. You hold a place in the hearts and the confidence the churches of this region, which not be lost.

Eight Years in the Mining Region.

It is now eight years since I came to this mining region under your commission, and if I have accomplished anything here for the cause of my master, I have done it as your instrument. I could neither have come hither, nor remained without your aid. I am thankful that the Great Head of the Church sent me to this mining region, and to you for your constant support. I rejoice that my acquaintance with one of the active members of your Society, who had been in the mines at an early day, was the means of directing my attention hither. I have not seen amidst all my discouragement, the first hour when I have wished myself back in the East. I loved my field from the first, and my attachment has strengthened every year. With other brethren in the ministry, I have prayed for divine aid in taking possession of this whole field for the Lord, and with his permission, here will I live, here will I labor, here will I wear out, here will I die, and here will I be buried. I have been greatly encouraged by what I have been permitted to see accomplished. When I came to the country, there were only two ministers within the bounds of this Convention. Now there are twelve, and fields prepared for several more. A still larger number of churches have been organized, and some of them are becoming independent of foreign aid. Every church in our bounds has been organized under your auspices, aided by your funds, and could not have sustained their ministers without your assistance.

Estimate of Home Missions.

If the cause of Christ is to advance in this valley, I have learned to regard your Society as one of the necessary instrumentalities. May the day be far distant when you shall be compelled to deny to the feeble churches of this new country your accustomed aid. I can conceive of no event which would cast a deeper gloom over our Western Zion. I speak not disparagingly of other modes of evangelizing the land, when I say that for the permanent upbuilding of the church of Christ; for securing both to the present and to future generations the institutions of the Gospel, your Society has no equal. No candid, careful observer, who has lived upon Home Missionary ground for a series of years, will come to any other conclusion. There is a permanent efficiency about your mode of operations that gives them inestimable value.

But your operations are not only absolutely necessary and permanently efficient; they are also peculiarly economical. I am well satisfied that no money which the Church expends, yields a more certain or a larger dividend. I should be glad to know how the amount your Society now grants to the churches in this State, will compare with what these same churches will contribute to the treasury of the Lord twenty five years hence. The seed you are sowing, yields not all its fruit in one season, or two, or ten, but will continue to ripen for generations yet to come. May the Head of the Church ever smile on your efforts, grant you favor in the eyes of the churches, and scatter every threatening cloud that rises above your horizon.

While we cordially reciprocate the sentiments of kindness expressed in the foregoing communication, and take leave of the writer, as a missionary and correspondent, with regret, we rejoice with him, that through the blessing of God upon his labors, we are permitted to transfer the church to which he ministers, from the list of the Society's beneficiaries, to that of its supporters.

A Church Resuscitated.

I went recently to Manchester, and in company with Rev. G. C. Clark, commenced a protracted meeting. Our going thither had been made known to a portion of the citizens only; not at all to such as reside beyond the limits of the village. Still there were enough present, even the first evening, to encourage us; and our congregations gradually increased for more than a week, till they embraced a large proportion of the inhabitants of the place, giving every night, the most fixed attention to the truth. Those in denominational sympathy with us, were few in number, and Christians of other names, with three or four exceptions, did not come up to our help, further than to be present in our solemn assemblies. But non-professors evinced a deepening interest, that led us to expect much good would be done. Almost all this class in the community were generally with us; and would remain through exercises protracted for three hours, apparently without weariness; and that, too, not for once merely, but during a succession of evenings. This it was that induced me to remain there, notwithstanding none, for a long time, came out on the Lord's side. I knew that other places werewaiting for me, and I longed to go into some field more promising. But an advantage had been gained. There was an interest taken in our public services, on the part of those whom we aimed more particularly to benefit; an interest said to have been greater than they had ever manifested before, and which might never again exist in them. To leave the place amid such circumstances, I felt would be downright cruelty. So we continued to labor with much to dishearten, on the one hand, and to encourage on the other; anticipating less, however, from professed Christians generally, than from those who made no such pretensions. At times, our faith was weak; then it would revive and gain strength. The state of suspense in which we were, was exceedingly trying; and it continued till the weather and walking became so unfavorable, that we began to think we must leave, with the lamentation, "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?"

But it was at this time that God graciously interposed in our behalf. We could not count on many conversions; but it was a matter of great rejoicing, that even one should experience a saving change. We now began to cherish the expectation, that this would be true of "the many;" for, we knew they were agitating the subject, and somewhat deeply felt its importance. But there they were, banded together, not by covenant engagements, but by sympathy and fear; and it was impossible, by the influences which we could bring to bear upon them, to induce any considerable number to come out and be separate.

Still, there was much done that is fitted to call forth our gratitude. Preliminary measures were taken towards the erection of a Presbyterian house of worship; a building greatly needed, and almost indispensable to the prosperity of the Christian cause, in the village and neighborhood. A church almost extinct from want, not of members, but of spiritual life, was partially revived, and five persons were added to their number, one by letter and four by profession. Christians of other denominations were as much, perhaps more, quickened than those of our own. Some eight or nine individuals were hopefully converted, the majority of whom will probably connect themselves with the Baptist church. And there was a general thoughtfulness and interest about religion, such as is said never to have been known there before. My prayer is, that the good resulting from that effort, may be apparent in the future.

From Rev. W. E. Catlin, Carthage, Hancock Co.

Hungry for the Truth.

Soon after my last report, I visited Montebello. As there seemed to be no other way of effecting the object, I preached here in the morning, and then rode down to the school-house, ten miles distant, where an appointment had been made for me in the afternoon; and although I was more than an hour behind my time, in consequence of missing the track over the broad prairie, I found a large congregation waiting for me, only one or two having gone away. After apologizing for my delay, I was heard most attentively, while holding up Christ as the only way of salvation. I learned that the church had a merely nominal existence, and that a laborer is much needed there. A large and flourishing settlement is stretching out into the broad prairie, and it is much to be deplored that there is no one there to "strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die," and to gather others into the fold. I urged the attendance of delegates from the church to the annual meeting of our Association, soon to be holden at Quincy, in order that their need might be brought to the knowledge of that body, and something, if possible, done in their behalf. Such a delegation, accordingly attended, though not appointed by the church, but by the community; and they were instructed to say, that those who commissioned them were determined to have preaching, if not such as they would, such as they could get.

Death-bed Testimony.

A physician has died during the last year. He was very profane and never attended church but twice, while he resided here. He sent for me during the night, a short time before his death. I instantly obeyed the unexpected summons. When I reached the house, the attending physician informed me that he had been restless and uneasy; a load seemed to be on his mind. They endeavored to ascertain what it was, called up his wife, and did all they could, but it was of no avail. At last he asked them to send for me. When I went in, I found him calm, though expecting death. The physician, to put me perfectly at ease, remarked, that he was strong enough to converse freely; and added, "he is not so near death as he thinks." "That," interrupted the sick man, "makes no difference. I have a subject that I want to talk about, whether I die or recover." He then told me that while at college, he thought that he had experienced religion during a revival, acknowledged the wickedness of his course while here, expressed his deep regret, and his determination, if spared, to lead a new life, and asked to be directed to the Saviour. He was perfectly calm, and evinced no terror, no apprehension of death. I said those things which I thought suitable to his case. He seemed soothed and quieted. The next morning he sent for a lawyer with whom he had been at enmity, acknowledged his faults and asked forgiveness. He lived two or three days, but was so low that I could not again converse with him. What his real state was, whether he did truly turn to God, I could not satisfy myself. But I felt that in this village, this dying testimony of a man who had lived such a life, was important. His funeral was largely attended by a class that seldom attend church; so that his feelings, in view of death, were well known.

From Rev. C. F. Hudson, Sycamore, De Kalb Co.

House of Worship Completed.

We have this day dedicated our house of worship to God. It has been five and a half years in building, and was, at one time, a pile of timbers, which the church almost despaired of ever completing. Three years ago, twelve members of the society agreed to an assessment of their property, to be taxed for the expense of the house. The tax, which proved to be ten per cent. of their substance, was cheerfully paid in notes to the trustees. The payment of some of them has caused embarrassment, but no complaint. It has been finally completed at an expense of $2,000, in a style of unusual neatness, and the slips found a very ready sale. We may now say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." It is our hope that, as the house is more prized for the labor and toil which it has cost, it may be more frequented, and the prayers for the Gospel preached in it, more earnest and more abundantly answered.

The Churches and the Crops.

The partial failure of the great staple of the Northwest for several successive years, has deeply affected the temporal and spiritual interests of the missionary churches. By the removals and pecuniary embarrassments it has occasioned, it has greatly reduced their strength, prolonging the period of their dependence upon this Society, and often cutting off a portion of the missionary's scanty support. The effect is no less adverse to the spiritual growth of these churches. Frequent communications are received of the same tenor as the following:

Hitherto our farmers have been depending upon their wheat to raise means to answer almost all demands for cash, and this is the third year of its failure in quality and quantity. On the first year of its failure, all felt the shock, and from year to year it has been growing more and more severe, until at last the pressure has come with a weight which is past endurance. From this cause, nineteen-twentieths of the people are in debt and cannot pay. Those who can, are borrowing money at the ruinous rate of twenty-five per cent., and some at even higher rates of interest. Property is being sacrificed under the hammer at a rate that one unacquainted with the facts would hardly believe. For instance, a man near me had his wagon sold for one dollar, and another had his fanning-mill sold for fifty cents. Almost the whole community are offering their farms for sale, and it is the opinion of the most observing, that a general change of property must be the result of this embarrassed condition of the people. It is with great difficulty that money can be obtained to pay the taxes, which are much higher than formerly. But the greatest evil is the impression upon the religious character of the people. Under such circumstances there is much to turn the minds of men away from the converting and saving grace of God. In the church there is lukewarmness in relation to the salvation of souls and the honor of Christ. The Gospel will be poorly supported, and for benevolent objects the income must be small. As a minister, I feel the weight of all these consequences in relation to the interests of Zion in my field. But the Lord reigns now, as ever, and will bring good out of all this derangement of worldly interests; and with this view of the matter, there is encouragement to toil on, leaving all these interests in the hand of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. May the Lord appear for us in our extremity, and be glorified in the building up of Zion.

Learning How.

It has now been one year since I entered upon my labor as a western missionary; and as I look over the field of my operations, I find little to record in point of real progress. But I hope you will not feel that I have been idle, or that in reality nothing has been accomplished.

Although I have preached regularly every Sabbath—with one or two exceptions on account of sickness—established and conducted weekly prayer-meetings, organized Sabbath schools and furnished them with libraries, taught singing schools during three months of the year, gathered up the materials and prepared the way for organizing a church, visited the rich and the poor, the sick and the afflicted throughout a wide range of country, distributed tracts and religious books, attended two meetings of the Presbytery, and two of the Synod, varying from 40 to 180 miles distant, completed and dedicated one house of worship, and done many other things too numerous to mention; yet I do not feel that these, by any means, constitute the great burden of my labors. The great work of becoming thoroughly acquainted with my field in all its peculiarities, and preparing myself for future labor, has consumed no small share of my time. At first, I found myself ushered into a state of society with which I was wholly unacquainted. The people here are mostly from the South, and a southern character westernized, produces a peculiar cast of mind, to which I was a perfect stranger.

Now this character I must get hold of. I must learn to feel as they do, to think as they do, to reason as they do. "But this," you say, "would come as a matter of course." I did not find it so. It has cost me thought, reflection and intense study, to investigate this character and learn to appreciate their modes of thinking and feeling. My whole success in influencing the mind and moving the heart, seemed to turn on this very knowledge in which I was most deficient.

The Difference.

A stranger steps into a poor man's cabin, where there is a father or mother, and a large group of children. They give him a chair, and then sit down in silence. The children stand off at a proper distance, and gaze at the stranger with astonishment. He stays perhaps half an hour, says some good things, and then takes his hat and politely bids them good by. But he goes out the same stranger that he came in. With his ways of talking, feeling and acting, they were wholly unacquainted. They feel no interest in the man; they have no desire that he should return. His conversation made no definite impression upon the mind, because no common feeling was excited, and hence the whole impression was bad. Another man, equally a stranger, goes into the same cabin, but the way he takes off his hat, and the way he shakes hands, and the way he sits in his chair, excite the interest and call out the good feeling of every one in the family, and before they know it, he has stolen their hearts. The children come around him; and he tells them some curious things. The parents are interested, and thus the way is prepared for a half hour's pleasant and profitable conversation. He is no longer a stranger, but an acquaintance, and he goes away with the cordial invitation to repeat his visit; and the impression for good on that family will not soon be forgotten. By this means, he brings them to the church, to the prayer meeting, and the children to the Sabbath school. By this means he overcomes prejudice, meets error, and dispels ignorance. By this means he builds up Zion—out of coarse materials, it may be—but he lays the foundation for a church of Christ, which, after a few years of toil and struggling, will grow and prosper; and like the tree of life, its leaves will be for the healing of the nations.

From Rev. A. Loose, Winchester, Randolph Co.

Progress of Infidelity.

I am called upon to report the fearful progress of Infidelity, chiefly owing to the labors of some itinerant lecturers, who, under the veil of advocates of the slave and temperance, are seeking to propagate their vile sentiments by defaming the Bible, Christianity, the Church and its ministry. The results of their efforts are seen in the establishment of, so-called, literary societies, but really infidel clubs, in several school districts in this county. The meetings are held each Sabbath morning, and I fear, are more numerous attended than those in the house of God.

Struggles to Obtain a House of Worship.

The meeting-house in Winchester is now enclosed, and we hope soon to see the floor laid down, but shall not be able to make it fit for use this winter. Still, we have the consolation of believing that we have done what we could; and I cannot help thinking that if some of our brethren in Christ, to whose care our Great Head has committed his wealth, could see our subscription list, and our poverty, and the struggles made by most of our members to meet their voluntarily incurred liabilities, we should soon obtain what we need. Our prospects as to the speedy completion of our house are gloomy; still we are not discouraged. We have mutually pledged each other to do all we are able, and that being done, we shall wait and see what the Lord will do for us.

Lending to the Lord.

I cannot forbear relating an incident which will show the spirit of some of our members. One of our elders, who is not by any means wealthy, and can scarcely be said to be in moderate circumstances, consented to act as our treasurer; and in the execution of the duties of his office, he soon paid out, from his own limited resources, more money than had been collected. Yet, as demand after demand has been made upon the treasury, he has cheerfully met them, generally remarking, that he was lending to one who would amply repay him. A few days ago, the post brought him two letters, each informing him of the collection of debts amounting, in the whole, to more than $250. "There," he exclaimed to me, as I heard him read them, "I have now got good interest for the money I have loaned to the Saviour; for those debts I had long ago given up as total losses."

Such self-denying efforts to build the Lord's house, though for the present not joyous, but grievous, have their reward in the increased efficiency of those who are "exercised thereby."

From Rev. D. S. Altman, Richmond, Wayne Co.

Wayne County is the most populous in the State, containing about 26,000 inhabitants, a considerable portion of whom are Germans. Evangelical effort, in behalf both of the German and native population, has been exceedingly inadequate, and the region has been distinguished as the stronghold of Universalism and Infidelity. Mr. A. commenced his labors there about one year ago, preaching to the Germans at Richmond, and three other places, distant 6, 15, and 20 miles, respectively. The following paragraph will show that he has not labored in vain.

Throughout the whole of my field, things appear to be quite encouraging. Although a worse than Egyptian darkness has hung over the minds of the people, the day is beginning to dawn, so that the people are beginning at least "to see men as trees walking." Many who a few months ago were careless and prayerless, are beginning to become serious and attentive to the Gospel. I have just closed a meeting which lasted nine days, at Philomath, or (vulgarly) "The Devil's Headquarters." The result was most glorious. Satan was routed, amidst all his Universalist agents, and thirteen of his subjects taken captive, all of whom have since enlisted in the army of the Prince of Peace. May God keep them faithful until the day of final redemption. You may think this a small matter, but here it is a very great victory.

At all my other preaching points, there appears to be considerable interest. "Brethren, pray for us."

OHIO.

In our endeavors to keep pace with the advancing tide of western emigration, we are in danger of withdrawing our attention and sympathy from the older portions of the field. But while more than 300 churches in New England are compelled still to seek missionary aid, it ought not to surprise us if some of the oldest communities at the West, are subject to the same necessity. Southeastern Ohio has been occupied for a longer period than most other portions of the Western States. The first settlement formed beyond the Ohio river, by emigrants from the East, was at Marietta, in 1788. But various causes have retarded the increase of population, and the progress and prevalence of evangelical truth.

Of late, however, the physical resources of this portion of the State have been rapidly developed, and as a consequence, it is assuming new interest as a field of missionary labor.

From Rev. H. R. Howe, Pine Grove, Gallia Co.

It is difficult, in a brief communication, to set forth the obstacles which impede the progress of the Gospel, in this section of the State. Several adjacent counties, Scioto, Lawrence, Jackson, Gallia and Meigs, lie in a large bend in the Ohio river. The face of the country is rough, and the soil reputed poor; hence emigration for many years has passed by, either on the National road, or on the river. In this section we have no such facilities for internal commerce, as Canals, Railroads, Turnpikes, &c. In addition to this, the country was settled generally by illiterate and indigent families, not from the East, but from the South, consequently, there was no agricultural, mechanical, or educational enterprise; no public spirit in reference to roads, bridges, school-houses or churches. For years after I came to this county, (1832) I knew of but two frame or brick school-houses within its bounds, and when I traveled through Jackson Co., in 1835 and 1836, as a missionary, I found not one, even in the villages. The country had then been settled for 30 years or more. During all this time, while the church slept on the subject of Missions, the enemy was sowing tares. The people seldom heard any thing that was called preaching, and when they did hear a something called a sermon, because the man had a Bible, and took a text, it was often a jargon of truth and error, sense and nonsense. I have preached to hundreds, probably, who had never heard a sermon from a Presbyterian or Congregational minister in their lives. The forms of worship which were presented for the people to adopt, were in perfect keeping with the preaching.

As years have rolled on, preachers have been multiplied, the great mass of them ignorant and fanatical. A public vitiated taste has, in this manner, been formed, which constitutes one of the greatest difficulties in building up the church.

On the other hand, there are considerations which show the importance of sustaining these feeble churches. One is, that this part of the State has lately begun to attract the attention of people from abroad. It has, heretofore, been undervalued. Its mineral resources, rich and abundant, have just begun to be developed. Iron, salt and coal, promise to become a source of vast wealth.

From Rev. R. Wilkinson, Pomeroy, Meigs Co.

Fruits of Five Years' Labor.

Five years ago I came here, and found a little band of eight members, anxious to enjoy the privileges of the Gospel, but hardly daring to hope that they ever should. They had no place of worship, and were not able to build one. They were poor and disheartened. Now that little band of eight has grown to be sixty three in number. We have a neat house of worship, finished and paid for, which cost $1,800. We have under our care, about 140 Sabbath school children. Five years ago, we had only one school—a district school. Now we have three such schools, and two academies. During this period our population has nearly doubled. Such is a specimen of the changes which have taken place. During this period, I have preached regularly at four different places; and in my whole field, and under my ministry, seventy-five souls have been hopefully converted to God; of this number, twenty-two have joined the church in Pomeroy. Five years ago, we had a congregation of from 40 to 50 persons; now from 100 to 150. While I feel encouraged by such facts, I do not feel as if all had been done which needs to be done, or that the time has come for lying by, and taking our ease. Much remains to be done in this particular field, and the waste places around are increasing in number and extent.

Claims of South-Eastern Ohio.

I cannot close this column once more urging the eastern Ohio. After long deliberation, I in this portion of the West most promising, if not field for the missionary west of Alleghany is aware that a different view by many who have been aware, too, that many attempts have been made and it has been pronounced and hopeless field. But I confess that I have formed a different opinion, after spending five years in it. It is true the country is rough, broken and hilly; and much of the soil is comparatively poor. It is true, too, that its inhabitants generally are poor, and the churches small and weak. But these facts may be offset by other facts. The country is remarkably healthy. The soil is underlaid with the richest mines of coal, iron and salt, which are already successfully worked, and are rapidly enriching the whole region, at least so far forth as is needful to sustain schools, and churches, and to furnish all the means of intelligence and comfort. A large portion of the population are of New England origin, and naturally enterprising, and easily inclined to improvement. And further, this whole region is comparatively, nay, I may say, almost entirely free from that "doting about questions, and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, and evil surmising," which are such mighty obstacles to the progress of the Gospel in many other places. Error, too, of every kind, is weak and ready to vanish away under the light of the Gospel.

We have, at this moment, in Athens Presbytery, nine vacant churches—vacant because there is no one to supply them with the ministrations of the Gospel. Some of these churches are located in very promising fields.

We need, at the present moment, in S. E. Ohio, twenty Presbyterian ministers. All could be located in hopeful fields, in a short time. The people are willing to do more now, for the support of the Gospel, than ever before. One farmer, in Athens County, where a church was organized, one year ago, and where they have a new meeting house almost completed, told me last week, that if a minister could be obtained, he would give him his whole board—if a single man—and make a cash subscription besides. The same spirit animates many other men, and prevails in many of these destitute places. Do send us some young men, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost; and send them soon.

A Stronghold taken.

Within the bounds of the — church, is a neighborhood where, one year ago, no one had ever professed faith in Christ and obedience to him. For fifty years, this neighborhood has been, to a great extent, under the influence of infidelity.

When I began my labors there I was told they would do no good; others had tried in vain. But I determined, in the name of Christ and in the power of his Gospel, to try again. I first went through the neighborhood with tracts and personal conversation. Then I took a colporteur through it, and some of his books were left at every house. I was also called to preach a funeral sermon on the death of a prominent man in the place. All the neighborhood were present. At the close of the exercises I made an appointment to preach in their school-house the next Sabbath. This has been followed since by regular preaching, which has been of the calm, clear, instructive and pointed kind, as much so as I was able to give them.

After gaining their acquaintance and confidence, the time seemed to have come for striking a harder blow. I held a protracted meeting last winter in their neighborhood, which resulted in the hopeful conversion of four or five there, and some others out of the neighborhood. At the opening of last spring a Sabbath School Library, and the Youth's Library of the Tract Society, were bought by them, and a Sabbath school was kept up during the summer, with a marked influence for good. This was a new thing among them. Some took a part, but the most looked on and said, "What will this come to?" but all, old and young, read the books. Over 2,000 passages of Scripture were committed to memory in the school. During the last month I have held another protracted meeting of four days there, and six more give evidence of a change of heart, and have been received to the church. Four of them are heads of families. Including a family who have recently moved into the neighborhood, we now have twelve members of the church there.

It seems but little that has been done, but yet it has been enough to turn the tide of infidelity, and improve the moral and religious character of the place in a great degree.

May these few prove faithful, and become but the first fruits of a rich harvest of souls for the garner of heaven!

MICHIGAN.

An All-Night Meeting.

I was called to attend a funeral on the first of Sept., 20 miles north-east of this place. It was the funeral of an aged father in Israel. He and his wife were members of a church at the East. Ten years ago they came to this place, with a large family, all impenitent, and several of the children had large families of their own. He had hoped to have a church, but all his efforts seemed to fail, and he died with overwhelming desolations all around him. He spent every moment of his dying breath in warning, praying and pleading with his children not to cover him in his grave until they had submitted to God. While at the grave, and as I was about starting for home, one of the sons said, "Mr. J—, you must go home with us and spend the night, I cannot go without you, I am an awful sinner, and I never can sleep again before submitting to God." Of course I went home with them. We had an all-night meeting, and I trust that three of the sons, and one daughter-in-law, submitted to God. In the morning two family altars were reared. These families plead hard to have me go there and preach, but this is out of my power.

Miscellaneous.

Rev. William Kirby.

The readers of the Home Missionary have already been informed, through the religious papers, that this beloved brother—this intelligent, devoted minister of Christ—this efficient and faithful Agent of the American Home Missionary Society in Central Illinois, departed this life at Winchester, on the 20th of December last. He left his home in Jacksonville, about ten days previous, in usual health, and while engaged in efforts for the upbuilding of a feeble church, a sudden cold threw him into a lung fever, which, in a few days, at the residence of a brother, terminated his laborious and useful life. His funeral was attended in Jacksonville by a large concourse of people, mourning their bereavement of a most highly esteemed and valued citizen and friend, as well as of a christian minister, whose life, in the midst of them, had so happily adorned and enforced the religion which he professed.

Mr. Kirby was appointed to the Agency of the American Home Missionary Society, in July, 1845. His long continued residence in the State, his familiar acquaintance with its institutions, the character which he had acquired and the respect entertained for him as a preacher and a pastor, his sound judgment, his consistent piety, as well as his active habits, and his love of the missionary work, qualified him eminently for the service to which he was called. In it he engaged with his whole heart; and to it consecrated all the resources, physical and intellectual, which God had given him. And with what success he fulfilled his mission, the many churches which he encouraged and strengthened; the congregations to which he broke the bread of life; the institutions which he nurtured; the brethren whom he counselled in their difficulties, sympathised with in their trials, and aided and cheered on in every good work; the spirit of missions awakened by his teachings; the souls saved by his labors, and yet to be saved through instrumentalities which he set in motion, will testify when we stand with him before the Son of Man.

In the midst of his usefulness, he has been cut down. A deeply afflicted family, the community in which he lived, the Church of God, the missionary institution mourn their loss. But death did not meet him as a foe. It came to conduct him to the awards of the good and the faithful—the recompense of those who turn many unto righteousness.

The following notice of his life we take from a communication from Rev. President Sturtevant, of Illinois College, than whom few of the many friends of the deceased had better opportunities to know and appreciate his worth.

Mr. Kirby was graduated at Yale College in the year 1827. His college life was marked by diligence and success as a student, by a steady, conscientious piety and unwavering purpose to devote his life to the christian ministry. He was one of those upright and decided characters, over whom the temptations of college life had no power. He received on his graduation one of the higher honors of his class, and was universally respected by his fellow students.

Immediately after his graduation, he entered on the study of Theology in connection with the Theological Department of his Alma Mater. About this time, Home Missions were just rising to that sublime position among the benevolent enterprises of our country, which they have now for so many years deservedly occupied. The American Home Missionary Society had been formed a few months previous, and the conception of the vastness of our great central valley, and of that moral enterprise which had for its object the taking possession of a domain of such extent and resources, was just rising before many christian minds in all its dignity and grandeur. With this idea, the theological students at Yale, at the time referred to, sympathized most intensely. It sent a thrill of enthusiasm through many a young heart. In this rising interest, in behalf of the destitute in our own land, Mr. Kirby largely shared.

In the winter of 1828-9, he united himself with a number of his youthful brethren in an association, for the purpose of promoting collegiate education and Home Missions in some destitute portion of the western valley. The State of Illinois was selected as the field of their labors. Mr. Kirby was one of seven young men who originally constituted the association, and who, in coöperation with certain gentlemen previously residing in the State, laid the foundations of Illinois College. Of those seven who entered into those obligations to one another and to God about twenty-three years ago, Mr. Kirby is the first that has been called to his account. The association ultimately numbered some twelve individuals, and though for nearly a quarter of a century they have been exposed to all the malarious influences commonly supposed to belong to the climate, two only, up to this time, have fallen asleep.

Having completed his course of theological studies, Mr. Kirby emigrated to Illinois in the spring of 1831, and was employed for two years as an Instructor in Illinois College. In the spring of 1833, he entered on his active missionary labors, first with the Church at Union Grove, Putnam Co., and subsequently at Blackstone's Grove, Will Co. Here, Mr. Kirby and his family experienced a larger share of privation and hardship than usually falls to the lot even of the pioneer in the Home Missionary enterprise; yet he performed the labors and the studies of the christian minister with uncomplaining cheerfulness.

In 1836, he accepted the invitation of the Congregational church at Mendon, Adams Co., to become their minister. In this field of labor he continued about nine years, during which time, several seasons of refreshing were enjoyed and a goodly number added to the Lord. The Church arose from a feeble Church, dependent on the Home Missionary Society in part for the support of its pastor, to a position of comparative strength and independence.

In the year 1845, Mr. Kirby received and accepted the appointment of Agent for the American Home Missionary Society, first for the whole State, and subsequently for the central and southern portions of it. In this station he continued till his death, enduring an amount of toil, privation and hardship, of which no one can have much conception who has not been engaged in a similar service. Long and painful absences from his family, exposure, in a sparsely-settled and ill-provided country, to the rigors of winter and the scorching heats of summer, and all the discomforts of the traveler among a frontier population, were borne by him with uncomplaining fortitude and cheerfulness for the love he bore the kingdom of Christ.

His end corresponded to his life. His disease was pneumonia. His illness was short, and so severe as to admit of very little conversation. The only conversation of any length which occurred was with Rev. Gideon C. Clark, of Winchester. The conversation was introduced spontaneously by the suffering and dying servant of God; and in it he expressed an assured hope in Christ—a willingness to go or stay—a strong conviction of the duty of Christians to coöperate with one another notwithstanding minor differences, and an earnest and tender affection for the cause of his Divine Master.

Mr. Kirby's most striking characteristic was his thorough, self-sacrificing devotion to the kingdom of Christ. It was evident to all who knew him, that he lived for it. He was well known to be a man of superior capacity for business. He was himself fully conscious of such a capacity; and yet he led a very laborious and self-denying life, for the most part, for the nominal salary of $400, subject to all those practical deductions with which Home missionaries are but too familiar.

His loss is deeply felt by the friends of the Redeemer. As a Trustee of Illinois College, and as the friend and adviser of our feeble churches, and our young missionaries just girding on their armor for the conflict of life, it will be difficult to find his successor. He was a man you might consult in times of greatest difficulty or excitement with no fear of being repulsed by a narrow or selfish spirit, or of meeting any outbreak of passion. He never seemed to have any feelings which were not completely in subjection to the claims of his Master, nor any interests but Christ's interests. Alas, why does God call such men from the field in the very midst of their days and their usefulness? Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight.

Professor Stuart.

Very many of our brethren in the missionary work have been pupils of Professor Stuart, and are bereft, in his death, of a personal friend; and all of them have venerated his character, and felt their great indebtedness to his labors for the pleasure and profit with which they have studied the sacred oracles. We are confident, therefore, that we shall gratify them especially, by giving the following extracts from a report of the very able, graphic and impressive discourse of Professor Park at his funeral. We take the extracts from the "Congregationalist," and regret that we have not room for the report entire.

In January, 1810, just 42 years ago, Professor Stuart was inaugurated Professor of Sacred Literature in Andover Theological Seminary. His knowledge of the Hebrew then enabled him to translate, with the aid of Parkhurst's Lexicon, only five or six chapters of Genesis and a few Psalms. His acquaintance with the Greek language was far from being extensive. He was to be a self-made man. In about two years, he prepared a Hebrew Grammar without the points, for the immediate use of his pupils. They were obliged to copy it, day by day, from his written sheets. In the third year he published it at his own expense. To print a Hebrew Grammar was then a strange work. He was compelled to set up the types for about half the paradigms of verbs with his own hands. He taught the printers their art. Is he not fitly termed the father of Biblical philology in our land? That Grammar he afterwards enlarged and improved in successive editions, and the labor which he has expended upon it, would have filled up half the life of an ordinary man.

In consulting Schleusner's Lexicon he met, here and there, a German word. No one could explain to him its meaning. His curiosity was aroused. At an exorbitant price he obtained the apparatus for German study, and in a single fortnight had read the entire Gospel of John in that language. Self-taught, he persevered through Seiler's Biblische Hermeneutik, and this work introduced him to the wide range of German literature. He felt himself to be in a new world. It was that one volume which, through the generosity of the Trustees of the Institution, enabled him to fill our library with the richest collection of German treatises then in the land. For ten years he performed the rugged work of a pioneer, and in his maturer life he often said that he did not know how to begin the study of the Bible until he was forty years old. For forty years he had been in the wilderness. He entered late in life upon the promised possession. Nor was he merely alone in the efforts of the first ten years of his professorship. To have been simply friendless, would have been to him a relief. But the suspicions of good men were excited with regard to the results of his German study. He endured the whisperings of his brethren. Many of them met him with an averted face. Dark predictions were uttered concerning him, but he kept his eye fixed upon the distant goal. Morning after morning, he sallied forth from his house at five o'clock, through rain, hail, snow, storm, and as his attenuated figure breasted the winds of our cold winters, it seemed a type of his spirit, encountering manfully the opposition not of foes only, but of friends. The time at length arrived for developing the influence of his communion with the Teutonic mind. The Unitarian faith had acquired a dominant influence in our Commonwealth. Buckminster and Channing had commended it by the graces of their style, and by the beauties of their character. The celebrated Baltimore sermon had begun to attract a general admiration. At this crisis, Prof. Stuart published his Letters to Dr. Channing. The first edition was exhausted in a single week. Two other editions rapidly followed. His opponents admitted and admired his learning. His friends confessed their error in resisting his German progress. They felt the importance of it for the church. Before his day, scarcely one of our divines was acquainted with German literature. He has made it common. With a great sum, he obtained for us this freedom. For it, he endured a great fight of afflictions. He fought a good fight. He kept the faith. He came off a conqueror and more than a conqueror, through Him that loved him. Thousands of trembling Christians now triumphed in their strong deliverance. They honored him who had honored Christ. At this time, he entered upon a career of popularity as a scholar, which was, perhaps, unexampled in our religious annals. He disapproved of the adulation that was offered him. Such encomiums ought to be pronounced upon a mortal. F teries, however, more than frowns, did not deter him from his studies. In a few years he published his Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, which increased his transatlantic reputation. Soon afterward, he published his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, which was powerful enough to awaken an extensive and deep theological interest. In his later years, he has given to the world the results of a life's toil in his elaborate Commentary on the Apocalypse, that pyramid of labor, and his exposition of Ecclesiastes; and his last literary effort, a few days before his decease, was to correct for the press the final proof sheet of his Commentary on the Proverbs. During his life he printed twenty-four volumes, and carried several of them through the second and third editions; and his pamphlets, reviews and periodical essays, occupy more than two thousand octavo pages. All the labor immediately connected with these voluminous publications has been performed amid physical pain, during three, or at most three and a half hours of each day. He has never allowed himself to engage in what he called study, for a longer portion of the twenty-four hours. Those were his sacred hours. He was wont to commence them with secret but sometimes audible prayer, and occasionally with chanting a Psalm of David in the original Hebrew. While in his study, his mind moved like a swift ship. He bounded over the waves. It required a long time each day to repair his dismantled frame, his exhausted energies.

But although his writings have been read on the banks of the Mississippi and of the Danube, it is not by them that he has achieved his greatest triumphs. He lives in the souls of his pupils. He has stamped an image upon them. He has engraved deep lines on their character. Many a Professor in our colleges has reiterated the saying, "I first learned to think under the inspiration of Mr. Stuart. He first taught me how to use my mind." The excellence of a teacher does not consist in his lodging his own ideas in the memory of his pupils, but in arousing their individual powers to independent action, in giving them vitality, hope, fervor, life, dispelling their drowsiness, and urging them onward to self-improvement. The vivacity of Mr. Stuart when he met his pupils, his exuberance of anecdote, his quick thronging illustrations, his vivid portraiture of the prominent features of a theme astonished his class, and animated their literary zeal. The admiration of some of them was excessive. They almost looked upon him as a being from a higher world. No teacher in the land ever attracted to himself so many theological pupils. The number of our Alumni is 1,111. But the number of his scholars has been over 1,500. His classes were the largest in this or any other seminary. Men came to him from the Canadas, from Georgia and the farthest West. More than 70 of his pupils have been the Presidents or Professors of our highest literary institutions. More than a hundred of them have been Missionaries to the heathen. In the persons of these disciples, he has given an impulse to classical study among the colleges of our land, and has preached the gospel in ancient Nineveh, and under the shadow of Ararat, and in the wilds of Oregon.

The old age of Mr. Stuart honored God in illustrating the wealth of his word. In his sixty-seventh year, he read all the tragedies of Æschylus, merely for the sake of illustrating the sacred page. Once when he made a certain discovery of a fact in biblical interpretation, he could not sleep for more than thirty-six hours. They were hours of a grateful interest in the riches of the Book of books. His solace was in the word of God. At his death he had formed a plan for three years more of labor in expounding this volume. It never tired him. It was his meditation all the night. It presented to him exhaustless stores. When asked whether he retained his confidence in the great system of truths which he had defended, his emphatic reply was, "Yes." Have you any doubts with regard to your former principles? His energetic answer was "No." "I have long since learned," he said, "that feelings in religious experience are deceptive. I look mainly to my life for my evidence. I think my first aim in life has been to glorify God, and that I have been ready to labor and suffer for him." When afflicted with severe pains, he loved to repeat the words, "Wearisome days and nights hast Thou appointed unto me." He had thought of death long and carefully. He was familiar with it. He was ready for it. It was less to him than a Sabbath day's journey. When he heard the hope expressed that his last sickness would be unto life and not unto death, he replied, "Unto the glory of God, but unto death. I am prepared to die. O God, my spirit is in thy hand. Have mercy, but thy will be done." On the first Sabbath of the New Year, when the storm was howling around his dwelling, he fell asleep. Peaceful, as to a night's repose, he entered on his long rest.

Application for Aid.

In Andover, Ill., and the vicinity, are several colonies of Swedes, among whom the Home Missionary Society has sustained a missionary for the last two years. They are generally poor, but intelligent, industrious and religiously inclined. They belong to the Lutheran Church, but in their doctrinal views, and principles of church discipline, they harmonize substantially with the denominations sustaining this Society. Their circumstances, in this land of strangers, are such as strongly to recommend them to our christian sympathy.

To show our readers what manner of spirit they are of, and to awaken an intelligent interest in their behalf, we print, below, their recent application for our continued aid, in which these poor uneducated strangers present their condition and wants in their own simple way. The following is a literal translation from the original in the Swedish language.

Whereas, we, during two years have seen, and experienced the great interest you have taken in the situation of the Swedish Lutheran emigrants, and in the wants of their souls, by supporting and aiding a minister for us, therefore, we hereby render to you, next to God, our greatest and most humble thanks. We are strangers from a foreign country, and can neither read, nor understand the language, and the preachers of this country. It is, therefore, a great privilege to have a minister whom we understand, so that we can gather light, grace and strength, to the salvation of our souls. Indeed, what is more valuable than being able to say, at the evening of this lifetime: "My soul is safe?" But many of us, likely, have more time yet to live, and we need nourishment for our souls, but cannot ourselves support a minister, especially this year, during which the heavy rains have been very destructive; and we now are building churches, and many of us have no houses of our own, and we, chiefly here in Andover, very seldom get cash payment for our work, but victuals, or provisions only, therefore, it is very difficult to us to get along so as to be able to support a minister. Therefore, we most humbly pray for a year's assistance more, that we may have a minister whom we understand. Alas, it is true, that not all of our countrymen are friendly disposed to the word of truth, but we think, that "the same sun, that once beamed over the groves of Eden," Jesus Christ, who is the sun of righteousness and grace, even now has power enough to warm the dead bones, and to give life unto them; or we believe, that those who now do not want, also will, by the assiduous preaching of the word of God, and the persevering labor of our ministry, come to the knowledge of truth, and to the participation of grace. The greatest part of our church has helped our minister with work, and we will, for the future, do the same, but we cannot afford money, for we have none ourselves.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you, and us all for time and eternity. Amen.

Religious Charities of Massachusetts.

From a correspondent, whose statistical accuracy is seldom questioned, we have received the following, which speaks well for the good old orthodoxy of his native State:

Last autumn, an English gentleman set me to hunt up for him the statistics of benevolence in Massachusetts, for a single year,—wishing only to get the sum total of religious characters, as we understand that term, that is—voluntary contributions from our evangelical denominations for missionary and kindred objects. So far as I was able to ascertain the facts, for 1850, they are the following, viz: from the

Congregationalists,	$204,963 10
Baptists,	58,360 49
Episcopalians,	28,998 83
Methodists,	13,186 00
Others, F. W. Bapt., &c.	2,491 37
Total,	807,999 79

viz: for

Foreign Missions,	$127,662 68
Home do	62,477 81
Tracts,	29,187 29
Bibles,	20,449 26
Education for the ministry	20,111 08
All other objects,	48,111 65
	$307,999 79

From these figures it would seem that the Congregational Churches, which number scarcely more than one third of all the State, called evangelical, contributed about two thirds of the amount. Other deductions are easily made, which, to some minds, may possess an interest worth regarding.

Missions on the Pacific Coast.

THE opening of a new field of missionary effort on our western coast, has greatly increased the labors and responsibilities of this Society. Acting as the agent and almoner of the churches, it has been suddenly summoned to the work of transplanting the germs of religious institutions on those distant shores. This work is one of great magnitude and peculiar difficulty; but it cannot be declined nor safely postponed. The measures which are to determine the future character and destiny of these infant communities must be promptly and vigorously employed. The hundreds of thousands who have left the privileges and restraints of their Eastern homes, must be followed into their exile by the influences of the Gospel. Among the elements which are there crystalizing into the form of organized society, the ministry and the church of Christ must be prominent and controlling. By such means only can the ends of this grand providential movement be answered, and the millions who are soon to occupy these ancient solitudes, become an intelligent, prosperous, Christian people.

The continued rush of emigration to that coast, is adding every day to the magnitude and urgency of the work before us. From the crowded deck of every steamer that leaves our wharves, we receive an impressive admonition to redouble our endeavors. By every returning mail, bringing fresh appeals for aid, we are reminded how inadequate are the supplies already furnished. Our missionaries, particularly those in California, have made repeated and earnest solicitations for additional laborers, to which it has been out of our power to respond. We are deeply grieved and concerned that it is so. But the field and the work are peculiar. To gain the ear and heart of men who are intoxicated with the spirit of adventure; to follow them into the ravines of the mountains, and arrest them, amid their piles of golden dust, with the truths of the Gospel; to rear permanent Christian institutions with the heterogenous materials, and on the shifting foundations, of Californian society, is a work to which the highest order of talent only is adequate. If, in our haste to increase the number, we should cease to regard the fitness of our laborers, we should do violence to our clearest convictions of duty; indeed, to commission for such a service men of inferior qualifications, would be to tax heavily the resources of the Society, for the expense of certain failure and disaster.

But to men of requisite mental endowments, and who are ready to endure hardness as good soldiers, the call is urgent and the field inviting. Society is beginning to assume a more fixed and stable character. Within the last year, multitudes who had before taken little interest in the permanent welfare of the country, regarding it as the place of a mere temporary sojourn, have determined to make it their home, and will now coöperate in efforts to promote its future prosperity. Five or six towns are specified, each containing from 2,000 to 10,000 inhabitants, and some of them entirely destitute of evangelical preaching, in which suitable laborers would be welcomed, and after a few months would derive their entire support from the people. Many other places, the permanent population of which is rapidly increasing, will soon call for supplies.

But whom shall we send, and who will go for us? The laborers—such as the exigency requires—are few. To young men on the threshold of the sacred office, who are looking to find their appropriate sphere in the great harvest, and who are qualified to take part in laying the foundations of our rising empire on the Pacific coast, we submit the inquiry, whether in any other department of labor, they can accomplish more for the glory of Christ and the salvation of men. The following communications, exhibiting the nature of the work to be done, and the urgency of the demand for additional laborers, may aid in the examination of this important question:

OREGON.

From Rev. G. H. Atkinson, Oregon City.

The remarks in a communication from Oregon, in the Home Missionary for November, so happily illustrate my condition as an individual, that I hardly need make a special report. If we are doing good by our labors, it is more by the secret and silent operation of religious influences, than by manifest advances. I preach at this place to a small congregation, on the morning and evening of each Sabbath, and at 2 o'clock attend a small Bible class in connection with a Sabbath school. The latter is slowly increasing. Our small weekly prayer meeting is attended with encouraging interest. We are doing what we can to promote the cause of Temperance, especially by addressing all the ministry and particular friends of the cause, in order to secure a unanimous and simultaneous action on the subject. It is hoped that a convention will be held to promote initiatory action at the ballot box.

Since I last wrote you, the Oregon Association has held its third annual meeting, at this place. Five ministers were present. The occasion was one of great importance, as our attention was called to subjects pertaining to the future harmony and welfare of our churches. The Association spent several hours in discussing articles of a creed and covenant to be recommended to them. There are already different formularies in our churches; and as new ministers come, the variety will probably increase. It is thought to be very desirable to have a common faith expressed in the same phraseology.

Educational Institutions.

In view of the wants of two institutions of learning, in which we are particularly interested, and for the advancement of the interests of religion in the Territory, it was deemed desirable, after a free and full discussion, for one member of the Association to visit the States.

Oh, that benevolent men would regard our isolated situation, and our absolute destitution of educational facilities among ourselves! We have no border States to which we can send our sons and daughters, nor have we the means of sending them home, even if that were feasible. Three courses are left to us,—to remain in comparative ignorance; or to submit our children to the instruction and training of papal Propagandists; or to establish schools of our own. We have not hesitated to choose the latter course. This we have done, not, indeed, without trembling and anxiety; and as we hold fast to this purpose, we find it involves us in unforeseen labors and trials. The enthusiasm of some who commenced with us has died away, and with that, their active exertions. The burden is left upon a few; still the objects hold a prominent and unchanging importance before us. We cannot give them up.

The objects we propose are, first, the complete endowment of the Protestant Female Seminary at this place, so that we may furnish at low rates, all the advantages of similar institutions in the older States. This is the primary and vital object. It is not for ourselves only. It commends itself to all sects, as the institution, by its charter, is restricted from being sectarian. Trustees from five denominations control it, and unite in the desire to make it a good school. We know that sectarian schools are mostly unsectarian in practice. This is theoretically and practically so. It is now working well, and without any friction in this respect. The Bible is daily read and recited, and prayer offered to God, without the help of images.

The second object is more of a denominational character. It is to secure the endowment of one or more professorships for Tualatin Academy, in order to super-add to it the advantages of a College. We have a large and good building, sufficient for all present purposes.

We shall be able, as we suppose, to build others when they shall be needed, besides paying our present debt. But we cannot found professorships, and furnish library and apparatus. We must look homeward for these, and for the men to fill the stations when the funds are provided.

Posts to be Occupied.

Several important places are mentioned, where churches should be formed without delay, and where laborers are greatly needed. One of these is in the Umpqua valley, two hundred miles south of Oregon City. Another is Salem, the present capital of the Territory. A clergyman engaged in teaching in this place, in a recent letter to one of the missionaries, says:—

In my opinion this is a very promising field for a congregation, and ultimately for a church of our denomination. The place demands a minister of the highest order of talent and piety. Its legislative, judicial, and legal representation and talent give it great importance; and can you doubt that one able to stand before princes and not before mean men, should immediately take his position here? We have improved our school-house so that it will serve very well as a place of worship for a long time. Can you not obtain such a man for us at once? Will not the Home Missionary Society furnish one? We can raise several hundred dollars per annum, probably $300; and we hope we shall not long need any assistance from abroad.

In Perils by the Heathen.

The bloody tragedy, by which the mission of the American Board among the Oregon Indians was terminated in 1847, is doubtless fresh in the recollection of our readers. The missionaries who escaped made their way to the white settlements, where they engaged in various useful labors, hoping that ere long they should be permitted to revive the mission among the Indians. Rev. H. H. Spalding, in connection with an application for a commission from this Society, describes the remarkable circumstances which have compelled them to relinquish this hope, and which have suggested this change in his relations.

Doubtless you are somewhat acquainted with my history in Oregon, and the history of our mission, which ended in blood. My departed wife, and the lamented Mrs. Whitman, both I trust now in heaven, were the first white women who crossed the Rocky Mountains, and the first American ladies in Oregon. We made this laborious journey during the summer of 1836, and commenced our mission in the fall of that year. Our labors were blessed and our mission prospered, till the papal influence came in upon us, and continued to work upon the superstitious feelings of the natives. In the fall of 1847, taking advantage of the measles, they so aroused their passions that they fell upon us, killing some, and driving the rest from their country. Doctor and Mrs. Whitman and Mr. Rogers, of our mission, were butchered, with many immigrants and children. The women and children were taken prisoners, and treated most brutally, especially by Bishop Blanchette. Among the prisoners were my own child, a daughter, who was at the time, thank Heaven, but ten years old. I owe my own escape from the bloody tomahawk, to the repeated and almost miraculous interpositions of Providence. But my sufferings from hunger—being without food from Wednesday till Monday—from want of sleep, from cold, from feet mangled upon the sharp rocks, frozen ground, and prickly pear, I have not language to describe.

The burning anxiety for the fate of my wife and the remaining children, was doubtless the support of nature. The hand of God delivered me from the pursuing Indians, and brought me to my family, whom, to my great joy, I found alive. Finally, through the interposition of the Hudson Bay Co., and at a great ransom, we were all delivered from the Indian country, together with the captives at Waiilatpu. But these severe toils and exposures in escaping from the Indian country, prostrated my dear wife; and after lingering more than three years in constant pain, she was, in January last, released from her sufferings, and introduced to her heavenly reward. I am left with four children, the eldest fourteen years of age—the oldest white person born in Oregon—and the youngest five years. From the overthrow of our mission, I have entertained the hope that God would open the way for us to return and renew our labors for the poor Indians. This hope seemed about to be realized when I was appointed by our Government, through the advice of our delegate, the Hon. Mr. Thurston, Indian Agent for the middle district, to be located at Waiilatpu, our missionary station, and the theatre of the bloody tragedy.

Treaty of Expulsion.

This brightening hope was greatly weakened, however, by the arrival of the Superintendent, and the change of my field to the South, as far as the country would admit, i. e. to the Rogue River and the Umpqua country. This was followed, last June, by an act of the Superintendent most humiliating to every true American. A treaty was formed with the tribes of the Middle District, an article of which provides that no American (i. e. protestant) missionary shall ever again enter their country. This treaty was made near Fort Walla Walla, which had been a most active missionary station of the Papists for some two years before the massacre. Some seventy papal missionaries have been laboring in that vast country since the massacre, and still are; and they are now left, by treaty, the sole occupants of that important field. They are traversing every corner, and visiting every lodge. I did not learn this till our last expedition, by sea, to the coast in the Rogue River country, to treat with those tribes for their lands—having been appointed one of the Commissioners, with the Superintendent, to treat with the tribes for their lands west of the Cascades. As soon as he announced this peculiar article in his treaty with the upper tribes, all hope of our returning to that field, the field of my choice, and the people of my choice, was taken away.

That was a day of sadness to my soul. I spent much of it alone, in the thick forest, upon the Pacific coast. I lifted up my lamentations amid the wild roar of the ocean's waves. I wept for the poor Nez Perces, and Cayuses, among whom, with my beloved wife, associated with the lamented Whitman, I labored for eleven years most successfully. I wept for the little church of native members, left with no one ever again to break to them the bread of life. I wept, as I called to mind the many years of hard labor in this remote and dark corner of the earth, and the amount of money which the churches have expended upon this field, all apparently laid a sacrifice at the bloody shrine of the Papacy, by the baptized hands of an American officer, the husband of a Presbyterian wife! But God has suffered these strange events. The Superintendent of course was influenced to this anti-American step by the same influences which instigated the poor benighted Indians to butcher their best friends. The announcement of this strange treaty, while it filled my soul with grief, settled my mind at once as to my field of future labor. The American Government has taken upon it to shut me away from my former field, and to close the door into the Middle District against American missionaries. Henceforth my field of labor is among my countrymen in this valley. I am now about my Master's business,—preaching the Gospel.

We cannot refrain from expressing the astonishment and grief with which we contemplate the facts above stated. At a time when the principles of religious toleration are making such progress in the earth; while missionaries are admitted into Burmah and China, are protected throughout the dominions, and by the whole power of the Sultan; and are even allowed to pursue their labors unmolested among the savage tribes of Africa, they are forbidden by our own Government to evangelize the heathen on our own soil!

CALIFORNIA.

From Rev. J. H. Warren, Nevada City.

Getting Gold for the Temple.

In my last letter, I informed you of my efforts in collecting subscriptions for our church edifice. Those who have any knowledge of a mining country, can easily form an idea of the nature of such a work. It is hard work, not a whit easier than "coyoting," "sluicing," "tunneling," or any other mode of gold-getting in this country. Many said they were going home immediately, and cared nothing for California, not enough at any rate to build churches for her. There was no use in preaching or building churches here. They had always given to such things at home, but they came out here to make money, and they were going to keep it, and by and by build churches and support the Gospel in the States. Others were opposed to sectarianism. If the church was to be free and open to all—all, meaning, particularly, Universalists and Unitarians—they would give as much as any one. Others, again, did not believe in the Bible. Some had seen too many ministers at monté tables, to trust the first one that came along. Some knew how broken down monté bankers recruited their fallen fortunes; and with that would give the gravel in their "toms" such a raking, and make such a rattle and clatter, that "begging" would invariably go to the next tom or shaft. In the case of many, to attempt to get their gold seemed like contending with wild beasts for their prey. In all this there was fatigue, anxiety, and labor, but no fear, or hesitation, or discouragement. It was the "Master's work," and it could not be stopped.

Often, and even for hours at a time, with a pile of auriferous gravel, or surface dirt for a seat or platform, were objections heard and answered, cavils refuted, questions proposed, argument, illustration and anecdote brought forward, to prove to the returning Californian a better doctrine, i. e., "None of us liveth to himself," to correct infidel notions that were working like unholy leaven,—in short, to preach to hundreds who were not at all wont to remember the Sabbath, the sanctuary, their Bible, or their God. Even when no money was obtained, after half a day's anxious conversation and effort at a single place, still there could not but spring up the hope, that more good had been accomplished, by rectifying wrong views of duty, and preventing the influences of germinant scepticism and atheism from destroying totally, the hold of truth on the soul, than would have been effected by large and generous contributions in silver and gold. Sickness and death also proved occasions for preaching the Gospel to many. Providence forced the solemn truths of religion upon men as they followed the dead from a miner's cabin, a trader's saloon, a public boarding house, or a family dwelling.

Who are interested in California.

In looking over the record of deaths, and of the funerals I attended last Summer and Fall, I find that those who died were from sixteen different States, and that nine-tenths of them were under 30 years of age. Alas, how often have we thought of those far away, who never shall see again father, husband, son, or brother; and by the open grave have prayed that God would make all these afflictions their souls' greater gain. Mothers, here are your sons; wives, here are your husbands; sisters, here are your brothers; parents, Christians, all, here are your friends; and who of you does not yearn to give them the bread of life, while living, to minister to them in their last moments, and pay the last rites and duties to their lifeless remains? When appeals are made for the work of the Gospel in this land, remember that the work is for you. You have interests here which you cannot forget or neglect. There are thousands in this land—and your own loved ones may be of the number—who, if they were now to be called away, would have none but the missionary to stand by their dying beds, and offer the last prayer in their behalf.

It is a quite common remark, that there are but few places in the Union that are not represented in California; and yet who has taken pains to realize it? The following record may show you who are interested in California, at least in Nevada. In glancing over the subscription papers for the church in this place, I find that the number of males from each of the different States, and the aggregate amount contributed by them to the church, are as follows:

Besides these, we have received contributions from individuals coming from different parts of Europe, the British Colonies, Mexico, Canada, &c. Thus, you see how many States and countries have a "block" in this "Washington Monument" church. Many such churches could be built in this land, if the missionary were here to go forward with the work.

On the 28th of September last, hundreds who had watched and participated in the progress and completion of the church edifice, engaged in the delightful exercises of its Dedication.

An occasion of this kind in this country, has a meaning, an omen, an interest, which none but the California Christian can feel and see. Rev. Mr. Benton, of Sacramento, preached the sermon, from the text, "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary."

It was a season of joy, a feast, a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The house of God was over us; our feet trod once more the courts of His sanctuary. It was the gate of Heaven. Oh, how much higher and purer the enjoyment of those who labor and toil for God, than of those who sweat and dig to lay up earthly treasures! All the toil and trouble of the past were for a while forgotten, and the heart was glad in view of the good accomplished. The profound and unbroken attention of the large and intelligent congregation, showed with what eager interest the truths of the text, as presented by the preacher, in a most fervid and impressive manner, were received and endorsed; and as we arose from the sermon, we felt that we had indeed made ourselves stronger, and had not only beautified and adorned our Mountain City, but also raised it in the le of civilization and humanity, by having in our midst, the sanctuary of God.

A Church Organized.

In the afternoon of the same day, after the outward temple had been dedicated, the inner or spiritual temple was built unto God. A Congregational church was organized, consisting of twenty one members; and the occasion will doubtless be remembered by those present, as one of the most eventful and interesting ever spent in the house of God. Oh, what a contrast between this scene and the prospects and heart sinkings four or five months previous, when your missionary arrived in this place, knowing of but one individual who would be likely to coöperate with him in his work!

We are now in a prosperous condition, so far as outward and temporal matters are concerned. Our congregations on the Sabbath are large and increasing. Our prayer-meetings are well attended, some of our members walking between six and eight miles to attend them, and that, too, after working hard at mining through the day. The monthly concerts are interesting, and the Sabbath school and Bible class are sustained with considerable success.

Our church edifice is complete within and without, including a fine bell, which we raised into its place some three weeks ago. Its clear and ringing peals reverberate among the hills and deep defiles for miles around. No sound to me was ever fraught with such soul inspiring music, as was that, when for the first time in these mountain seats, were called forth those hallowed memories which naught but the sound of the church-going bell can awake.

The church, together with the bell, has cost about $5,600, of which sum only $1,500 remain unpaid. The present timely rains will easily wash this small debt away. We received timely and efficient aid from the ladies. With four or five weeks' preparation, and $200 borrowed money, they got up a Fair, which netted $1,100. Well done for the mountains! At present, I receive my entire support from the people, and shall probably be of no expense to you hereafter.

We certainly have much to encourage us, when we consider that it was only last April that the work was commenced. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. A great deal more remains to be accomplished, for which may God give us wisdom, grace and strength.

From Rev. W. W. Brier, Marysville.

You will readily pardon me for not writing more frequently, when I tell you that my health has been so poor for six months, that I have scarcely been able to discharge the duties of my office. Yet I have been able to preach every Sabbath; and I now thank God that he is giving me health to study and labor. I feel that it is good to have been afflicted. At a time when my energies were taxed to the utmost, by taking them away God taught me that I should trust only in him. Mrs. B. is in excellent health, and is delighted with this country. She would not live in any other. We now have many excellent families in the place.

The ladies connected with our congregation have a Sewing Society, at the first meeting of which they took $75 in "initiation fees." It seemed like home to meet together and hear the voices of ladies, and the sweet notes of the piano-forte. Our little church has been almost doubled within the last three months. Only one has united by profession of faith—a young man from New York City. We have a choir which is not inferior to most of those in your cities, for we have in it several who have been choristers there. The material for churches is furnished, but all our prosperity does not satisfy me. I mourn for the desolation of Zion. The majority of those who have been members of churches at home, here neglect the ordinances of God's house, and many are openly profane. It is a solemn truth here demonstrated, that a large proportion of our church members in the East have never been converted. Multitudes of the impenitent go on heedless of the call to life. Yet I labor on.

I have representatives from all countries within my field. A few days since, I visited one small corner of our city, in which I found fifty six persons. I distributed tracts in four languages, and yet discovered that the Tract Society's gift of tongues failed me, for I had nothing for a family of Sandwich Islanders. If I could speak five or six languages, I would like it. My labor here has not been in vain. We have raised for church purposes, about $6,000. This is about three times the entire sum which you expended in sending us out, and we hope ere long to commence returning the original. This we consider the interest at California rates.

Our city is growing in importance. Our mines are rich. I go into the mountains and preach occasionally. Once I made a tour of ten days, preaching every night. The people were very attentive to hear me.

I wish again to present the subject of supplies. I am now prepared to say that we want twenty good men. This country changes so fast, that it requires the ken of a prophet to see what will be required one year hence. Thirteen hundred persons came by the last steamer. Within the past year, the future destiny of this country has been settled. If we get help at once, we can maintain our position, and hold the land, for the Lord of Hosts is with us. If men are not to be found, sound the alarm so loud that it will enter every heart in our Colleges, where the love of Christ dwells.

Missions in the Interior.

MINNESOTA.

From Rev. R. Hall, Point Douglass.

Mr. H. divides his labors between Point Douglass, which is situated at the junction of the Mississippi and St. Croix rivers, thirty miles below the Falls of St. Anthony, and Cottage Grove, which is eight miles north of Point Douglass, and midway between the two rivers.

Three months added to the history of my field, have doubtless brought with them fewer changes than most of your missionaries have to record. Still I have a few things to note which are interesting to me, and doubtless they will be also to you.

There has been nothing done as yet at either of my preaching points towards erecting a house of worship. The necessity for one is being felt more and more; and both here and at Cottage Grove it is in the mouth of every one—"we must have a better place for worship." We are soon to hold a meeting for prayer and consultation with reference to the organization of a church. We should have held it ere this, but we have not yet had snow enough to make tolerable sleighing, and consequently it has been impossible to assemble the scattered flock for a general prayer meeting. Including those who are professors at Cottage Grove, at this place, and at Point Prescott—the Wisconsin point opposite Point Douglass—we shall gather a church of at least twelve members. When I returned from La Crosse last Fall, I found that a lady from one of our best families had died and been buried during my absence. She would have been a valuable member of our little church if she had lived; but God has seen fit to make her death the means of raising up one to take her place. A daughter of the deceased has, since the mother's death, given her heart to God, and will join our church by profession of her faith.

It will be "a day of small things" with us when we gather our little flock of twelve members from a circuit of fifteen miles around; but we cannot feel that it is too early for a missionary to be on the ground, or too early for the nucleus of a christian society to be formed. Intemperance, Sabbath-breaking, and profanity, grow rank all around us, from the very outset of settlement. And as soon as a neighborhood furnishes a tavern or a groggery for a rallying point, vices are propagated through the community almost as if by an organized plan of operations. Why should not the institutions of the Gospel take an even start with these elements of evil? Satan is already busy in our midst, and I believe that future years will show that Gospel influences have not been brought to bear against him too soon on this field. I believe that the early occupancy of this "New England of the West," by the American Home Missionary Society, will do more than anything else to determine its future condition. If this community shall, in after years, bear, in any measure as New England now does, the impress of a religious character, formed and maintained from the outset, the humble efforts of its first missionaries will not be lost labor, nor will the expenditure of sustaining them be a waste.

Thanksgiving day was observed again at Point Douglass, as it was last year. Though it was on a small scale, yet I cannot but think that our little thanksgiving service in the log school-house, and the little social gatherings around the well-spread boards which followed, were profitable. A few days afterward I was surprised by a notice from the people of Cottage Grove, that they had appointed a neighborhood meeting to be held on New Years' day and eve, at which my presence was very much needed. They ventured to call it a donation party, although they took pains to inform me that it was not proposed with an expectation that they would be able to make a very substantial contribution for the support of preaching, so much as from a desire to express their appreciation of the privileges they have enjoyed the past year through the agency of the A. H. M. S. Another motive, doubtless, is the hope that it may do something towards uniting the heterogeneous elements which are found in almost every western neighborhood. There is strength enough, at least at two of my preaching points, to have built, ere this, a suitable house of worship, were it not for this want of union.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. J. D. Stevens, Monroe, Green Co.

Fruit Scattered.

The past year has been one of darkness and discouragement. I have seen but little fruit from my labors. That which had been previously gathered, was soon scattered again. One year ago last May, when this little church was organized, it comprised eighteen members. These were taken from eight families residing in the village of Monroe, and three families living in opposite directions in the county, four, seven, and fourteen miles distant. Since that time seven have been added, five of whom are from families in the village. Sixteen of the above individuals were heads of families. There are now residing in the village one male member, and three female members, besides my wife and daughter. Four families have left, eight have been dismissed by letter, and three others have moved into the country twelve miles distant, but still retain their connection. Ten of our members are living in different directions from Monroe from six to fifteen miles—six members only remaining in the village. You can get a glance at some of the discouragements which your missionary has to meet with in breaking new ground, and laying the foundation for building up our religious institutions in the great West. I have been on the border settlements a quarter of a century, and this county is the darkest and most discouraging field I have been in; and yet I feel a great reluctance to abandon it. I believe a better time is coming. Some seed has been sown which will yet bear fruit, and be gathered into the garner. In the midst of all this darkness and discouragement, there are some faint glimmerings of hope—now and then a token of good.

Our Sabbath school is beginning to exert more influence, and enlist some who have heretofore taken no interest in the subject. There is some advance in the observance of the Sabbath; less business is done; more decorum and propriety of conduct are observable in the place of worship; and of late there has been an increasing attendance upon the preaching of the word. These things betoken an approaching change, and indicate that the ground should not be given up. One missionary surely cannot be too much for the whole of Green County, containing nearly 8,000 inhabitants.

From Rev. C. W. Munroe, Appleton, Outagamie Co.

Steady Improvement.

The last three months have witnessed a steady improvement. Important, and we think, permanently useful changes have taken place. The Sabbath school is on a more stable footing than ever before. The teachers evidently feel a growing sense of the responsibility of their office, and show an increase of interest for the spiritual welfare of their charge. The average attendance of the scholars has been greater than that of any preceding quarter. The interest manifested on the part of the scholars in the various exercises of the school, has also been unusually gratifying. Indeed, some of the more experienced teachers, who have been connected with large schools at the East, say that they never were in the school where all the children learned their lessons so well, and where all behaved so well during the exercises.

At our last communion season, nine joined themselves to the communion of this church, all from other churches. Our number is thus just doubled; and we have reason to believe that not only is our numerical strength thus increased, but that in the same ratio is the increase of our practical and spiritual power. There seems to be an increase of the spirit of prayer among the members, and a growing desire that God shall be glorified in the conversion of souls. This desire finds expression in actions as well as in words. Opportunities are daily sought for conversation and prayer with the impenitent; and at the weekly prayer meeting these efforts are made the topic of remark and the subject of prayer. All this, and more which might be stated, are indications of good, in view of which I thank God and take courage.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. E. Kingsbury, Danville, Vermillion Co.

An Appeal in behalf of Nine Counties.

We have frequently called the attention of our readers to the productiveness of the Home Missionary enterprise, as illustrated in the religious history of Illinois. An abundant harvest has indeed been gathered; but lest it should be inferred that we are approaching the completion of our work in that State, we present, and commend to especial notice, the following, as a specimen of the statements frequently received from our missionaries.

After a residence of twenty years in this place, I am about as much alone as when I first came; and the most of the region round about is as destitute of missionaries as when possessed by the aborigines. Notwithstanding the vigilance and faithfulness of the A. H. M. S., there is still a region on the eastern side of Illinois, of nearly 200 miles in length and 100 in breadth, that has scarcely been explored by your missionaries. There are nine counties adjoining each other—viz. Iroquois, Livingston, Champaign, Dewitt, Piatt, Macon, Moultrie, Christian, and Shelby, none of which, I presume, have enjoyed the labors of one of your missionaries for a year, except the N. W. corner of Dewitt. There may have been missionaries sent to some of these counties, of whom I have no knowledge, but if so, it would be easy to find other counties, or large portions of them, sufficient to make good the wide field of destitution. I set it down as a fixed and lamentable fact, that there are yet 20,000 square miles in one body, in Illinois, which, up to this day, have not enjoyed the labors of a missionary for one year. Think of it! There is not, and never has been, a missionary stationed between this place and the Kankakee river, from 80 to 100 miles N.—none between this place and Springfield, 125 miles W.—none between this place and Vandalia, 130 miles S. W.—and none in the intervening spaces, so far as I know, and I claim as intimate an acquaintance with this wide moral waste as any other man. In several of these counties

I have been the first, and in some the only missionary or minister, that has ever preached the Presbyterian or Congregational faith.

I mention these destitutions not to censure the A. H. M. S. or its officers, who have more calls than they can answer with money and men; but to show that they exist, and that there yet remaineth much land to be possessed—such as overflows with milk and honey. I write to inform brethren living far away, that now is the time to rise up, enter in, and possess the land. The willing and obedient shall eat the fruit of it. These counties, though possessing the richest soil and a beautiful surface, are sparsely populated. Livingston, on the N. has the smallest population, 1,552. Shelby, on the S. has the largest, 10,428. The nine counties have an aggregate population of 35,933. Their increase within the last ten years has been 16,947. Thus the population has nearly doubled in ten years. The reason why they were not earlier and more densely settled is, they are inland counties, far removed from navigable waters, consequently far from market, and not easily accessible to travelers or emigrants depending upon public conveyances. Our former efforts at internal improvements not only did us no good, but involved the State so much in debt, as to deter capitalists and enterprising men from coming in.

Now it is next to certain, that within five years nearly 400 miles of railroad will be completed in the territory above described. Both branches of the Central railroad—the one running from Shelbyville to Galena, the other to Chicago—will extend through the entire length of this region. Besides these, there will be one, if not two railroads crossing the State from E. to W., connecting the Wabash with the Mississippi. These roads are now in the possession of able and efficient companies, which are prosecuting the work. Soon the iron horses will be skipping over the smooth prairies, outstripping the wolf and the deer, much to the astonishment of the natives, many of whom will sell out and journey on to more congenial climes. But others will pour in and occupy the choice land so long vacant, and now to be had for $1.25 per acre.

In view of changes that evidently must take place, can we be too early or active in planting the standard of the cross, in every county, yea, in every settlement? As yet, we are behind almost every other denomination.

A few weeks since I heard the Macedonian cry coming across the prairies, from the heart of this great moral Sahara; so, on the first of this month, I started to go over and learn the cause wherefore they had sent for me. After traveling 70 miles, I found a small congregation, in a log school-house, hungering for the word. I tarried with them three days, preaching and visiting, and at their earnest solicitation, I organized a church, consisting of four males and two females. They hoped for more to join them, and were very anxious to obtain a minister, and showed a readiness to sustain one.

From Rev. Paul Anderson, Chicago.

The Scandinavian Immigrants.

The trials of the missionary are not a few, especially when situated, as some of us are, in the midst of the most confused breaking up of old views and associations, and where things have not had sufficient time fully to mature. The transition from an Eastern to a Western life is productive of many and various developments; but the developments necessarily connected with the process of emigrating from monarchical Europe to republican America, are still more marked. The great mass of the emigrants, having been accustomed to "proper (?) subordination," finding themselves unexpectedly, or at least suddenly, in possession of "glorious American liberty," hardly know how to enjoy it, or wherein real liberty consists. Some seem to think that lawless indulgence is the sum total of liberty; while others can hardly realize that at last they have been brought by the good Providence of God, where they may, if they will, have full freedom to do right, in the widest sense, without being molested or made afraid; and this is my definition of "liberty."

The fluctuating state of our emigrant population here is the greatest hindrance to the rapid building up of a large and permanent church. Many of the emigrants remain here one or two years, or until they can recruit a little their exhausted means; then they go into the country to get a piece of land. But, while this keeps the church here in a weak state, it is perhaps the very best way of diffusing abroad that light and truth which gladden our hearts at home.

I trust that the seed of the word which has been sown during the year that is closed, has not been altogether unfruitful. Besides the greater permanence and es-establishment of many of the members of the church, sinners have been converted; and it is evident that, on the whole, the condition of the church, both temporal and spiritual, is in advance of last year. Opposition to the truth on the part of those who hate or pervert it, has been, and is, just as determined; but it has not been able to disturb us quite as much as formerly. Many family altars have been erected during the past year, and the proportions of a christian character better developed in many a young disciple.

MICHIGAN.

From Rev. D. M. Cooper, Saginaw City, Saginaw Co.

A Good Beginning.

I entered upon my labors here in June last. In many respects, the field promised to be a difficult one for an inexperienced licentiate. The church was but a church nominally: it had been without a pastor or minister for nearly two years; no Sabbath school was in operation, no prayer meeting established. Of the four male members whose names were on the church records, but two remained residents of the village; and of the seventeen female members, all but seven had taken up their abode elsewhere. The few who remained were accustomed to attend the preaching of whatever minister happened along.

The state of morals in the community was shocking. Swearing was universally practiced. Sabbath profanation was little thought of; and the city was noted, far and wide, for its dram-selling and dram-drinking. Besides the resident citizens, there was a floating population of lumbermen, a class of men proverbially hardened, and inaccessible except through the agency of the Bible or the Tract.

But though there were many difficulties in the way of your missionary, there were not a few encouragements. If some members of the church had left, there were quite a number of individuals ready to renew their covenant vows by presentation of their letters as soon as an opportunity presented itself. There was also on hand a very fair subscription towards erecting a church edifice. There was a disposition manifest to work for Christ, could they only secure an ambassador of Jesus to assist them. Another encouragement was the impulse which the increasing lumber trade had given to the place. Springing up, as it did, a village of mushroom growth, during the speculation mania of 1837, it had remained stationary ever since, as its wood-colored houses, and unfinished public edifices, and untraveled streets clearly testified. But the increase of business was such as to demand the establishment of a regular line of steamboats between it and the emporium of the State; and the country was fast being settled by industrious Germans. On the opposite side of the river, and about two miles below Saginaw City, a new village (East Saginaw) had sprung up within eighteen months; and where but a year and a half ago had been an unbroken forest, was seen a large warehouse, a grist mill, a hotel in process of erection, and some 60 or 100 dwellings, but no meeting house.

Here, then, was a field of usefulness and incitements to duty. There can be but little doubt that in Saginaw is to center the trade of nearly all Northern Michigan, when once the country is settled; and that can be at no far distant day. Emigration is doing its work surely, and with a healthful rapidity. Your missionary, then, need not urge upon you the importance of aiding our feeble beginning, especially as the prospect of being before long able to support ourselves is exceedingly fair.

Since last Spring, the Gospel has been preached to an attentive congregation, averaging in number from seventy to a hundred. A Sabbath school has been organized, and regular prayer meetings have been established. And although I can speak of no revival; yet—what is much for this place—there has been an interested hearing of the word, and regularity in the sanctuary services. Moreover, yonder stands as beautiful a church edifice as can be found in Northern Michigan, erected mainly through the energy of one man in our little society.

*From Rev. J. Marsh, Tekonsha, Calhoun

I have now thirteen different preaching places, in addition to the two places of stated preaching on the Sabbath. They are from two to fourteen miles distant from me, and about twenty miles from one extreme to the other. The desire for my labors is increasing. Several other points need to be occupied; but at present I cannot occupy them, without neglecting others more important. I see some encouragement at every place where I go. Occasionally skeptical men are prosent, whom I have never seen at meeting before. I am about commencing an extensive visitation in connection with my preaching. O, how much we need a revival! O, for a spirit of prevailing prayer, and firm, unwavering faith!

Prevailing Errors.

The present is a time for the promulgation of deadly errors in this region. Swedenborg's sentiments are assiduously propagated; and people are professing to hold communion with the spirit world, and learn by rappings, and things if possible still more absurd, the views and feelings of the departed dead, and getting from them something to contradict the Bible. These are prevailing errors, not directly where I labor, but in places around. The tide of irreligion is rising high. Vain amusements—sinful pleasures—are captivating the young. Intemperance and Sabbath breaking are very alarming among us. The enemy is coming in like a flood. Oh, may the Spirit of God raise a standard against him! The need of a powerful revival of religion extending over our county, and State, is painfully felt. I believe that ministers around are to an unusual degree laboring and praying for this definite object; and I hope it is the case with private Christians also. How much we need the prayers of Christians everywhere!

From Rev. P. Shepherd, Dover, Lenawee County.

What hath God wrought!

This day closes the fifth year of my labors among the people of my present charge. Permit me to take a retrospect of what God hath wrought through the imperfect labor of your missionary, during this period. When I commenced my labors here, the church of Dover had only sixteen members. We worshiped in a log school-house, with an average congregation of about twenty five, including men, women and children. Now we have forty church members, a beautiful and convenient church edifice, and an average congregation of about one hundred. The past year we have enjoyed a precious revival, by which the church has been very much refreshed, and some fifteen of the impenitent hopefully converted. Of its fruits eleven have been received into the church, and we hope others will be, at our communion next Sabbath.

From a Missionary Report.

Contests with Skepticism.

Our contest with skepticism is not very apparent, but it is real in many points. They do every thing in their power to thwart our religious interests. They have long labored to injure the church. The contest is yet unsettled in the district school. We have now a board opposed to progress; but they seem to court our favor by employing as teachers two Presbyterian professors, a young man from a neighboring town, and a young woman of active piety of our church, but neither of them qualified for the place. The schools will soon be closed. These events are adverse, but I trust they will work for good. In our Lyceum, this winter, one of our skeptics proposed the question, "Is man accountable for his belief?" After some weeks we took it up and it was largely discussed. But the negative was sustained only by one, who declared at the close that his sentiments were on the other side. No open opposer was present. The fact is, these men have no stability in anything, and our greatest difficulty with them is, they will never "stand a shot."

KENTUCKY.

The Leaven working.

Since my last report, I have held a protracted meeting, at which time we received four additions on the profession of their faith, and the members of our little church were more awakened and aroused than I have seen them for the last twelve months. Besides this, there was a most happy impression made on several prominent men, whom we had almost given over as hopeless. The influence of the church was also extended to a number who had never before been brought within the range of my visits, or to the house of God on the Sabbath. Their interest on the subject of religion seems to be permanent, as they have continued their attendance on public worship, and rather seek conversations with me than avoid them. On one occasion, at a night sermon, not long since, it was remarked that the entire adult population of the village, white and colored, without a dozen exceptions, were present; and a more deeply attentive congregation I never addressed. I can also see an enlarged and more constant attendance on preaching than I have witnessed since I took charge of the church.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL, Mark xvi. 15.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

Vol. XXV.

MAY, 1852.

No. 1.

Village Meeting Houses.

We commence the TWENTY FIFTH VOLUME OF THE HOME MISSIONARY with the plan and description of a Village Church—the first of several which we are permitted to expect from the liberality of Mr. WILLIAM BACKUS, Architect, of Jauncey Court, New York.

From his sympathy with the Home Missionary cause, Mr. Backus is induced to offer his services, without charge, in furnishing detailed working drawings, specifications and estimates, to churches aided by this Society. Applications for this object should be addressed to him, as above, and should be accompanied by a diagram or description of the ground on which it is proposed to build. He will also furnish drawings for sheds, fences, &c.

The following remarks of Mr. B. on the general subject of rural and village churches are so replete with good sense and artistic feeling, that we take pleasure in laying them before the readers of the Home Missionary, in connection with a description of the plans which are more specifically the subject of this article.

VIRGIL, in one of his Bucolics, relates the surprise of a shepherd who, on visiting Rome, found that it differed from his own village, in character as well as in size. He had supposed it to be as the ewe to her lamb; and found it as the tree to the reed. The shepherd was in advance of many men of the present day, who have not yet learned that the same relation still exists between large and small communities. Where large numbers of people are collected, many peculiar customs are introduced in the manner of life and mode of building, which, though unavoidable, are not in all cases desirable; but which are often copied in smaller neighborhoods, where they are unnecessary, and—still more—disagreeable. Houses of worship for small congregations, have too frequently been constructed without adaptation to the people for whom they were erected; and many a one may now be seen, in various villages in the country—a reduced copy of some more ambitious building in a larger town—standing, with white walls and huge naked windows staring upon open fields, with not a tree to shield it from the summer sun, or from the winter wind, which howls through the high and half open foundation walls, and rattles the agued sashes with every gust. Perhaps the front, designed as Grecian in feature, has columns and pilasters, capitals and bases, with proportions stretched or contracted to suit the carpenter's convenience—a knot here and there showing through the paint on what represents a marble block, or a nail protruding from a counterfeit granite step. In the interior, high, white walls glare far above the half empty and forbidding side galleries; and from the lofty pen the minister seems to shower down his instructions, as from a superior region, upon hearers shivering and aching in straight backed pews, or wincing under the sun's rays, streaming through the broad uncurtained windows—the whole appearance of the building bleak, naked, and desolate without; cheerless and uncomfortable within. The child accustomed to attend meeting in such a house will be apt to look upon worship as a task, and the close as the most desirable part of the services.

The purposes of united worship are probably never better accomplished than in the meetings held at private houses; and when increasing numbers make enlarged accommodations necessary, it is desirable to retain as much as possible the social, home-like feeling which characterizes the more humble assemblies. The place of meeting should therefore be as inviting as possible, and all its arrangements should contribute to the enjoyment of public worship. It should be the sabbath home—the family room of the church.

The influence of the building upon the character of the community, by inciting to habits of neatness and the elevation of taste, though of minor importance, is too great to be overlooked. To this end, the location, size, materials, form and embellishments of the structure, should be adapted to one another, to the purpose designed, and to the people to be accommodated. Features which in stone are majestic, may look ridiculous in wood; and the temple which, massive and spacious, on the summit of a hill awes the spectator, may be contemptible when reproduced in miniature in a different location. Especially, should the whole building be truthful. If stone or brick cannot be employed, use wood, and let it appear as wood. If oak be not convenient, use pine, without being ashamed of it. Lying plaster and prevaricating paint, in houses of worship, may cause more falsehood elsewhere than their authors suspect.

The building represented at the head of this article is designed to embody these ideas, at an expenditure not exceeding the cost of ordinary houses of the same capacity.

The building is 50 feet long by 32 feet wide on the outside, built of wood, and having seats for 250 persons. The walls are low, and the ceiling is finished into the roof, giving all the advantage of a high room, without its cheerless aspect. A choir-gallery occupies the space over the porch. The pulpit is elevated three steps, and consists of a platform and desk. The rear wall is firred out to the front line of the chimney, except a recess behind the pulpit. On each side, a closet is provided for receiving the Sabbath school library. The seats are without doors. An open porch covers the platform in front of the building, to which people may step from wagons or other vehicles. The outside covering of the house is placed vertically, protected by battens at the joints, as more in keeping with the form, and more durable than clapboards. The roof and spire are shingled. The steepness of the roof is adopted for its durability and its economy, considering the height of room. The room is designed to be warmed by a stove in a small cellar under the front end, thus obtaining more direct benefit from the fire, and avoiding the noise, dust and other inconveniences of stoves in the room. If desirable, however, stove room can be had by the side of the entrance. Ventilation is provided by means of an opening into the gable, front and rear, and others in the ceiling, all to be opened and closed by means of cords. The walls may be colored a tint slightly turned from white; the recess behind the preacher should be of a dull shade, and all severe contrasts of color, or of light and shade, should be avoided in the arrangement of the window curtains or blinds and the pulpit furniture. Bright colored cushions and trimmings should not be used, where so constantly in sight. In lighting for evening meetings, the lights should be so arranged, if practicable, as not to be in sight of those looking at the minister. More drowsiness and headaches in time of worship are caused by the bad arrangement of color and light around the pulpit, than many apprehend. The outside should not be painted too dark, nor yet of pure white. There are no outside blinds. The grounds should be enclosed, and the improvements which are made upon them should be such as will not need continued attention. Protection for horses should be provided so far in the rear as not to create disturbance; and the ground should be sufficiently large for that purpose. Perennial shrubs and forest trees, planted without stiffness of arrangement, should be made to contribute to the pleasant appearance of the spot. By all means retain any tree that may be on the lot already.

COST.—The whole building, complete, is estimated to cost $2,500, with work and materials at New York prices. This is thought to be a liberal estimate. If desirable, the building can be erected at different times, as the wants or means of the congregation may determine; the turret, porch, gallery, and decorations of ceiling being added after the shell is put up. This would reduce the first cost some six hundred dollars. The last named ornaments are designed to be of wood, nailed to the ceiling. In a timber country probably this estimate would be considerably too large; as in this city, at present, all materials are high.

Missionary Intelligence.

IOWA.

From Rev. G. B. Hitchcock, Eddyville, Wappello Co.

Improving Habits.

The quarter which has just closed, has been one of some interest, and we hope, advancement. Our congregations, both in town and country, have been more full and regular than heretofore. Regularity on the part of those who do not belong to the church, is very uncommon in this country. We seldom have the same congregation to preach to twice in succession. This roving disposition will soon give place, we trust, to a steady attendance upon the word and ordinances of God's house; so that those who now only hear occasionally a sermon, will be brought under a continued influence of Gospel truth.

Three were added to our church at our last communion, which was an interesting season to the church and the community.

The present winter has been the coldest experienced in Iowa since the winter of 1842 and '43. In consequence of the extreme cold, we have been obliged to abandon the house which we have heretofore occupied, and are now, by invitation, holding our meetings in the Methodist meeting house. Our own house is now under contract; and we hope to have it finished early in the coming season. The superintendence of this work, which devolves entirely on myself, requires much of my time and thoughts—too much, I fear, for the present benefit of the people or of myself. The hope, however, of having a house where we can worship without molestation, leads me to take a course which, under other circumstances, I should regard as unwise. We now have to conform to the arrangements of other denominations, so that we can have nothing like system in our work, but have to fill up such time as is not occupied by others.

Losses and Liberality.

It will be a heavy draft upon our little church to meet the expenses of their meeting house. Most of them sustained losses, or failed to raise a crop the last year, in consequence of the flood which swept through this valley in the summer; but notwithstanding this, they manifest a commendable zeal in the work. Some of our members who are not worth $200, have subscribed $50, and will do more if it is needed. I am encouraged, from these facts, to hope that we shall be able to build our house, principally, with our own means. "The people have a mind to the work."

The Last shall be First.

Here is a missionary who is literally on the frontier; and yet from the account he gives of the spirit of the people in favor of improvement and reform, it seems probable that they will soon be superior to many communities in the East, who have had a quarter or a half century of Gospel cultivation.

On my West I can extend my labors indefinitely—to the Rocky Mountains, for ought that I know—so that I may for the time being claim the honor of being a frontier missionary. West of my field there are no post-offices, no school houses, no organized towns, no school districts. Indeed, in the western and southern parts of my own field, there are neither school houses nor school districts; and as to houses of worship, they are visions of the future—some of them of the distant future.

In addition to my Sabbath labors, since I moved, I have visited nearly every family in the settlement, distributing tracts and getting subscribers to the American Messenger. I have succeeded in getting it taken in every family except one, so far as I have gone. I have obtained 50 subscribers, and expect some 8 or 10 more. Also the Child's Paper goes wherever there are children. We have regular monthly Temperance meetings and addresses. We had a groggery last season; but it is broken up, so that I do not know of any place where liquor can be had. We intend moving for the Maine Law next season, when our legislature meets. We have a Maternal Association, which meets monthly; by this I hope to do something, by way of lectures, reading matter, and suggestions, through Mrs. G., for the young. I feel that influence exerted in this way, will be like affecting the fountains, causing them to send forth sweet waters instead of the bitter now sent forth.

We are doing something in Bible distribution by way of rewards for committing the Assembly's Catechism. We have an interesting Bible class, which meets once in two weeks. It has now been in operation about nine months, and seems to become increasingly interesting.

An Impulse Given.

During my short stay here, I have seen much to encourage me. My audience on the Sabbath has been constantly increasing. Yesterday, the number was nearly twice that of my first Sabbath, notwithstanding the mud was almost impassable. This increase of numbers has waked up the members of the church, weak as they are, for a new house. Even the effort to build, and that without foreign aid, is noble. One member of the church, living eight miles distant in the country, has offered three hundred dollars for a new church; and he is not wealthy. Others will give fifty, and a hundred, that might be called poor mechanics or farmers. One widow lady, a member of the church, I understand has one hundred dollars laid aside especially for the new church.

I mention these few things to show that—outwardly at least—the prospects of this feeble church are brightening. And I know not why such an enterprise here, and one undertaken by so few, might not be taken as an index of their religious principles and feelings.

Such is the shrewdness and intelligence of many in such a village as this, that I never felt myself called upon to exert myself more in preparation for the Sabbath than here.

Encouraging Meetings.

From Rev. J. V. A. Woods, Red Rock, Madison Co.

We held our communion at Red Rock in January, and it was very solemn and interesting. The attendance was large, and impressions that we trust will prove lasting, were made on the minds of some who have not professed religion. Also, a week since, we held a communion at Pleasantville church, and it was an interesting occasion. All the unconverted seemed to realize that they must repent and believe the Gospel, or perish forever. They were not ashamed to come forward, and present themselves as seeking salvation.

Our prospects are quite encouraging. Christians here love to meet for prayer, and are always ready for every good word and work. At Red Rock the prospect is that we shall have a large, growing and efficient church. Our church edifice is to be dedicated on the 4th of July; at which time, also, we expect to have a Sabbath school and Temperance celebration.

The prayer meeting at Pleasantville is such as you would like to be in. In short, the churches in this field are beginning to awake to duty, in various respects, and there is an urgent and increasing demand for more laborers.

From Rev. W. A. Keith, Tipton, Cedar Co.

Mr. K. preaches a part of the time at other stations. Of one of these, Pedee, he gives an encouraging account, as follows:

My congregations at Pedee have always been large, the great difficulty being the want of a suitable house of worship. It is hoped that the effort already commenced to erect a meeting house, will, during the coming year, be carried through. They have no preaching at present, neither have they had since last spring, except what I furnish. A commendable effort has recently been made here, to increase the interest in the cause of Sabbath schools. About seventeen dollars was raised at a recent meeting of the citizens, towards enlarging the library of the school in the place; and a stimulus was thus given which, it is hoped, will be of essential benefit to the cause. It is my object to encourage any thing in respect to which the people seem to be interested, that is at all connected with the common cause of improvement. This neighborhood has ever manifested more than ordinary interest on the subject of education. Their schools are kept up about eight months out of the twelve, and are furnished with competent teachers. They have made the beginning in respect to a circulating library, which now contains about one hundred choice volumes of general reading. I look upon all this as promising important help to the work in which I am engaged, and I hope at some future day to report most favorable results therefrom.

Obstacles.

The proprietor ——— has done all he could to prevent any action on the part of the people favorable to the cause of religion, even refusing to sell land for a school house, unless a vote was passed that no religious services should ever be held in it. But God will cause the wrath of man to praise him. There is now less liquor drank there, and better attendance on religious exercises, than at any other village of the same size in this region.

What does it mean?

I have never experienced the trouble with unworthy professors that I have here. I have learned that no letters can be trusted. Several persons have come here with recent letters; but a residence of a few months has shown that they were unfit for any church. The West—especially the extreme West—is a crucible in which Eastern piety is tested.

MISSOURI.

From Rev. T. S. Reeve, St. Joseph, Buchanan Co.

Revivals in Western Missouri.

During the winter I went to Parkville, and together with Rev. F. Starr, of Weston, labored some two or three weeks. God blessed us, poured out his Spirit, and hopefully converted some thirty or more persons—many of them heads of families.

On Feb. 15th, we closed a meeting in my church at this place, which commenced on Thursday before the 4th Sabbath in January. Revs. G. S. Woodward and F. Starr were present. God blessed their labors here. More than sixty asked the prayers of God's people; more than forty professed to have obtained a hope in Christ; and twenty nine have united with this church by public profession of their faith. Among these were sixteen young men—some of whom were among the influential class of society. There are some more whom we expect to join the church after a little.

For these things, so undeserved on our part, "we thank God and take courage," hoping that we may have something yet to write which shall gladden the hearts of those who, for so many years, have generously aided this church in its growth from infancy to manhood. Prospects look brighter now than they ever have done. I think I can say that this year will be the last this church will ask aid; and soon it will begin to pay back, with interest, the sums already received. I have never felt so encouraged as now. Oh! may it please the King of kings to continue his spiritual blessings and encouragements!

From a Missionary Journal.

Painstaking to hear the Gospel.

It is a prevailing impression, that Western Missouri is a hard field for doing good. And it is true, that there are some circumstances which demand of the missionary who labors there, much sacrifice and toil. But no man who has truly given himself to Christ in the work of the ministry, can fail to be moved by the evident desire for the Gospel, evinced on the occasions narrated below. Who can have the heart to turn away from communities thus disposed to listen to the word of truth?

At our meeting in this church, Brother T—— preached for us five sermons; three sermons were preached by ministers of other denominations; 12 sermons, in all, were preached during the five days and evenings of our meeting. Do you wish to know the distances some came, riding on horses, to the meetings? An old gentleman and young lady came 20 miles. Another gentleman, his wife and babe, 30 miles. Three young men, 35 miles. A man who is a member of my church came from home, 40 miles. A young lady and her brother, came 55 miles. These two knew no persons here, except a colporteur and myself. One lady, who is perhaps forty years old, who has not walked nor been able to sit up a day for ten years, was brought six miles in a carriage to the meeting. Perhaps twenty families encamped on the ground part of the time. Twelve young people inquired what they must do to be saved. One expressed a hope that her sins were forgiven.

October 30th. Left home at six o'clock, and rode 37 miles, "by a way that I knew not," and preached to a cabin full of people at night. One of my hearers had come 7 miles, another 14. The day following; I went, I think 20 miles, to B——, and preached at night in a school-room, where an Eastern young lady teaches. The next day I went with Rev. Mr. R—— to the place of worship (a cabin where a large family reside), and preached twice. The day following, which was the Sabbath, I preached twice. An old man, who had heard Presbyterian preaching in his youth, left his home before dawn on Sabbath morning, and rode 19 miles to our meeting. I preached at his house on the evening of the day following. The next evening I preached at S——. I came home on Wednesday, having traveled more than 120 miles, and preached eight times in seven days. The following Saturday evening and Sabbath, I preached in the northwest part of my parish. It was thought that we might lose something there, because of so little Presbyterian preaching. I had been absent from there for several months in succession.

I was sorry to learn, that Rev. —— did not come to S., or its vicinity. I cannot go six Sabbaths in each month, and preach at the different places where they desire Presbyterian preaching. At one place they wish me to be with them two Sabbaths each month; at another place, they wish half of my time; at another one fourth; at another a fourth. How can I say No? when after listening attentively, they request me to "come again," or make another appointment? Half my time is desired at S. and vicinity. I have undertaken to preach for them one Sabbath in each month.

Leave not the Missionary to Toil Alone.

It is not pecuniary aid alone, that the missionary needs. He has wants that are heavier, and griefs that are sorer than temporal distress. The loss of souls affects him more deeply than his personal trials; and it is for their sake that he beseeches his benefactors to sympathize with and pray for him. Christian reader, place yourself in the missionary's stead, and help him by your earnest supplications at the mercy seat.

It has been about twenty years since there has been a revival here. The church that was once strong has become weak; some have removed to other fields, to return no more; and we read the names of others on the stones that mark the spots where their bodies sleep. The church now numbers about forty, and but few of these are as devoted to their Master's service as is desirable they should be. Their children are out of the church, many of them nearly grown; and among all the youth in this community, there are but very few professors of religion. For them there has been much anxiety felt the past year, and for them many an anxious prayer has been offered. We did hope that the Lord would visit us in mercy during the past year, and gather the young into the church. The year has passed away, and those fond hopes have not been realized. And now, with an aching heart, I commence the duties of the new year. "Looking unto Jesus" for help, I will endeavor to "know nothing but Christ and him crucified," among this people. O, could you feel all the anxieties that your missionary feels; could you know the sorrows that oppress his heart, when around him the impenitent are carried to the grave, how earnestly would you pray for the blessing of God upon his labors!

From Rev. C. H. Heckman, German Missionary in Chariton Co. and vicinity.

Some encouraging tokens have been given me in my work during the last quarter. In Carroll county, I have received into the church four persons by profession. The people there have also started in the work of building a house of worship in good earnest. They propose to build a house, framed and ceiled, 22 by 30 feet. Toward this, there has been subscribed $110, in money. One of my members proposed to do the carpenter work, free of charge, for the love he has to Christ and his cause. Another member, who was one year ago a Catholic, offers to build and furnish the pulpit, together with a case for the books of the Sabbath school. Another man, an American, who was a confirmed infidel at the time of my last report, and would not even attend any religious meetings, has subscribed five dollars to the object, offered his big team for hauling, and two hands to work on the building till it is completed. Others furnish materials, labor, &c., so that we almost realize the description of the prophet, in Is. 41: 6 and 7, "They helped every one his neighbor; and every one said to his brother, be of good courage. So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smote with the hammer him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for the soldering; and he fastened it with nails, that it should not be moved." (For "goldsmith" in the above, read stone-mason, as we have no use for the former functionary.)

Usefulness of Nelson on Infidelity.

I have circulated several copies of this book, both in English and German, in this region. I sold to the man above named, a copy in English, through one of my elders, who is a neighbor of his. His reading of that has resulted in his renouncing his infidelity; and he is now found regularly in the sanctuary. And at our meeting for church building, he was foremost among the counselors for the object, and seemed quite intent on having every thing done rightly, and done now, while they all have leisure to attend to it. He is a man of much wealth for this country. His interest in our meetings and in our house, ought further to be explained by the fact, that I preach half the time in English. With this, Americans and Germans both seem much pleased, as the latter strongly desire to become and to appear Americanized. I hope by practice, to be able to preach eventually as well, or nearly as well, in English as in German. I earnestly hope that other brethren in the missionary field may make free use of Nelson on Infidelity. This book has, under God, produced incalculable good in several cases, beside the above, within my own observation within two years.

In Brunswick, we have not so much encouragement, but are here far from despairing. The people here are also moving in the matter of church building, and I hope we shall be able to build in the course of the ensuing summer, though it must be with some "foreign aid," which I shall hope to obtain.

WISCONSIN.

The Great Diagonal Thoroughfare of Wisconsin.

The "Madison District Convention" of Presbyterian and Congregational churches, which comprehended a large share of the central and northern portions of the State, was last year divided, and a new district convention erected on the north, with the name of Winnebago, from the large lake which characterizes its territory. This ecclesiastical body occupies a most important field, and has committed to it a most responsible work. This responsibility is felt, we trust, in a good measure, by the missionaries and other ministers on the ground.

I do not think there is a spot on the globe, where God, in his providence, is more loudly calling on Christians to go in and possess the land, in the length and breadth of it, than within the limits of our new convention. The great thoroughfare from Green Bay to Fort Winnebago, goes diagonally through the whole extent of our convention. This work is now in progress. Already the waters of the Wisconsin and Neenah, or Fox Rivers, are connected by canal; or, in other words, the waters that enter the ocean at the two distant points, the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Gulf of Mexico, are united by a canal one mile in length. Prospective villages and cities are rising into being, as by magic, all along this thoroughfare. And these villages and cities will become Sodoms, unless the Gospel is early planted within them. The missionary should be among the first ten, who commence a new settlement here. In many places he is early welcomed and even called for; and this of itself indicates a good state of morals, to say the least.

I am happy to say, that the more important places are already supplied, and there is a good degree of wakefulness to the spiritual wants of this section.

Wonderful Rapidity of Growth.

At our recent meeting at Oshkosh, one brother related an interesting incident in regard to the past. He said, "Five years ago, I crossed the river at this place, and having the name of a gentleman, I inquired for him, and was pointed to the second frame building in the place, where Mr. J. was at work. On entering, instead of a stranger, as I expected, I found a well known member of my former church. Soon we were seated by this fireside, in this very room, with Mrs. J., a sister in the same church. After the kindly greetings and the commingling of tears of gladness, at the unexpected meeting of those who were more than friends—brethren in Christ, notice was given all through the place, of an evening lecture, and the house was filled with eager listeners, to the first sermon, probably, ever preached in this place. An appointment was left for four weeks afterwards, when I preached to a full audience that came together from somewhere; I knew not whence."

I told the brother, that every part of his interesting narration seemed to me perfectly credible, but the single declaration that it was but five years ago. For we could look down Main street, thickly built upon both sides with large buildings and stores, having all the business appearance of a little city; two meeting houses, dwelling houses in every direction, steam saw mills on both sides of the river, and seven steamboats that touch at that place, with 2,000 inhabitants. All this, and much more, looked incredible as the result of five years. But nevertheless, it is true; and this is but a specimen of growing villages along this line of improvements. Now is the time to mold the character of these places.

Earliest Churches in Wisconsin.

The field of our new Convention is comparatively new, and yet we are the oldest church in the State. The Stockbridge church was organized as a foreign missionary church (of Indians), in Oneida Co., N. Y.; in 1818, and in 1821 they removed to Wisconsin. This was the first church organization in Wisconsin, and is now a member of our Convention, and sustains its own minister. Green Bay church was the second, and was organized in 1836, and built the first meeting house in the State, in 1838. Four years ago, last October, I came into Fond du Lac county; and there was then but one minister and one church in the county; one minister and church in Marquette county; one minister and church in Brown county; one of each in Winnebago county, and one in Calumet county. Now, within the limits of our Convention, there are 18 or 20 churches, and 12 or 14 ministers.

A Church Building Consecrated by the Descending Spirit.

To-day closes the third week in a solemn and delightful religious festival, which we have held in our new house of worship.

By this work the church has been visited and watered. It is the first revival ever enjoyed here, although there have been from time to time seasons of slightly awakened interest. Thus far, the work has been as silent as a spring rain. God's presence has been manifest only in the still small voice. Our meetings have sometimes been awfully silent; and this has been almost the sole manifestation of feeling. A solemnity prevailed that seemed to seize and hold the thought of every hearer.

Comfort amid Persecutions.

The false notions of many German emigrants respecting the nature of "liberty," in connection with the hatred which the natural heart feels to the truths of the Gospel, have broken out in acts of persecution towards some of our missionaries. Violence to their persons, as well as opposition to their doctrines, is not unfrequently threatened; and they are obliged to feel that they are "in perils oft."

It is too true, that many of the Germans throw off, in this land, the restraints of Christianity. One reason, among others, is a false conception of freedom. "We have been oppressed long enough by kings and priests in Germany," I have heard many say; "you can't get us under the yoke here again." But these very individuals are to be reached by the power of the Gospel, if preached to them in a clear, faithful manner.

I think the devil must somehow feel that his dominion here is in danger, therefore he is at work and is roaring. They do with the people as the boy with his dog, when he says: "Seek him! seek him!" Yea, one minister, and a ruling elder too, went with this subject into the pulpit, where he remarked that either God or I myself must be a liar. One man, after a sermon which was too pointed for him, said: "If he preaches one more sermon like this, I will crush his last bone."

Though I have felt uncomfortable under such circumstances, I have always been conscious that I was in the Lord's hand, and that the cause in which I was engaged was not mine, but my Great Master's. I am not very fearful that I shall fall on the battle field; because I feel unworthy to be a martyr; and if I should be, I would still regard it as the greatest honor, to suffer for Christ.

Nevertheless, in the midst of this storm, the Lord manifests his arm of grace in a truly wonderful manner; whereby I am more than comforted. Not seldom I am visited in the evening by such as ask: "What shall we do to be saved?" Several have promised henceforth to seek the Lord and to serve him. O, it is sweet to hear how some who have been formerly blasphemers, now humbly pray, like children, for mercy and grace, because I believe indeed that God will hear and answer such cries for mercy. Public meetings are well attended; so are the regular Bible class and prayer meeting on Friday night. Some persons are regularly there from a distance of one to two, or even three miles, no matter if it be muddy, storming, freezing or snowing. And these very persons were enemies of Christianity a short time ago. You see, therefore, dear brethren, that the arm of the Lord is manifesting itself among us.

Toils and Exposures not always to be Dreaded.

A missionary thus relates a portion of his experience in a very new field.

I thank God for the privilege of laboring in the work of the Gospel in such a field, so new, so needy, so hard, so promising.

Coming here on the tenth of October last, I found a Congregational church of thirty three members, widely scattered on the prairie, and poor, but gradually improving their pecuniary state. Not one of the ten brethren has a comfortable house to live in. I have not been able to have a room for study yet, except once or twice for a few hours; and most of the time I have been visiting from house to house, or going to different neighborhoods to attend meetings. My accommodations have often been such as would seem very strange in any place where I have been in States as far East as Ohio; but they have been cordially offered and gratefully enjoyed; though sometimes they have been accompanied by sufferings. For instance, I slept several times in a house where my room was far colder, and more open to the wind, than the average of New England barns; and once, at least, when the thermometer indicated a coldness of 22 degrees below zero.

But my health has improved by means of the fine, bracing climate and my many long walks. In those cold days, I crossed the prairie several times, walking a distance of six to nine miles each time. My strength is greater now than for fifteen years past. During the past quarter, I have preached twice every Sabbath, about fifteen times on week day evenings, two preparatory lectures, and one funeral sermon; visited eight schools, and given addresses on fifteen or twenty occasions. I have visited a considerable number of families, but have kept no account to show how many. One object has been, to acquaint myself with the situation and condition of the people. I have found about fifteen persons who have been members of Congregational and Presbyterian churches, but have not become connected with this church, except three that have joined since I came. I hope some others will join us soon.

We meet in school houses; on the Sabbath, alternately in two, which are about six miles apart; and on other days, in as many as I can preach in, to apparent advantage.

Our audiences have generally been good, the houses being nearly, or quite full.

Many of my visits have been very interesting. I think there is a state of feeling prevalent, to a considerable extent, that is favorable to religious effort, and gives promise of prosperity to religion here. But there are hindrances also. Profanity and Sabbath breaking are very common among old and young. And there has been an effort made to prejudice people against our name, and some of our opinions and practices. But I hope that "the manifestation of the truth," by clear preaching of the simple Gospel, in kindness and earnestness, will commend us to favor among them. I learn that God gives me such favor in the eyes of some of the leading young people, as promises much for my usefulness among them.

Foreign Aid Relinquished.

On behalf of the Congregational church in this place, I wish to say to the Secretaries, to the Executive Committee, and the patrons of the American Home Missionary Society, that, as we trust, the day of our dependence on you, though not of our feebleness, has passed by. We hope, though not without prolonged, and not yet overcome misgivings, to be able, hereafter, to go alone. We hardly dared to entertain this hope at all, at present; but we dare not now abandon it. But, though doubtful about the future, we shall try the experiment. We are anxious that other places should have the benefit of the funds which we have been drawing from your Treasury.

We are indeed grateful to God, first of all, and then to you his servants, for your performance of what he put into your hearts; and we cannot express our gratitude. We shall always remember you and pray that your labors may be abundant, and your resources adequate. We shall strive to make such returns for your generosity, as God may enable us to, in his providence, and especially by his Spirit.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. S. Jessup, Eagle Point, Ogle Co.

Review of Six Years.

Six years have now elapsed since I received my first commission to preach the Gospel to this church. In this time, 39 persons have been added to the church, seven suspended, five dismissed, and four deceased.

The first and last years have been the most prosperous, so far as the addition of members is concerned, 17 having been added the first and 14 the last; and a neat and commodious house of worship was completed and dedicated the first Sabbath in 1851.

In taking a retrospect of the six years past, I can note progress in several particulars, both in the church and in the community. Then, there was but one school house in the township, familiarly known as the "Old Center," situated in the midst of the grove, about a mile and a half from the nearest house, the common property of the whole community, where ministers of every stamp and denomination resorted, to "hold forth," each in his own peculiar way and manner. Its furniture, such as is frequently found in such buildings in new settlements, viz.: slab seats without backs, a board running round the room, supported by pins in the logs, for writing desk; and when used for preaching, the speaker stood in one corner with a board before him, one foot by three, on which to lay his books or manuscript; one end of it was sustained by the logs and the other by two stakes, having one half his congregation sitting with their backs and sides to him. Now, there are nine school houses, some well seated, with black boards and other conveniences for imparting instruction; two meeting houses, Methodist and Presbyterian, conveniently seated and furnished. Temperance and kindred subjects have exerted a salutary influence, and many vices which were then very prevalent have now almost entirely disappeared. Yet there is much, very much to be done to retain the position that has already been attained.

From Rev. S. G. Wright, Toulon, Stark Co.

Revival.

On the last Sabbath of October, Elder B., was invited by the Baptist church of Toulon, to hold a series of meetings with them. He complied, and invited all Christians to coöperate in efforts for a revival of religion, without regard to denominational differences. We accepted the invitation, and labored together for five weeks, though he did all the preaching and had the general direction of the meeting. There was a marked solemnity from the first. That solemnity was increased by the sickness and death of a young man connected with the largest mercantile house in the place. He was not a professor of religion, but left evidence to his relatives and attendants, that he had become a subject of grace. His exhortations to his parents and associates, were solemn and impressive. They gave him solemn promises that they would attend to their souls' salvation without delay. The Spirit of God seemed to use this providence as a means of bringing both of his parents, and both the clerks in the store, as well as three inmates of the family, to a saving union with Christ.

From this time the work went on with increased power. There was much wrestling prayer, and much visiting from house to house, in order to exhort sinners to be reconciled to God. Soon, the voice of young converts was heard in prayer and exhortation to their companions, to come and seek the Lord. Over forty expressed a hope in Christ, and beholders were forced to exclaim "what hath God wrought." As the result of this meeting, near thirty united with the Baptist church, and about half that number with the Congregational.

On the 1st Sabbath of December, we commenced a meeting at Lafayette, on the same terms as at Toulon. As there, Elder B. did all the preaching. The wrath of many was aroused, by the clear and pointed manner in which he illustrated human depravity. The opposition rose to a high pitch, and many Christians feared that no good would result. But others seemed to get firm hold of the promises and to expect a blessing. The work among Christians went on, and old difficulties were reconciled, and cold hearted professors began to confess and pray. After two weeks, the excited emotion was turned into another channel. The anxious inquiry was heard, "What shall I do to be saved?" Those who had raised their voices in opposition, now raised them in prayer and exhortation.

Some of the meetings were the most intensely interesting that I ever attended. The number of inquirers increased to sixty, and soon most of them were rejoicing in hope.

The change at Lafayette is most striking, and I hope will prove lasting. Twenty have united with us; fifteen with the Baptists and ten with the Methodist Episcopal, and some with the Methodist Protestant church. To God be all the glory.

"The Morning Cometh."

We who are watching the signs of the times, the dawns of hope and the breaking of day, can almost say, "The morning cometh!" We think we can perceive a token of good in the increased attendance of late upon the means of grace and an increasing spirit of prayer for the blessing of God to accompany those means. On the whole, we are able, we think, to report constant and decided progress. During the year past, we have enjoyed a previous revival of religion, as the fruits of which, fifteen souls were added to our communion by profession. Our little church has a good deal of salt in it, and is making an effort to produce an elevated standard of piety. It is a bright light in this great valley, and is exerting a wide and good influence. We have abundant reason, therefore, in view of the past, to thank God and take courage.

Grateful Valediction of an Assisted Church.

From the Elders of the Presbyterian Church in Bellville, Bond Co.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We are happy in being able to write you a letter which is not designed to request further assistance. For many years we have looked to you and the Society for which you act, as our patrons and benefactors. Through difficulties without number and beyond description, we have maintained the means of grace in this place of great wickedness. But without your timely and friendly aid, we should have failed entirely. We have made extra efforts at the present time, and find that we shall be able to support our pastor the coming year without your assistance. But how long we shall be able to do so, will depend upon the future smiles and blessings of our common Master.

We cannot take our leave of you without expressing our deep and sincere feelings of gratitude toward the Home Missionary Society and its liberal supporters. We have a high esteem and almost a veneration for that Institution. We intend to make it one of the first objects of our benevolent contributions, and if possible, do something to aid other feeble churches which are struggling for life as we have been. In our monthly concerts we shall not forget the work of Home Missions. Our beloved country, as well as heathen lands, shall have a share in our contributions and prayers.

The work before the friends of Christ everywhere is great and urgent; and we who live in this age and in this country, are under the most fearful responsibilities. But if we meet them in the spirit of the Gospel, the kingdom shall be ours. Our leader is none other than the "King of kings."

We bid an affectionate adieu to our brethren of this church. We part from them with pleasure and with reluctance; pleasure, that they no longer need our aid—reluctance, that the fraternal intercourse which has attended our relations is now to end. And yet it will not wholly end. We hope still to meet at the mercy seat, still to be co-laborers in the common cause of our country's welfare; and ere long to rejoice together over our finished work before the throne on high.

The Demands Made on Western Ministers.

The following is taken from the report of a missionary in which he acknowledges a donation of books.

I have been pressed down in spirit for years, as I have traveled through this State, and witnessed the rapid progress that is made in most of our communities, in science, letters, and in activity in the great movements of the day; and when I reflected, that it was put out of my power to supply myself with the means of self-advancement equal to the emergency. For the last four years, I have preached to congregations of more than ordinary intellectual acquirements. Some of my hearers are men of thorough literary training, and of inquiring minds. To supply such with the mental food suited to their wants and tastes, would soon drain a mind of its last idea, if it be in possession of no resources except its own inventive power. The missionary in the West, is emphatically a man of the world; and he must be such; yet he cannot be a worldly man, and prosper in his labors for Christ. Our missionaries are expected to be foremost in all the moral movements of the day. They must have well digested views of political economy; must be able to lecture on the history and progress of any science; must have an opinion on all points of theology, civil affairs, or art. Now, to be able to answer satisfactorily such questions as are often propounded, requires a pretty extensive acquaintance with the researches of other minds, who have investigated these various subjects.

Intellectual Bearings of Home Missions.

This is becoming more true every year in the West. The missionary, therefore, holds a very responsible position in society, as it is forming in the West. No man can travel through this State, and contrast those settlements where the missionary, sent out and sustained by the A. H. M. S., has exerted his influence, with those communities where such a missionary has not labored, without being convinced that the A. H. M. S., is doing more than any other agency, to establish society, now forming in the West, upon an intellectual, moral, and religious basis. Notwithstanding all the disadvantages under which missionaries have heretofore labored, such an opinion must invariably be formed, by any one who makes the examination. What an overwhelming influence, then, would the missionary exert, were he fully furnished for his work, and had the means of supplying himself with the suitable helps for study.

At the East, society is formed; most questions of vital moment are settled, and customs are established. Here every thing is emerging anew from chaos.

"Your Zeal hath Provoked Many."

I believe it is the feeling of the community generally, and some godly men in other denominations have testified the same to me, that the Presbyterian Church is in a more flourishing condition, and its prospects brighter, than they have been for many years. One thing is certain, that some other churches in this place, have been "provoked," if not "to love," certainly to "good works;" so that this community, which has long been notorious for its indifference to churches and school houses, is about to become celebrated for having, at least as good churches, and decidedly the best common school privileges, of any village in this region of country. There has been built since my last report, a house for common school purposes, at a cost of between two and three thousand dollars, capable of accommodating, in its several departments, more than two hundred scholars. Two competent teachers have been engaged at an expense of $1,000, and another is still wanted. In these things we rejoice, for we believe education to be the handmaid of religion. What we want now is a powerful outpouring of the Spirit of God, to quicken and edify saints, and convict and convert sinners; and for this we feel encouraged to pray and labor.

INDIANA.

For some years past this fertile State has been unduly neglected by the rising ministry. The eclat attending the opening of the Pacific coast to missionary effort, and the fact that the great thoroughfares have led around rather than through the State, has caused its claims to be less obvious than they should be. We would join our voice to the following appeals of a correspondent, and urge upon those who are looking forward to a missionary life in the West, to give a candid consideration to the facts which he states.

The State of Indiana, now numbers one million people, and is advancing in population, wealth, and political importance with great rapidity; and, counting up the numbers of those who assume the functions of the gospel minister, "great is the company of preachers." But without stopping to disparage any, or to undervalue the services of even the most ignorant or the least qualified, let us take a survey of this old missionary ground—once traversed by the faithful pioneer missionary, Father Dickey, just called to his last reward, and with him by kindred spirits, early in the field, and who yet labor on, many of whom the frosts of age are whitening for the harvest.

According to the minutes of our last General Assembly, there are connected with that body in this State, sixty nine ministers, of whom some sixteen are engaged, either as agents for various benevolent objects, or in teaching. This leaves us but fifty three engaged in the pastoral office, as stated supplies and missionaries. Our churches entirely destitute are not less than 20; many of which, planted by the home missionary, and for many years fostered by your Society, are left to languish—it may be to die—for the want of some to break to them the bread of life. Besides, there are vast sections of the country filling up with a dense population, where new churches might and ought to be planted. But where are the laborers? In the Synod of Wabash, we need a minister at Romney and West Point, at Pittsburg and Delphi. One at Fort Wayne, one at Williamsport and Attica. There ought also to be efficient missionaries to labor in various other places, where churches might be gathered, of thousands who are wandering in error and in sin. Let some ten or fifteen of the young men, to whom you alluded in a recent number of the Home Missionary as lingering unemployed around the altars of the East, gird up the loins of their minds with the true apostolic and missionary girdle, and come into this field, and fill our vacancies, or make places for themselves, and gather in the wide-spread harvest.

It may be that this old field is not as inviting as those newer, and over which is thrown more of an air of romance. Even if it were true that more self-denial would be called into requisition here, than in California or Oregon—which is very questionable—it should still be remembered that the greater the cross the greater the crown; and by the blessing of God upon faithful, self-denying labor, this country, so rich and beautiful in its physical aspects, may become as the garden of the Lord. I hope your Committee, and those who look for important fields of labor, will not overlook Indiana, upon which so much has been expended, and upon which so much more is needed.

We greatly need more men in the ministerial office; and many who are already in it, need more courage and enterprise, if not more piety and self-denial, to bear them away into the new settlements. And last, but not therefore unimportant, there is need of a better support for those who are in the field. The life of the ministry, both at the East and the West, is, in numerous instances, crushed out of it by the weight of care and anxiety that comes upon it through poverty.

Enduring Hardness.

This has been to me a season of deep solemnity. God has visited us with the rod of affliction. We have lived in the midst of sickness and death, for almost six months. Soon after we came here, my wife and I were taken on the same day with violent fever. My attack, though severe, was short. I soon recovered of the fever, so that I was able to assist in waiting on my companion, who was then, as we all thought, near the grave; but in the providence of God, she still survives. Soon after my recovery from the fever I was attacked with the ague, which continues to the present time. But I have been able, with a few exceptions, to preach on the Sabbath, and to officiate at a number of funerals; also to visit the sick occasionally. But owing to the great amount of sickness in my own family, my labors have been comparatively inefficient. I have not been able to visit as I should have done. This mode of preaching the Gospel to sinners individually, from house to house, is greatly needed in this place. My family continues to be much afflicted. My companion, while I write, lies sick; and I have reason to fear she will not recover. Our children, too, have all been sick. Some are still sick. Thus, God in his providence has visited us. But it is all as it should be; what the Lord does is right. May he sanctify to us these afflictions!

But I have been only describing our own condition; others have suffered greatly, very few have escaped, perhaps not more than two in ten, and many have gone to their long homes. We would naturally suppose that under such a state of things, a deep solemnity would pervade the minds of the people. But this is not the case; no, it is far from it. I have never lived where sinners appeared more impenitent and unconcerned for the salvation of their souls. Practical infidelity, Universalism, and skepticism prevail here to a degree that is truly alarming. Sabbath breaking, gambling, profaneness and drunkenness, are among the crimes that characterize this place.

I am told, that a good man, truly moral and upright, cannot be elected to office in this place. Yesterday, I visited an old gentleman, one of the most worthy in the town. He has lived here a number of years and is well acquainted with the people of this place, and throughout the county. He said to me, that "he verily believed, if the best man in ten adjoining counties were here, and would avow himself an advocate of the temperance cause, he could not be elected to any office of trust in the county." Such is the sad condition of this place, and the community around us. Well may I say, in view of this field of labor and of the great responsibility of a minister of the Gospel, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

On the Sabbath, our congregations are comparatively small. We also have here three "doggeries," and I have been told, by those who have an opportunity to know, that the congregations who assemble there on the Sabbath, to worship Bacchus, are larger than those that assemble at the house of God. In view of these things, I am cast down and greatly discouraged.

Christians who have the heart "to bear one another's burdens," and to "weep with those who weep," can hardly fail to express their sympathy for the writer of this report, in intercession before the mercy seat.

From Rev. James Gordon, Fulton Co.

Revival in Pisgah Church.

God in mercy has visited the Pisgah church with the outpouring of his Holy Spirit, and my soul is filled with inexpressible joy. The hearts of God's children there have been made glad. Sinners have been brought to tremble before the cross of Christ, and seek the salvation of their souls. As a result of the blessed work, fifteen have been added to the church on profession of their faith.

An Interested People.

In reading this report from a missionary whom we do not personally know, we fancy that it is not difficult to describe the leading characteristics of the man and of his ministry. Whatever he may be in other respects, he is awake; he has a heart set on doing something, and this makes him fertile in expedients and prompt in seizing favorable occasions. He is himself disposed to be easily pleased, and this makes him pleasing to others. The attraction of a genial temperament pervades his intercourse; and the people—old, middle aged, and youth—in their several circles, regard him as one of themselves, a son or brother of their own family. If, as we trust is the case, there be in addition to these personal qualities a due predominance of pious feeling, there can hardly fail to be a successful ministry; for God rarely denies his blessing to the willing heart, the wakeful mind, and the laborious hands.

The place where I reside has undergone greater changes, within the past year, than any place I was ever acquainted with, of its size and importance. And the change has not been simply one of progress; there has been a turning about—a reversing of the whole current of affairs. One cause of this is the fact, that quite a number of young men have come into the place, and they are mostly of a character to make them an acquisition to society. Again, our Seminary has commenced its operations, and brought in teachers of a high order.

My own prospects, I feel, are encouraging. Since my last, we have purchased a new bell, which cost us $110. This was quite an undertaking for our little church; but we find it a most valuable appendage. It has an excellent tone, and it is an ornament to the meeting house. It not only calls the people of God together, but it attracts others who would not otherwise attend; and it contributes in no small degree to impart a religious aspect to the Sabbath and to secure its observance as a holy day.

Our Sabbath school has prospered beyond our most sanguine expectations. We began with about 35 scholars, and the number has steadily increased, till now we number between 80 and 90. There is a kind of magic about the school, whose secret I cannot explain. The bell no sooner strikes, than the streets are filled with flying children. The young people all flock in, and either arrange themselves for instruction, or assume the responsibilities of teachers. Even worldly and irreligious men are drawn in, from time to time, to enjoy the scene and partake of the elevating excitement; and I have their eager faces now in mind, as they seem to be drinking in a kind of satisfaction at the novelty of the occasion.

I said, I could not explain the magic which seems to pervade and give character to the school. And yet I have my conjecture, which I am almost afraid to express. I cannot but hope that the eagerness with which the youth are thirsting for instruction, and with which almost every family seems to sympathize, is but an indication, that God's Spirit is working in the heart of this community.

I have a very interesting singing school, consisting of 50 or 60 attendants. They have assisted me in obtaining a melodeon, which is of great service, and enables me to give an attractive and animating character to the school, which I could not do without such a help. I feel that my influence is increased in this way. For thus I am enabled to gain an influence over the very interesting class of minds which I could not otherwise secure. Again, I find that this course has great power to improve and elevate society. Imagine such a place as this, full of young people with no social institutions, fixed and confirmed, to hold them under restraint, and draw out their feelings in proper channels. They long for something; they wish to be together, and to act out the smothered energy within.

Now, unless some healthful direction is given to these youthful feelings, so warm and active, the devil will take advantage of our neglect, and before we are aware, they will have created for themselves an atmosphere of debasing and corrupting pleasure, whose deleterious effect will be felt for time and for eternity. Those who attend my school become acquainted with me and my modes of thought and feeling; and hence they seem to take a deeper interest in my preaching. I meet the children once in the week to sing with them. It is truly an interesting occasion. They catch the science with a great deal of facility.

Our weekly prayer meetings, all things considered, are well attended. My congregations are all steadily increasing; I think they have nearly doubled since last summer, and our house is pretty well filled.

MICHIGAN.

The First Year's Experiment.

It was with trembling that I entered upon the labors of a missionary in this county; but Providence seemed to direct my steps hither. Resting upon the promise, "Lo, I am with you," I ventured to make the effort "to raise up the foundations of many generations," and to build the walls of Zion. In the outset it was an experiment; and how it would succeed was uncertain. The year has passed away, and some things that were problematical are now settled—Whether this was the time to commence labors in this county; whether this was a soil congenial to Puritan principles and usages, &c. The result has been favorable. Your missionary has been received with favor, and listened to with respectful attention; and, he believes, enjoys his full share of the sympathies of the people. The seed sown has not been without effect; for although we have had no especial effusion of the Spirit, yet its influence has been felt, gentle but cheering, upon many hearts, like the dews of heaven in their silent effects upon the earth.

Difficulties in a New Field.

This church is situated amidst a sparse population, many of whom have been so long without the means of grace, and those restraints of a moral and corrective character enjoyed in older parts of the country, that they have gone back several degrees toward a state of barbarism. The standard of morals is exceedingly low. Sabbath breaking is awfully prevalent, and a corresponding neglect of the sanctuary. Even many professed Christians have dropped down to the standard of the world, and indulge in many things, of which, in the places they came from here, they would have been ashamed. To devoted and intelligent Christians, this state of things is truly discouraging.

But the only hope of a change for the better, lies in the constant and faithful preaching of the word, which with God's blessing, is able to do here what it has done elsewhere. This church has more than doubled in numbers this year, and is exerting a silent but healthful influence upon the community in which it is located.

Miscellaneous.

Reminiscences of an Octogenarian.

The public have learned, through the press, the particulars of a highly interesting religious festival held at Granville, Mass., on the 13th March last, when the revered pastor of the church completed his 80th year. Rev. TIMOTHY M. COOLEY, D. D., has ministered to that flock for more than fifty six years; and for some years past has had the preëminence of seniority, in ministerial standing in Massachusetts, of those acting without a colleague. From information furnished by himself, we learn that in this State no less than 122 pastors have completed their half century each with the same people. Among them were Dr. INCREASE MATHER, of "Old South," Boston; and JOHN ELIOT, the Apostle of the Indians.

In a recent letter to one of the Secretaries of this Society, Dr. Cooley makes the following interesting references to his past experience and present condition.

I have been for ten long years where I have had for my fellow-travelers, "sorrow, toil, and pain." I have made no acquaintance with these three sisters, except with the middle one. And while I have held the kindest intercourse with her, making her my morning and evening friend, the other two have been so well satisfied with my attentions to that middle sister, that they have only spoken just to let me know that they were fellow-travelers. Now, I am commencing an untraveled pathway. Few have adventured there. Their report is fearful. They rather "sigh and groan, than live." No middle sister here. There are comforts here—such as I have failed to find in my early or middle life. "Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood," never appeared so clear in view as of late.

While I wonder that any thing better than "dark despair" should fall to the lot of such infinite guilt and unworthiness, I have hope, and some peace and joy. Free grace—and the Saviour's excellence never appeared—NEVER—so transcendent!

My own health is, through a kind Providence, very good; and my comforts equal to those of middle life. I have written over seventy sermons within the past year.

You request some facts respecting my Home Missionary tour. God is dealing with me in half centuries! It is just half a century since I received a commission from old Hampshire Co. Missionary Society, to labor 126 days on a tour in the "Great West"—then the Far West. My field lay between Herkimer, or German Flats, and Canadarqua, [now Canandaigua] and between a branch of the Susquehanna and the Great Lake Ontario—a field as large as the State of Massachusetts. It was a painful trial to leave my parish, my family—wife and four children, one an infant. I was among the first sent out by this Society. * * * Think of a missionary entering a pious family, and met with tears of joy; the next day leaving them in tears of sorrow. My 126 days on missionary ground stand out in bold relief, beyond any other period in all past life. I rode 1,000 miles; preached 108 times; administered the Lord's Supper 5 times; baptized 53 persons, of whom three were adults; made 240 family visits; visited 243 schools; distributed 230 Bibles and other religious books; organized one church of 22 members.

It was an impression with me at the commencement, that could I be the unworthy instrument of salvation to one immortal, human soul, it would be a reward more than a thousand fold for all my self-denial and toil. So it was ordered in Providence, that one person, hopefully renewed on missionary ground, came some hundreds of miles, and was received to a public profession of religion; and her children were given up in baptism.

Wives of Western Missionaries.

A "Western Missionary" sends us this confirmation of the statements and appeal which were published in the Home Missionary for February last, p. 243.

There is an article in the Home Missionary, from Prof. Allen, which struck a cord that vibrated deeply in my bosom. His picture is true to the life, as far as it goes. He says himself, that he does not speak from experience. I could add a number of shades to the picture, and keep within the truth still. The fact, that missionaries' wives are ordinarily taken from good families, often in affluence; that they are thrown into circumstances where they must always be ready to receive company of the best class; that their income is always limited, often very straitened,—these things, added to their deep sympathies with a husband's crushing anxieties, soon overwhelm them. They are literally "worked to death." Think of it for a moment. Two missionaries' wives lie buried in Fort Wayne. One is lying at Wabash. Brother — found it necessary to leave his little home last spring, and take another station, with his broken down, over worked wife—a most precious woman. And he has been put upon the fearful "post of observation" for several months past. The last news from them was, that she was just waiting for the summons—praying for patience to wait the Master's time. Passing on down the valley, one lies at L., and another at D.; and near L. two lie side by side, the wives of Brother —, himself yet comparatively a young man; and two more lie at R.—no, three lie there; and one at T., &c., &c. This is a theme on which I could dwell, if it would do any good; for I have known, personally, these things, ever since I was old enough to read the anxieties of a sainted mother's heart, who made a slave of herself to supply others' lack of service.

Plain Preaching the Best Policy.

There was a — church organized, which had sufficient religious enterprise to build a meeting house and employ a preacher. They seemed to regard their preacher as a porter or keeper, and their meeting house as a bathing house, where they might wash away the stains and pollutions which they had contracted during the week. They would gamble, and sip at the intoxicating cup, till they felt that they were in danger of doing something that might obscure their heavenly prospects. Then, after a punctual attendance upon the services of the meeting house, they would return home with a good degree of self-approbation and respect.

They were "like people, like priest." For the preacher would gamble, become intoxicated, and sometimes be detained from worship till a late hour on the Sabbath, by a good opportunity to jockey horses. But at length he became so involved in debt that he betook himself to the last resort, and ran away, leaving his creditors without payment and his church without a pastor.

The people remained in this destitute situation until the Synod sent them another preacher. And he was a man of God, and a fisher of men. He began to preach among them with much caution, seeking out acceptable words, and holding up to view those things which were least calculated to disturb the carnal heart, lest he should meet opposition. Still, they were disposed to talk against him, by the walls and in the doors of the houses, saying, "He is too much like the Methodists."

When the time came to get a popular decision, whether he should labor with them during the year, they took a vote, and a majority were opposed to him. The preacher wept, and lifting up his eyes towards heaven, said, "Lord, here I am, and they refuse to receive me, what wilt thou have me to do?" After a short pause he made another proposition: to labor without asking them for payment. A majority acceded to the proposition.

He found that smooth preaching would not benefit that people; and began boldly to proclaim the Bible truth, that the heart is desperately wicked; and that a man must be born again, or will not enter into the kingdom of heaven, &c. There was a shaking among the dry bones. Some who had been most friendly, became his most bitter enemies. Numbers of the church were made to see their lost condition, repent of their sins, and look to Christ for safety; while the rage of others was kindled almost to a flame. This state of things continued for some time, till finally two lusty men took the preacher, one of them by one of his arms, and the other by the other arm, and helping him to the door, told him to be away, and not come into the house again.

But the evangelical party had become too strong and active to be put down in that manner. They selected a location, erected a respectable house of worship, kept their preacher, and if my informant, now in his grave, was a fair specimen, they are a people zealous of good works.

Webster's Dictionary in India.

It is interesting to notice how the labors of men in every department of literature and science, are made, in the providence of God, to subserve the cause of missions. As an example, the labors of Noah Webster, though designed primarily for those speaking the English language, are likely to prove of signal service in respect to unnumbered millions using widely different tongues. Mr. Spaulding one of the oldest missionaries of the Board in Ceylon, after using his "Dictionary, unabridged," for about a year, pronounces it "in every respect more complete than any one work, and even all other works of the kind, in the English language." The manner of using it, which has led to the above conclusion he describes as follows: "From the day of its arrival, four, six, or ten pages each day, for four days each week, passed under my eye, and every word which was thought to be such as would be useful to missionaries, to civilians, or to Tamil youth studying the English language, with its various shades of meaning, was defined by Tamil synonyms, or idiomatic phrases." In this way he has prepared the second edition of the English and Tamil Lexicon, a volume of nine hundred octavo pages.

Thus the labors of Dr. Webster are made available for a race amounting to twelve millions of souls. As all the missions of the principal Board of the United States, have been furnished with copies of the Dictionary, it may be presumed that this is only the commencement of the beneficial influence of this great work, which may be used as the means of preparing other dictionaries, for the instruction of other millions, in almost every part of the heathen world.—[Jour. of Missions.

Giving—Is it a Grief or a Grace?

"See that ye abound in this grace also."—2 Cor. 8: 7.

What! Is giving a grace? So the Apostle regards it. He associated it with faith and utterance and knowledge and love and all diligence. He evidently regarded it an important grace, nay, an indispensable one. By it he would test the sincerity of love. He seems to say that there cannot be any genuine love where this grace is lacking. Another apostle says this explicitly and emphatically. "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" But to have this grace is not sufficient. The Apostle would have all to abound in it, yea to "abound more and more." Reader, do you do this? Some do it. In view of the loud calls for help in different places in the unevangelized portions of the world, some whose income has not increased during the past year, have added one-third to their contributions of the previous year, and some one-half, and some did even more than that; and at the same time not diminished their contributions to other benevolent objects. But all have not abounded "more and more." Some are doing less and less. And why? One said, "My expenses have been so great during the year, I cannot do as much as I have done." And for what were those increased expenditures? Not for the greater demands made for the education of children—not for sickness or any visitation of Providence! What then? The neighbors thought that it had arisen from having forgotten what Peter has said about "outward adorning and plaiting the hair and wearing of gold and of putting on of apparel." All thought she wore enough gold before, and had apparel enough, and that which was good enough. But it seems she thought differently. And so, she paid twenty dollars for her bracelets and fifty dollars for a shawl; and in her compassion for the poor dying heathen, and in her burning zeal to have missionaries sent to those places in Turkey from which such loud calls have come from the converted Armenians, she gave one dollar! Only think of it! One dollar! to save the dying Armenians, and twenty dollars for bracelets to adorn the wrists! Nor is she singular. Indeed some who are abundantly able have done nothing. In some churches nearly one half have done nothing either for the foreign or home missionary cause, nor have they abounded in their gifts to other benevolent objects. Do such agree with the Apostle, and regard giving as a grace? I fear not. I fear that with many giving is a grief and not a grace.—Prairie Herald.

The Home Missionary Work.

We can think of no subject that is more constantly rising in importance before the minds of American Christians, than the home missionary work. A few years ago, it was a question of sustaining a few scattered, feeble churches, and of sending missionaries to gather churches in the new settlements. It has now grown upon the hands of all denominations of evangelical Christians, till it has become an immense work. It meets us in our very doors, in the oldest of our settlements; and our most populous cities have become our most needy missionary fields; while our new settlements, rising up like magic over an immense extent of territory, threaten to outstrip all our efforts. Our country has become a central point of attraction to the world, and from the four quarters of the globe, the pent-up waters are flowing in upon us. Ireland has emptied herself upon our eastern shores, and continental Europe is pouring her thousands into our western valleys, while China has landed her ten thousands upon our Pacific coast. And still they come. What is to be the result, as to their influence, upon our country's destiny, remains to be seen. It is a problem that demands the serious consideration of every Christian in the land, especially of those whom God has blessed with this world's goods.—N. Y. Observer.

Treaty with Indians in Oregon.

The last number of the Home Missionary contained a letter from Rev. H. H. Spalding, in Oregon, stating that American, i. e. Protestant missionaries, had been excluded from the native tribes in the Middle District of Oregon, by a treaty made with them by the U. S. Superintendent of Indian affairs in that Territory. News of a transaction so subversive of religious liberty, naturally shocked the public feeling; but the standing of the writer—having been for many years an accredited missionary of the American Board; and more recently an Indian Agent and one of the Commissioners, in connection with the Superintendent, to treat with the Indians; and having therefore peculiar advantages for knowing the facts; and the particularity with which his statements were made—apparently left no room to discredit the unwelcome intelligence.

Much to our surprise, however, and to the relief of the feelings of the friends of missions, these representations are contradicted. It appears, that no treaty with such an obnoxious provision has been made. The Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon is now in New York; and in personal conversation as well as in the letter given below, most explicitly denies the whole charge. It is but justice, that his denial should be given to the public through the same channels and to as wide an extent, as have been the representations to which it replies.

Whether Mr. Spalding has been himself the victim of imposition; or what explanation is to be given of his course in making the representations alluded to, we have no present means of knowing.

To the Executive Committee of the Home Missionary Society:

NEW YORK, April 2d, 1852.

GENT.:—In the April number of the Home Missionary, page 276, I see an article emanating from the Rev. H. H. Spalding, of Oregon, with this heading; "Treaty of Expulsion."

It is with much regret that I see this publication in a work so justly entitled to the confidence of the community, for the truthfulness of its articles, as the "Home Missionary" deservedly is.

There is no truth in Mr. Spalding's statements in the article in question.

The Indians in Central or Upper Oregon have not been treated with. An Act of Congress was passed June the 5th, 1850, authorizing Commissioners to negotiate with the Indian Tribes West of Cascade Mountains. A subsequent Act abrogated these commissions, and authorized the Indian Department to make Treaties. In obedience to these laws, nineteen Treaties have been made in Oregon, all of which are now before the President at Washington. There is not one word written in either of these Treaties touching the subject, directly or indirectly, as stated by Mr. Spalding under the head of "Treaty of Expulsion."

I am not disposed to call in question the motive that induced Mr. Spalding to write the article alluded to.

The Committee will I hope allow this statement to appear in the next number of the "Home Missionary."

I have the honor to be, Sirs,

Your obedient servant,

ANSON DART,

Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon.

Vol. XXV.	JUNE, 1859.	No. 2.
-----------	-------------	--------

Twenty Sixth Anniversary.

The AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY held its Twenty Sixth Anniversary in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on Wednesday evening, May 12th, 1852.

HENRY DWIGHT, Esq., President of the Society, took the chair, and the meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. SWAN L. POMROY, D.D., of Boston, Mass.

In the absence of the Treasurer, an abstract of his Report was read by Mr. CHRISTOPHER R. ROBERT, the Recording Secretary.

An abstract of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee was presented by Rev. DAVID B. COE, one of the Secretaries.

On motion of Rev. CYRUS BYINGTON, Missionary to the Choctaws, Ark., seconded by Rev. THERON BALDWIN, of New York, Resolved, That the Reports now presented, be adopted and published under the direction of the Executive Committee.

On motion of Rev. JOSEPH F. TUTTLE, of Rockaway, N. J., seconded by Rev. MYRON TRACY, of Hudson, O.,

Resolved, That the preaching of Jesus Christ, and him crucified, by the living ministry, is an essential instrumentality in the salvation of the West; and, that the unprecedented growth of that part of our country, calls loudly on the American Church to furnish this instrumentality until the West is saved.

On motion of Rev. JOHN P. GULLIVER, of Norwich, Ct., seconded by Rev. JOHN R. ADAMS, of Gorham, Me.,

Resolved, That the cause of civil and religious liberty throughout the world can be most effectually promoted by the thorough evangelization of our own country.

On motion of Rev. ASA D. SMITH, D.D., of New York, seconded by Rev. CHRISTOPHER M. NICKELS, of Barre, Mass.,

Resolved, That by many voices of prayer, and many converging lines of Providence, we are urged and encouraged to cordial and earnest coöperation in the work of home evangelization.

In support of these resolutions the Society was addressed by Rev. Messrs. TUTTLE, GULLIVER, and Dr. SMITH, setting forth, in eloquent and impressive terms, the great extent of the field entrusted to the American Churches; the essential agency of the Ministry in cultivating it; the bearings of our country's evangelization on religion and freedom in other lands; and the motives to increased zeal, and the grounds of hope in prosecuting our work at home.

The exercises were enlivened and rendered more impressive by the intermingling of sacred song, the whole congregation uniting, under the leadership of Mr. L. HART.

The Benediction was pronounced by Rev. WILLIAM ADAMS, D. D., of New York.

The Society then proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year.

Twenty Sixth Report.

[It is impossible for human hands to write with pen and ink the full report of a year of missionary labor. The true record is on high. Much of it is also written in the experience of the missionaries—in the very being of those laborious men and their equally self-denying and laborious companions. Lines of thought, and care, and suffering are deeply graven on the tablets of the soul, there to abide, indelible though unseen, till the light of the judgment shall make them legible to all the universe. What histories will then be revealed, of hopes and fears, of plans devised and prayed over, of sacrifices made, of reproach and ill usage endured for Christ and for souls! But how small will all these things appear to them, when from the blessed lips of the Redeemer shall sound forth the recognition, "I know thy works, and how thou hast borne and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted."

But until the discoveries of that day, our missionary reports must be confined chiefly to such general views and results as are embraced in the following document. We commend it to the perusal of those who wait for the salvation of God; trusting that they will find something over which to rejoice, as well as much to draw out their supplications for the multitudes who are yet to be brought to "hear the joyful sound."]

In taking a brief survey of the operations of the American Home Missionary Society for another year, we desire, first of all, to unite with its many patrons and friends in a devout recognition of the kind hand of God in guiding and sustaining the Institution under all its responsibilities, and in giving thanks to his holy name for the success with which its labors have been crowned.

We would be admonished also, by the record we are called to make of the departure of valued patrons, counselors and associates in the missionary work.

Since the last Anniversary, two of the Vice Presidents of the Society—the Hon. NATHANIEL W. HOWELL, LL. D., and the Rev. HENRY DAVIS, D. D.—have been removed by death. They had sustained official relations to the Institution from its infancy; they highly appreciated its principles of action and the fruits of its labors, and gave it the benefit of their advocacy, their benefactions and their prayers. The Rev. ERSKINE MASON, D. D.—one of the Directors of the Society, and for three years a member of the Executive Committee—the eloquent preacher, the wise counselor, the steadfast friend of every philanthropic and christian enterprise, has been taken from us in the vigor of his manhood, and this Society, in common with kindred institutions and the Church of God, deplore their loss. The Rev. WILLIAM KIRBY, after more than six years of laborious and faithful service, as the Agent of the Society in Central Illinois, has likewise entered into his rest.

Five of the Missionaries of the Society have also died during the year—Rev. Daniel B. Butts, in New York; Rev. Horace A. Taylor, in Pennsylvania; Rev. Isaiah N. Ford, in Ohio; and Rev. James Hildreth, and Rev. William T. Wheeler, in Illinois.

"Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail from among the children of men."

[The details of the Society's operations, including the names of the missionaries, their fields of labor, the amount appropriated in their support, additions to their churches, &c., are exhibited in a General Table in the full Report.]

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

The number of ministers of the Gospel in the service of the Society the last year, whose names are found in the General Table—together with those engaged in superintending the missionary work, and who are mentioned in connection with the respective Auxiliaries and Agencies—is 1,065.

Of these, 861 were in commission at the date of the last Report, and 204 have been since appointed.

They have been distributed in 28 different States and Territories, as follows: in Maine, 96; New Hampshire, 44; Vermont, 60; Massachusetts, 54; Rhode Island, 7; Connecticut, 44; New York, 157; New Jersey, 10; Pennsylvania, 44; Delaware, 2; Maryland, 1; District of Columbia, 1; Virginia, 8; North Carolina, 2; Georgia, 1; Arkansas, 1; Tennessee, 5; Kentucky, 6; Ohio, 93; Indiana, 63; Illinois, 117; Michigan, 77; Missouri, 29; Wisconsin, 84; Iowa, 50; Minnesota, 4; California, 2; Oregon, 3.

This distribution gives to the New England States, 305; the Middle States, 213; the Southern States, 14; and the Western States and Territories, 533.

Of the whole number in commission, 619 have been the pastors or stated sup- plies of single congregations; 260 have ministered to two or three congregations each; and 186 have been located in wider fields of definite limits—such as the destitutions of a section of a county, or of an entire county, or of several contiguous counties; or those within the limits of an ecclesiastical body, as the circumstances seemed to require.

The itinerant system is thus combined, in the policy of the Society, with efforts for the permanent establishment of the pastoral relation. To give to every church the undivided labors of a pastor as soon as practicable, is the great object which the Society seeks to attain. As preparatory to this, however, the destitutions must be explored; where churches consist of but few members, or no churches are yet organized, and the country is sparsely settled, there must be occasional preaching. The feeble must be encouraged, the scattered elements combined, and the way opened for more frequent and regular ministrations. And where settlements do not increase in population and strength, so that each can hope to sustain a minister within itself, they must be united in a circuit, and visited at stated periods. Itinerant labor, therefore, if employed only where it is specially called for, and not relied on as an adequate supply where a more permanent one could be sustained, is regarded as a necessary and important part of a well-ordered system of missions in our new settlements. This Society has employed it from the commencement of its operations, and the proportion of itinerant service to that of the settled ministry, has been stated in the annual reports.

The aggregate of ministerial labor performed, is equal to 862 years.

The number of congregations and missionary districts supplied in whole or in part, at stated intervals, is 1,948; while many others have enjoyed the occasional labors of the missionaries.

Nine missionaries have been in commission as pastors, or stated supplies, of churches of colored people; and 60 have preached in foreign languages—13 to Welsh, and 39 to German congregations; and others to congregations of Norwegians, Swedes, Swiss, Hollanders, and Frenchmen.

Many of those who have preached in foreign languages, have preached a portion of the time also in the English; and the children in their Sabbath schools.

have likewise received more or less instruction in the English. The process has thus been going on of Americanizing these congregations, and opening to them all the advantages of the evangelical literature of our own tongue. While the number of missionaries to our foreign population has been enlarged, special care has been taken to employ those only who are well known, and approved for their doctrinal views and their experimental piety, and to have their churches built up on the scriptural basis of our Presbyterian and Congregational churches—that of evidence of regeneration by the Spirit of God as a qualification for membership.

The number of Sabbath school scholars connected with the missionary churches, is not far from 66,500.

The contributions to benevolent objects, reported by 609 missionaries, amount to $23,544.56.

The additions to the churches, as nearly as can be ascertained, have been 6,820, viz.: 3,910 on profession of their faith, and 3,010 by letters from other churches. Sixty one missionaries make mention in their reports of revivals of religion in the congregations to which they have ministered; in connection with some of which there have been 40, 50, and 80 hopeful conversions. The number of hopeful conversions reported by 349 missionaries is 2,643.

Forty five churches have been organized by the missionaries of the Society during the year. Forty two that had been dependent, have assumed the support of their own ministers, and will be, henceforth, we trust, not only monuments of what has been accomplished in the missionary enterprise, but efficient helpers in giving the institutions of the Gospel to those who are still destitute. Sixty five houses of worship have been completed since our last Report; 55 others repaired; and the building of 60 others commenced. More than 90 young men, in connection with the missionary churches, are in preparation for the gospel ministry.

These are a few of the statistics by which the progress of the missionary work is indicated. But how powerless are figures to set forth the influence of a single minister of the Gospel, a single church of Christ, the light that radiates from a single sanctuary! The mind of the Infinite alone can comprehend it; and eternity alone can disclose to us the privilege, the blessedness of being permitted to put forth our humble instrumentality in such a cause.

THE TREASURY.

Resources. The balance in the Treasury, April 1st., 1851, was $12,676 04. The receipts of the succeeding twelve months have been, $160,062 25; making the resources of the year, $172,738 29.

Liabilities. There was due to missionaries, at the date of the last Report, $9,633 38. There have since become due, $164,630 39, making the total of liabilities, $174,263 77.

Payments. Of this sum, $162,831 14 have been paid—leaving $11,432 63 still due to missionaries for labor performed. Towards canceling these claims and redeeming the additional pledges on commissions not yet expired, making in all, $80,170 25, there is a balance in the Treasury of $9,907 15.

PROGRESS.

With the same number of laborers as were employed the preceding year, there have been performed nine more years of missionary service; one hundred and twenty eight more congregations have been blessed with the preaching of the Gospel; and one hundred and twenty four more individuals have been added to the churches. The passing off the list of those churches that have become independent of charitable aid makes a gradual transfer, year by year, of the missionary work from the older to the newer States. So that, with a given number of men, we should be making constant advances upon the wilderness. The past year, the number of missionaries, in the Eastern and Middle States, has been diminished by 17, while in the Western States and Territories, there has been an increase of 18. The receipts of the year exceed those of the preceding, by $9,122—the greater part of the increase being from the regular contributions of the churches.

The following tables, with the remarks appended, will exhibit the progress of the Society during the twenty six years of its existence.

COMPARATIVE RESULTS.

The following Table gives a comparative view of the amount of receipts, expenditures, number of missionaries, new appointments, congregations and missionary districts, years of labor performed, additions to the churches and pupils in Sabbath schools, for each year since the organization of the Society.

It also exhibits, in the tenth column,

the average expenditure, each year, for a year of missionary labor, obtained by dividing the sum total of the expenditures of the year by the number of years of labor performed. And in the eleventh column, by dividing the sum total of the expenditures of each year by the number of missionaries employed, is shown what the average to a missionary would be, if the expenditures were equally apportioned among them.

Remarks.—1. From the foregoing table it will be seen that in each of the ten years, from 1830 to 1840, and from 1840 to 1850, the receipts were more than doubled.

2. The total of receipts, for the twenty six years, is $2,365,420 40.

3. The total of years of labor is 13,958. These years are reckoned in each report, by adding together the months of labor which the missionaries have actually performed.

4. The average expenditure for a year of missionary labor, for the first twenty five years, is $167. This includes the entire cost to the Society of obtaining the missionary, defraying his expenses to his field, and sustaining him on it, as well as all the expenses of conducting the Institution. In what other way can christian charity be rendered more productive?

5. The average annual expenditure to a missionary, for the first twenty five years, is $122. The difference between this amount and the average for a year's labor, is occasioned by the fact that a missionary is named and counted in a report, though in some cases he may have labored but a fraction of the year.

6. The whole number of additions to the churches is 114,601.

7. The fifth column—that of new appointments—shows how many have to be called in in each year, to supply the places of those whose support is assumed by the people, the vacancies occasioned by death, sickness, removals, and other changes, and to make the increase, if there be any, over the number of the preceding year.

* Of these, 24 labored in France and Switzerland, under the direction of the Evangelical Societies of Paris and Geneva.

Remarks.—1. In explanation of the comparatively large number of missionaries in the Middle States and the increasing number in the New England States for several of the earlier years, it should be remarked that, at the organization of this Society in 1826, the missionaries of the United Domestic Missionary Society, whose responsibilities it assumed, were transferred to it, and that the greater portion of them were in commission in the State of New York. The New England State Societies, also, became integral parts of the National Society, in several successive years—the Maine Missionary Society and the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society, in the third year of its operations; the New Hampshire Missionary Society, in the fourth year; the Connecticut Missionary Society, in the fifth year; and the Massachusetts Missionary Society, in the seventh year.

2. In the New England States, it will be observed, there has been but little increase of the number of missionaries, at any time, since the auxiliary relationship of the State Societies was completed.

Since 1837, the number has diminished, and is, this year, 26 less than at that date. In the Middle States, also, the number the present year, is fourteen less than in 1837.

3. The increase of the Society's labors, for many years, has been mainly in our Western States and Territories. The last twelve years, the increase alone in that portion of our country, has given it 366 additional missionaries.

4. In the table on the next page, will be seen the progress which has been made, year by year, in the newer States of the West, as they have severally come into being, and presented fields of peculiar promise for missionary culture. When this Society was formed, Indiana and Illinois were in their infancy. Michigan was, at that time, and for ten years subsequent, a territory; in 1825, it had but one Presbyterian or Congregational minister, and he was a missionary. Wisconsin remained, eight years after the organization of this Society, the almost undisputed home of the Indian. Iowa was not organized as a territory till 1838.

PRINCIPAL AUXILIARIES, AGENCIES AND MISSIONARY FIELDS.

Maine Missionary Society.

WILLIAM T. DWIGHT, D. D., President; JOHN HOW, Esq., Treasurer; BENJAMIN TAPPAN, D. D., Secretary. Office at Portland.

This Society has had in its service, during this year, ninety six missionaries; and their labors have been distributed to one hundred and forty different communities—the greater portion officiating as pastors, or stated supplies. The number in actual attendance on these ministrations has averaged more than 12,000. The churches assisted report four thousand four hundred and two members in communion.

The receipts for the year ending March 1st, were $11,706 92. The expenditures in the same time were $12,364 82. Various contributions, amounting to $308, were received from this State by the Parent Society. The aggregate of Home Missionary collections this year, from Maine, has been $12,014 92—a larger sum than the State has previously furnished for this cause in any single year. Still, the Trustees have been obliged to resort to a loan of $800, to meet the current demands on the treasury.

This Auxiliary has been the foster parent to which, under God, between forty and fifty churches ascribe their present independence of foreign aid. To it one hundred feeble churches still look for the indispensable means of existence. It is the only visible agency for furnishing scores and even hundreds of other towns and settlements with ministerial culture. In all of these a great work—a work of hardship and self-denial, is to be done; and now is the time to do it. The Maine Missionary Society, therefore, ably as it is managed, and blessed as have been its fruits, needs greatly to enlarge its operations. But how can this be done, when its resources are so restricted as to cripple its energies? Instead of advancing boldly to occupy the various fields, as they open to the enterprise of the Church, the Trustees are compelled to proceed under the embarrassment of repeated loans, and consequently with more regard to economy than to the expansion of their work. This is not meet; it is unjust to the institution which has done so much for the best interests of the State; it is unworthy of the magnitude of the work yet to be done, and which involves more of the present and eternal interest of the population than any other. The lessons of the past should be an effectual warning against such an inadequate support of so vital an interest. One of the missionaries of the Maine Missionary Society, says of his field: "If the leading minds here had been faithfully trained in their childhood under religious influences, and had then enjoyed the permanent ministrations of some judicious, earnest missionary, this place would long since have budded and blossomed as the rose. But now I fear that most of these people will perish in their sins, and that it will cost the life of at least one missionary, and your Society I know not how much money, to do successful battle with the adversary, and recover back this place from his terrible power. Could the fathers, who are now sleeping in their graves, have seen the consequences of no religious institutions to their posterity, as they must see it in the light of eternity, every dollar in their possession, if necessary, would have been expended for the support of the Gospel." Those consequences, many of the fathers did not foresee; the Gospel, which would have averted them, they did not provide. And shall the same fatal neglect be continued by their successors? Is there any way but by planting religious institutions—any time like the present, in which to do it—to secure to the next generation the blessings which our fathers failed to provide for this? In the language of the Secretary, "This work MUST BE DONE. The cry of thousands destroyed for lack of knowledge—of God's dear children asking bread, and no man breaking it unto them—is constantly waxing louder and louder. The people must have some kind of religion. In the absence of sound christian instruction, they will even heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts, and will blindly follow blind guides, who need themselves to be taught the first principles of the oracles of God."

New Hampshire Missionary Society.

ABRAHAM BURNHAM, D. D., President; SAMUEL FARRINGTON, Esq., Treasurer; Rev. BENJAMIN P. STONE, Secretary. Office at Concord.

Forty four missionaries have borne the commission of the Society since the last Report, within the bounds of this Auxiliary. Their labors amount, in the aggregate, to thirty six years; and have been distributed among fifty different congregations. Only three or four instances of unusual religious interest have occurred during the year. The cause of Temperance has recently occupied the attention of the churches, and of philanthropists generally, in an uncommon degree, and is regarded as ominous of increased spiritual prosperity.

There have been received into the treasury, during the year, $7,745 01, of which $1,121 97, were paid to the Parent Society by the direction of the donors, and $1,500 by the vote of the Trustees of the Auxiliary; leaving for the use of the latter within the State, $5,123 04. The National Society has also received from various individuals and congregations in the State, $781 66, making a total of $3,403 63 for the West, and the whole sum raised in the State for the cause of Home Missions, $8,526 67—exceeding the amount raised in the preceding year by $313 67. The expenditures within the State were $4,738 59.

Since our last Annual Report was published, this Auxiliary has celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. The review of the half century, drawn up by the Secretary, is replete with reminiscences of great interest and value, illustrating the several steps by which Home Missions have advanced from less to greater degrees of system, economy, and efficiency. Some of the statistics contained in this document will illustrate, in a small degree, the value of the Society to the people of New Hampshire; though the full influence of the preaching of the Gospel, and its institutions, in improving society throughout all its relations, cannot be told in figures or language. In 50 years, 1,523 ministers have been employed. The aggregate of missionary labor performed equals 986 years. Fifty churches have been gathered, and 80 houses of worship erected or remodeled, on fields cultivated by the Society. Of the 114 feeble churches who have received assistance, 98 still exist, and 41 have attained to independence of foreign help. The cost of the good thus accomplished in the State has been $135,518. At so inconsiderable an expense has the benefit connected with the existence of more than half of the churches in the State been secured. From these results, the New Hampshire Missionary Society may well derive an impulse to more vigorous endeavor to occupy the waste places which remain. "With one half of the churches in the State," says the Report, "unable to give the ministry the small average of $400 a year, and consequently either dependent on charity for a portion of their support, or liable to such dependence; and with at least one quarter of all the towns in the State having no reasonable prospect of enjoying such institutions of religion as they need, unless furnished by the Society; with these affecting facts before us, we cannot but be impressed with the importance of its labors, both present and future, to the highest welfare of our domestic Zion. We venture the prediction that the time is not far distant when an intelligent ministry and the establishment of religious order, will be earnestly sought at our hands by a certain class of towns who have hitherto disregarded them. The advancing light of the age, by means of the press and the common school, will soon so elevate the popular mind in intelligence, if not in morals, that an untaught and ignorant ministry will no longer be tolerated by those portions of the masses that have regard for their own respectability and improvement."

Vermont Domestic Missionary Society.

Hon. ERASTUS FAIRBANKS, President; Hon. C. W. STORRS, Treasurer; Rev. JOHN F. STONE, Secretary. Office at Montpelier.

The receipts of this Society for the year past were $5,536 58. This is less by $1,468 22 than the income of the year preceding, and less also than the expenditures by $1,350 87. This deficiency is to be ascribed partly to the smaller amount of legacies, and partly to heavier demands on the Society arising from emigration. Besides the $6,430 70 paid out for missionary purposes within the State, various contributions of churches and individuals, amounting to $564 10, have been made directly to the American Home Missionary Society.

Sixty missionaries have been in commission on this field during the whole or a part of the past year, whose aggregate of labor equals 49 years. This has been bestowed on 67 fields, nearly all of which have organized churches. Among the missions commenced during the year, one of peculiar interest is reported among the French, at Burlington and vicinity, where a body of that people have permanently settled. More than thirty families cordially receive the labors of a Protestant missionary, notwithstanding the strenuous opposition of the Romish priest.

While several of the missionary fields in Vermont have made important advances, and some of them have been blessed with revivals of religion, an equal number have been reduced in members and in external prosperity by emigration. Seven churches on the missionary list have parted with more than five hundred and fifty members since their organization, and have only three hundred and twenty three remaining. It is estimated that the churches now depending on the Society for aid, have thus lost more than twenty two hundred in twenty five years. This will explain the return to a state of dependence, of several congregations which, in former years, were supposed to have reached the point of self-support; and also will account for the continued feebleness of others to which frequent accessions have been made. They are blessed with a laborious and productive ministry; but the drain of emigration carries off so great an amount of their numbers and efficiency, that were it not for Home Missionary intervention they would dwindle and probably, in many cases, become extinct. That, in these circumstances, the feeble churches are no more feeble, and that their number is so few, speaks well for their pastors, and for the energy and wisdom of the State Auxiliary. Instead of being discouraged by this apparent adversity, they are led, by an enlarged and comprehensive view of the whole field, to consider their own loss as a gain to the general cause. "Who can doubt," says the Report, "that the churches of Vermont are doing more to establish and sustain the institutions of religion throughout the land, by means of christian families and individuals that have been trained up in those churches for the service of God, and are now scattered throughout the land, than they could have done by any other means? And do we not see the hand of God in this? Is it not his way, in part, for spreading the Gospel and extending the Church, till the land shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord? Soon another generation will appear on the stage of active life. Many of these will have acquired a liberal education and entered the learned professions—all will sustain important relations, and all have their influence. And the character of that influence will be decided by the instrumentalities by which their principles shall have been formed. Many of these, instead of settling down in their native towns, or State, will go to the West. They will be dispersed throughout the land; and some of them, doubtless, in other lands. Let them but have the Gospel in their minds and in their hearts, and they will be so many living, active agents for carrying forward the work of evangelization, wherever their lot shall be cast. But let them go forth without these principles, and they will only add to the work to be done and enhance the obstacles to the doing of it.

Massachusetts Home Missionary Society.

LEONARD WOODS, D. D., President; BENJAMIN PERKINS, Treasurer; JOSEPH S. CLARK, D. D., Secretary. Office in Boston.

The income of this Society for the year ending March 1st, was $34,768 63—nearly $1,500 more than in any previous year. Of this revenue, $6,132 69 were applied to missionary purposes within the State, and $27,000 remitted to the Parent Society. Besides this generous donation—the largest ever received from any Auxiliary in a single year—other contributions have been made by various churches and individuals, amounting to $7,035 95; of which, $1,683 78 was from the Hampshire Missionary Society, and $2,864 96 from the payment of legacies. There has thus been consecrated to the Home Missionary cause by the Christians of Massachusetts, during the last year, an aggregate of $41,804 58—more than one quarter of the total income of the Parent Society for that period.

Fifty four missionaries have been in commission for more or less of the year—a diminution of eight from the year before. Seven churches previously aided do not appear on the present Report; 47 are still dependent; and nine have during the year reached the point of self-support; and all give promise of permanent continuance in that state. The reduction in the number of missionaries and missionary churches, and also of the amount expended in their support, shows the progress which is made from year to year, in repairing the waste places of Zion in this State, and transferring her benevolent energies to the wider and still needier desolations of the West. That this is the purpose of this most efficient Auxiliary, its invaluable pecuniary aid, and the cordial and cheering coöperation of its Board of Trust, abundantly testify. In no quarter, not even in the most prominent of our Western fields, is the magnitude of the Home Missionary claim more justly appreciated or more eloquently urged;—and urged, too, in the spirit of devout recognition of dependence on the power and grace of the Most High. "The history of the Home Missions in this country," says the last Report, "has, from the first, been the history of great effects from little causes. Every movement has been like the silent and hidden, but resistless action of leaven—bringing out results which we can trace to no adequate cause, without supposing the unseen hand of God in their production. The fact that a new church can be planted in an old waste, or an infant settlement, during the brief period of seven years, and at an annual cost to the Missionary Society of only $167 per annum; the fact that eight hundred evangelical churches in our land have actually been brought up to a self-supporting condition at this trifling expense, and by this short process, since the Home Missionary enterprise commenced—these facts proclaim the existence of an energy more than human. They indicate the presence of an all-powerful, though an invisible agency."

Rhode Island Home Missionary Society.

J. P. CLEVELAND, D. D., President; B. WHITE, Esq., Treasurer; Rev. WILLIAM J. BREED, Secretary. Office at Providence.

Seven missionaries have been under commission, the last year, on the field of this Auxiliary; and two of them have been installed Pastors of the flocks which they serve.

The receipts of the Society, including a remittance of $1,000 from the Connecticut Missionary Society, have amounted to $1,868 77. Of this sum, $1,720 have been applied to missionary purposes in the State. Remittances directly to the Parent Society, from various individuals and churches, $497 40. The collections of the year show a gratifying increase beyond those of any former year, and encourage the hope that soon the Society may be able to dispense with the generous aid annually furnished by the friends of missions in Connecticut.

From the Report of this Auxiliary, we are led to infer, that the missionary churches under its care were never in a more vigorous and hopeful condition, though they have suffered from the great depression of the manufacturing interests of the State. Two houses of worship have been redeemed from the embarrassment of debt, since the last Report. "None of the churches have enjoyed a powerful revival; yet the Holy Spirit has not withdrawn wholly from them. Precious souls have given evidence of having passed from death unto life. The children of God have been edified, and wide and powerful influences have been exerted in favor of temperance, morality, and experimental religion."

Connecticut Missionary Society.

Rev. HORACE HOOKER, Secretary; E. W. PARSONS, Treasurer. Office at Hartford.

The receipts of this Society, for the twelve months past, have been $7,839 19. The expenditures have been for missions within the State, $3,742 42; donation to the Rhode Island Home Missionary Society, $1,000; Remittance to the Parent Society, $1,000. The latter has also received, from various sources in Connecticut, $16,925 39, including bequests amounting to $3,574 26—making the total realized to this cause from the State, the past year, $24,764 58—of which nearly three-fourths have been applied through the Parent Society to its great work in the remoter sections of our land.

Forty four missionaries have been under commission within the year. Two churches previously aided have voluntarily withdrawn from this relation, and three others have not renewed their applications, and, it is hoped, may require no further assistance.

Although the cost of missions within the State has been somewhat reduced, there is no prospect that it can soon, if ever, be wholly dispensed with. Changes in the centers of business, the emigration of multitudes of the sons of Connecticut in pursuit of the great enterprises of the day, and the coming in of foreign elements to occupy their places—all tend to enfeeble many churches, and to raise up new ones, and thus furnish fresh occasion for missionary culture from year to year. The Secretary remarks, "Though few of the churches, I trust, would die at once, if thrown on their own resources, they would drag out only a feeble, sickly existence. However this may be, but for Home Missions, the record of the living would become, in part, an obituary of churches that have ceased to be, and in part, the names of churches that never have been. Some seem to regard Home Missions as designed almost entirely for the new settlements. This, doubtless, is their main design. But their necessity in the Atlantic States, especially in some parts of New England, must be more and more felt with the progress of time. Such multitudes migrate to California and other regions of the West, that churches hitherto deemed far above the need of external aid, will require the fostering care of Home Missions. The places they make vacant will, for the most part, be occupied, if at all, by immigrants from foreign countries who are not accustomed to treat the Sabbath and the sanctuary after the manner of New England. The example of these will infect the minds of others who have been trained to respect both. The churches have begun to take alarm at the desecration of holy time, and the neglect of public worship. They are looking around anxiously for a remedy. Whatever other means are employed, the labors of a stated, permanent ministry, are indispensable in checking the evil. Without them, all else will be unavailing. Light troops may answer to overrun a country, but possession can be kept only by substantial, permanent fortifications. And when we begin to count the cost of their erection and maintenance, we may well begin to compute the value not only 'of the Union,' but of liberty itself. With one quarter, or one third, and in some cases even more, of the population of country towns in New England, habitually neglecting the house of God, it is no time to think Home Missions are only for the far off regions towards the setting sun."

Philadelphia Home Missionary Society.

THOMAS FLEMING, Esq., President; HENRY PERKINS, Esq., Treasurer; Rev. ROBERT ADAMS, Secretary. Office at Philadelphia.

The States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, and the District of Columbia, constitute the field of this Society. During the year past, its receipts from the usual sources have been $7,588 27, and bonds to the amount of $3,000, from the estate of John Porter, Esq., late of Northumberland, Pa. The Parent Society has received from the same field direct contributions equal to $2,834 14; of which $1,659 14 was from bequests. The Auxiliary expended for missionary purposes on its own field, $7,963 10, and made a donation of $185 to the American Home Missionary Society. The total sum realized to this cause from these sources, in addition to the bonds above named, for the year past, was $10,422 41.

The number of missionaries under appointment from this Auxiliary has been 58. They have labored statedly in 70 organized congregations, besides, in two instances, supplying as far as practicable the destitutions of an entire county.

From the last published Report of this Society, there is just reason to infer the increasing usefulness and popularity of its operations. Not only are its resources and the number of its occupied fields enlarging; but the work accomplished, as seen in congregations raised to a state of independence of charitable aid, commends it to the confidence of its patrons as a most appropriate and energetic agent in the work of church extension. "Two-thirds of the churches, during their partial dependence upon our Society," says the Report, "erected their present houses of worship. Every year, some of the congregations aided by us, tell us they have commenced the erection of a sanctuary, and others inform us that they have completed such buildings; and generally, these buildings are unincumbered with debt, or nearly so, when they are dedicated to the worship of God."

Central Agency, New York.

Rev. RICHARD F. CLEVELAND, Clinton, Secretary; SAMUEL STOCKING, Utica, Treasurer.

Forty two missionaries have been under commission during the year, within the bounds of this Agency and have performed thirty one years of ministerial service. Their labors have been extended to more than fifty churches and missionary districts, and not less than five thousand souls have enjoyed their stated ministrations.

The receipts of the Agency, from the ordinary sources, have been $4,297 72; and $1,828 31 have been transmitted directly to the treasury of the Society at New York, making the whole amount of contributions for the year, $6,126 03. The sum of $5,000, the avails of a legacy, has also been received during the year, increasing the amount realized to the cause from this field to $11,126 03. Of this sum, $3,611 89 have been expended for missionary labor within the Agency; leaving a balance of $685 83 in its treasury.

The past year has not been signalized, like some which have preceded it, by the effusions of the Holy Spirit; yet it is stated that "the earliest, and, comparatively, the most numerous instances of revival that have come under our notice during the past season, have occurred under the labors of missionaries." Though several of the churches have suffered serious losses, by removals and death, and the diminution of pecuniary support, yet, on the whole, there has been an advance in contributions for the support of their own institutions, and, compared with other churches, they have exhibited their full share of liberality in sustaining the various objects of christian benevolence.

Much of the territory embraced by this Agency, is more sparsely populated than any other portion of the Middle States, and its destitutions must, for a long time to come, furnish a wide and important field of missionary effort. The northern counties, particularly, containing extensive tracts of almost unbroken wilderness, are beginning to attract attention and immigration, and a work is to be accomplished there like that which we are performing in the newly settled portions of the West. This region is traversed, too, by the great highways of western emigration, and naturally furnishes its full proportion to swell the tide that is flowing into the great western valley. In consequence of these contributions, and as a compensation for them, the impoverished churches will continue to claim, for a season, missionary support. Yet, most of the new applications for aid have been accompanied by evidences of a growing appreciation of religious privileges, and a willingness to make corresponding efforts to secure them; and the encouragement and impulse which this aid will impart to these feeble churches, will, it is hoped, secure their independence at no distant day. "To some of them," says the Secretary, "the day of enhanced strength and influence is not far distant. The restless spirit of secular improvement is opening highways of commerce through regions where, hitherto, labor and the products of the soil, have scarcely maintained their minimum value. As the result, feeble congregations will become large, able and independent, and new congregations will be formed, requiring, at the outset, Home Missionary aid. On the whole, the field comprised in this Agency never presented such a prospect, as at present, of development, growth and improvement."

Western Agency, New York.

Rev. JOHN A. MURRAY, Secretary; W. T. SCOTT, Treasurer. Office at Geneva.

Sixty four missionaries have been employed within the bounds of this Agency during the year, including four who have labored in the feeble churches and been sustained by a portion of the funds of the Rochester Presbytery. It is gratifying to notice, that while new churches are formed, and new fields of missionary labor are opened every year in Western New York, the whole number of churches dependent upon the Society is rapidly diminishing; the number of applicants the last year being nearly one third less than it was ten years ago.

The receipts of the Agency, for the year ending March 1st, were $8,084 50. An additional sum of $1,536 02 was transmitted by the donors directly to New York, making the entire contributions from this field, $9,620 52.

A manifest improvement is reported in the pecuniary and spiritual condition of most of the churches receiving missionary aid. Nine congregations have been enabled to dispense with foreign assistance, and are now sustaining their own ministry, while but one, a congregation of colored people, has been added to the list of beneficiaries. Five congregations have erected, during the year, or are now erecting, houses of worship, and as many more have made extensive repairs in edifices already built. Revivals of religion are reported in fifteen churches, some of which have received large gatherings of souls, the precious fruit and reward of missionary toil and self-denial. Aside from the maintenance of gospel ordinances, and the ordinary routine of ministerial labor, Temperance societies have been formed, several churches and Sabbath schools have been organized in destitute neighborhoods, congregations have been established, and measures taken to erect houses of worship where churches have not yet been gathered. Such facts testify that now as ever, and in the old as well as in the new settlements, the ministry and the church are eminently aggressive.

The Secretary, in his Report, alludes to the fact that during the past year several of the most liberal supporters of this Institution, in that part of the State, have been removed by death. Among them is the Hon. Nathaniel W. Howell, LL. D., of Canandaigua, one of the Vice Presidents of the Society, and, for more than half a century, a constant friend and efficient helper of the missionary work. His departure brings before us the material changes that have taken place, and the moral triumphs that have been achieved in Western New York during the active lifetime of an individual. In the language of the Report, "He remembered, with gratitude and affection, the missionaries sent out hither by the Connecticut Missionary Society, before the close of the last century. Where there lived but a few hundred men, 'scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd,' with rude settlements few and far between, is now a populous, cultivated, highly privileged and religious community; where there was scarcely an organized town, or village of any size, or a school-house of any description, are now 302 organized towns, 350 villages, some of them of rare beauty, and three cities containing an aggregate population of more than 100,000; where was scarcely a church of any denomination, or a church edifice of any sort, or a minister of the Gospel, there are now, by the blessing of God upon the voluntary efforts of his people, at least 1,400 Protestant churches, 1,200 temples for public worship, and 1,400 evangelical clergymen; where, in 1790, there was a population of but 1,047, in 1850 the population had increased to 834,700, supplied with an evangelical church, and a minister of the Gospel to every 600 souls." In glancing at these results, we get new impressions of the importance of that agency through which, mainly, they have been produced, and are impelled to increased diligence in employing it to extend the same blessings to other and wider fields.

Western Reserve Agency, Ohio.

REV. MYRON TRACY, Hudson, Secretary;
T. P. HANDY, Cleveland, Treasurer.

Forty six missionaries have been commissioned on this field, during the year, of whom thirty six have been sustained by the funds of the Agency, and have supplied forty four congregations with the stated ministrations of the Gospel, besides extending occasional labors to several others.

The resources of the Agency have amounted to $3,021 11, of which $2,631 69 have been expended within its own bounds. Contributions to the amount of $463 20 have been paid directly into the treasury of the Society, making the entire receipts from the field covered by this Agency, $3,484 31.

Notwithstanding the various causes which have operated to distract and weaken the churches of this region, most of those aided by this Society are gradually, though some of them slowly, gaining strength and influence. Among the signs of progress observable, it may be noted that two of the congregations aided have, during the year, erected houses of worship, several others have made extensive repairs, and four have provided their ministers with parsonages. Two missionaries have been installed as pastors, and no instance has occurred of the dissolution of that relation. Several congregations have applied for a smaller amount of aid than they have heretofore received, and one is understood to have made its last application. Even where no visible progress has been reported in pecuniary resources, the missionary has been cheered with manifest tokens that his labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

Fifty years have now elapsed since the work of Home Missions was commenced on the Western Reserve, the first church having been organized by a missionary of the Connecticut Missionary Society, at Austinburg, Oct. 24, 1801. The religious history of this territory, since that period, strikingly illustrates the productiveness of the Home Missionary enterprise. Of the 184 Presbyterian and Congregational churches now in existence, more than two fifths are in a condition of pecuniary independence, but all of them, with perhaps two or three exceptions, are the fruits and monuments of missionary effort. The institutions of learning and benevolence, the general intelligence and thrift of the people, all the influences and blessings of a high christian civilization, which distinguish those communities, are to be traced, in no small degree, to the same agency.

On this subject, the Secretary of the Agency testifies as follows:—"The money thus expended, is not among the things that perish with the using. It is still doing good in the places where it was first expended; it is doing good, and will do good wherever the influence of these churches is or will be felt throughout the world, and to the end of time; and heaven itself will feel its influence, in louder songs, from more numerous voices, throughout eternal ages."

But these efforts, long continued and successful as they have been, have not overtaken the increasing necessities of the field. The Report of the Agency states that "many fields on the Reserve are still in an affectingly destitute condition. One church to which aid has been extended for the first time during the last year, is situated in a township of about 1,400 inhabitants, in which there had been no regular preaching for years, except a service by a circuit preacher once in two weeks. From its first settlement it has been a moral desolation. Another township, containing more than 900 inhabitants, has no church organization within its bounds, nor has it had, for years, any stated preaching. Another township, of more than 600 inhabitants, recently visited by one of our missionaries, is equally destitute." It is evident from these statements, that even in this region, where the first missionary churches beyond the mountains were planted half a century ago, "there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed."

Marietta Agency, Ohio.

REV. THOMAS WICKES, Secretary; A. T. NYK, Treasurer. Office at Marietta.

Eleven missionaries have been in commission during the year, on the field covered by this Agency, and have supplied sixteen congregations with the stated ministrations of the Gospel.

The receipts into the treasury have been $440 65, in addition to which contributions to the cause have been made by congregations and individuals, to the amount of $1,305 39, making the whole receipts from this field $1,746 04. Of this sum, $1,000 were contributed by a single friend of the Society.

It does not appear that the fields of labor occupied by these missionaries, have been visited to any considerable extent by the special effusions of the Spirit; yet facts are stated which show that the churches are generally becoming more stable and efficient, and that religious institutions through God's appointed means, are gradually gaining in estimation and influence with the mass of the community. Two of the churches have, within the year, undertaken to maintain, unaided, the institutions of religion; and three have provided for themselves houses of worship. Districts hitherto neglected, and which had become the strongholds of infidelity and vice, have been reached by the influences of the truth and Spirit, the ranks of the enemy have been broken, and many trophies gathered to the praise of divine grace.

The portion of the State embraced within the limits of this Agency, is assuming new importance as a theater of secular enterprise, and of missionary effort. The ruggedness of its surface, and the comparative poverty of its soil, have turned the tide of emigration into other channels; but the recent development of its vast subterraneous treasures is attracting thither an enterprising and industrious population. But a deplorable destitution of religious privileges still continues. In seven contiguous counties, containing a population of about 150,000, it is stated that there are but sixteen or seventeen ministers of the Calvinistic order. "In one Presbytery, (Athens,) there are nine vacant churches—vacant because there is no one to supply them with the ministrations of the Gospel." And there appears no prospect of providing adequately for the spiritual necessities of this increasing population, except by the vigorous prosecution of Home Missions. The views of the Agency are thus expressed in their Report. "In looking over the fields of desolation spread around us, we have been at a loss to know what to do. We have a few feeble lights, scattered over these counties, a few spots where a band of faithful ministers are striving to build up the walls of Zion; but the wastes are far more numerous than the cultivated fields,—whole counties, in some cases, where but little is being done by any body of Christians to build up gospel institutions and save the souls of men. The enemy has them. Ignorance, and error, and sin have them. There are no churches, or none which have any perceptible influence upon the mass of surrounding ignorance—none which have any effect to elevate the moral tone of society.

The problem now to be solved is, how can we reach them? There is no nucleus existing around which spiritual crystallization may commence in the organization of churches; and we see no means of reaching this population, but that by which the heathen are brought under the power of the Gospel. Missionaries must be sent from abroad and sustained until they gather materials for churches upon the hard soil, which is a long and laborious process. We must sit down before the fortress, and prepare for a regular siege, throwing up ramparts, and planting heavy artillery. It is an expensive mode of conducting the war, but it is the cheapest in the end, and it is the only effectual way."

Cincinnati Agency, Ohio.

REV. HENRY LITTLE, Madison, Ind., Secretary; E. M. GREGORY, Cincinnati, Treasurer.

Forty six missionaries have been under appointment the past year, within the bounds of this Agency. The amount paid from its treasury for their support is $4,887 80. The receipts of the Agency for the same period, including a small balance in the treasury at the beginning of the year, have been $4,445 91.

In reviewing the labors of the missionaries on this field for another year, we find occasion for a grateful recognition of God's goodness, in the fact that their ranks have not been broken by death, and that they have been permitted to pursue their labors with comparatively little interruption by sickness. Amid many discouragements and privations, they have borne cheerfully the burden and heat of the day, that they might sow the good seed of the kingdom over that wide and important field; and God has given the increase. Many feeble churches have been confirmed and strengthened, and five which have been hitherto sustained by the fostering care of this Society, have within the year assumed the support of their own pastors, and are transferred from the list of its beneficiaries to that of its supporters. In reference to the spiritual condition of the missionary churches and districts, the Agent speaks in his Report as follows: "Some of the missionaries have been blessed with precious revivals, though not, perhaps, so large a portion of them as in some former years. Yet, in a country so new and changing, who can compute the usefulness of some forty missionaries constantly employed in elevating and renovating this increasing population. 'The kingdom of God cometh not with observation;' and the great work accomplished by Home Missionaries is brought about in so noiseless a manner, that the careless multitude amongst whom and upon whom this work is wrought, are often almost unconscious that any considerable good has been achieved. Yet the foundations of many generations have been laid."

If the direct results of missionary labor on this field are less striking than in some other portions of the West, yet, when we consider the peculiar obstacles, in the face of which they have been achieved, we find evidence that they are the fruits of a wise and efficient husbandry. A large proportion of the earlier settlers were from the States across the Ohio river, and were not distinguished either for secular or religious enterprise. The central portion of Indiana, and the western counties of Ohio, were thought too remote from the great thoroughfares of trade to invite a settlement; and their forests remained undisturbed, while the tide of emigration from the East flowed around them to the regions beyond. Till the organization of this Society, in 1826, but little was done to supply this region with an evangelical ministry. In 1825, when the population of Indiana was more than 250,000, there were in the State but thirteen Presbyterian and Congregational ministers. Most of these were missionaries whose support was soon afterward assumed by this Society. Nearly every church then in existence, or which has been organized since that time, in connection with these denominations, has been gathered and nursed up from infancy under the labors of these self-denying men, and will stand, we trust, as monuments of this enterprise till the light which they are shedding upon the surrounding darkness shall mingle with the light of the millennial day. By what other agency can we hope that the wide wilderness which remains will be brought under moral and religious culture?

Missouri.

Rev. EDMUND WRIGHT, Secretary; GEORGE K. BUDD, Treasurer. Office at St. Louis.

Twenty nine missionaries have been employed in this State since our last Report, two of whom have received assistance from the funds of the Missouri Home Missionary Society. The receipts of this Auxiliary for the year ending March 1st., have been, $709 45.

Several of the churches have, during the year, enjoyed the special visitations of the Spirit, and have received large accessions to their numbers and strength; but the progress of evangelical truth throughout the State, has been painfully disproportionate to the growing necessities of its population. The Committee have not been inattentive to the claims of this great and important field, and have responded, as they were able, to the earnest appeals for additional laborers; and a few recruits have been furnished. But what are these among so many? The changes of the past year have left several important posts unoccupied, while vast regions to which the labors of this Society have never extended remain, and seem destined still to remain, in deplorable destitution of spiritual privileges. Of the 101 counties into which the State is divided, 88, it is stated, contain no house of worship, and 75 no minister of the Gospel of the denominations acting through this Society.

The Secretary of this Auxiliary makes the following striking statements in reference to the present and prospective wants of Missouri. "Of the 24 counties, lying upon the noble river that divides our State, and containing about one sixth of its territory, and one half of its population, sixteen have no minister of the Gospel of our order. These counties, now comparatively populous, have but one third as many inhabitants to the square mile as Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. But the time hastens when, as in these States, the population will be 100 to a square mile. In 1832 we had a population of 176,000 distributed through 33 counties. Compare this with the census of 1850, giving us a population of 682,000 divided into 100,000 families, and distributed into 101 counties. If our population has doubled itself twice during the last eighteen years, what may we expect during the next eighteen years, with our more than 500 miles of railroad begun or projected, with our plank roads and turnpikes now vigorously carried forward, and with the certainty that in less than five years, we shall be in railroad communication with the Atlantic cities? Immigration, the past year, has been unusually rapid, and multitudes, for many years to come, will continue to rush along our projected thoroughfares—villages will rapidly expand into cities, a score of which before another census will become centers of influence to corrupt or bless the swelling multitudes who are to throng our mineral and agricultural districts. At the rate of our increase for the last eighteen years, our population in 1870 will be about 2,000,000. But in what ratio may we expect an increase of our ministers to break to them the bread of life?

Michigan.

REV. CALVIN CLARK, Marshall, Agent.

Seventy seven missionaries have been commissioned during the year to labor in this State. They have prosecuted their work amid peculiar difficulties and discouragements, but with the ordinary measure of success. The partial failure, for several successive years, of the great staple of the West, and the drain by emigration to California, have seriously impaired the strength of many congregations, and will postpone the day of their pecuniary independence. In others encouraging progress has been made, and some fifteen or twenty, it is hoped, will soon be able to dispense with foreign aid. While in many of the churches aided, spiritual apathy reigns, upon several others the gentle dews of heaven have distilled, and in a few there have been precious ingatherings of souls. At the close of the year covered by this Report, several revivals of religion of great interest and power were still in progress.

The history of the Society's operations in this State are instructive. In 1830, the population of the Territory was about 30,000. Six or seven Presbyterian churches had been organized, but all of them except one were without houses of worship, and were dependent upon this Society for support. Reckless speculation, and legislative extravagance and corruption, had brought the Territory to the verge of bankruptcy; and all the moral and religious interests of society shared in the disaster. Since that time, and in the face of these mighty obstacles, a surprising change has been effected. "In many portions of this State," says the Agent, "the providence of God has been peculiar. High-handed wickedness and crime, systems of infidelity and combinations of wicked men to oppose the Gospel, have all been overcome, and flourishing churches have been organized, and powerful revivals experienced. According to the last reports, the Synod of Michigan contains 110 churches, 91 ministers, and 6,807 communicants; and the General Association contains 82 churches, 72 ministers, and 3,519 communicants; and since these reports were made, several new churches have been organized. A great and good work has been accomplished, and it has been accomplished mainly by means of this Society as an instrumental agent. All these churches, with six or seven exceptions, have been brought into existence by her aid, nourished from her bounty, and watched over by her with maternal solicitude. Forty of these have already risen to the condition of self support.

It is no unimportant thing, to lay the foundation of intelligence and religion in a State that is soon to contain a million souls. Two hundred evangelical churches established and sustained in the most important centers of influence in this great and growing State,—two hundred churches that now contribute $9,000 annually to benevolent purposes, and will soon contribute four times that amount,—two hundred churches, the greater portion of which sustain their Sabbath schools, and concerts of prayer, and benevolent societies of various kinds to enlighten and bless the world;—most assuredly, these churches must be centers of moral and christian influence, which will go on widening and multiplying down the track of time till the closing scene."

REV. ARATUS KENT, Galena, } Agents.
REV. WILLIAM KIRBY, Jacksonville, }

One hundred and seventeen laborers have been sustained the past year in this State by the funds of the Society, and $3,081 61 have been received into its treasury from the churches on the same field.

In Northern Illinois, the Agent reports that, amid many reverses and hindrances, the cause of truth is making slow but steady advances. "Our churches," he says, "are increasing in numbers and strength; a good spirit is prevalent among very many of them; and in quite a goodly number God is pouring out his Spirit for the conversion of sinners. Two of the missionaries have, within a year, been installed as pastors; six houses of worship have been erected; the cause of Sabbath schools is visibly advancing; increased interest is felt in the work of Education; new zeal is awakened on the subject of Temperance; the circulation of the Bible and religious books is diligently promoted; and all collateral good influences are receiving the steady and efficient co-operation of the missionaries of the Society."

In place of our usual Report from Central Illinois, we have to record the removal, by death, of the Agent for that field, Rev. WILLIAM KIRBY. In the midst of his useful labors, he was suddenly stricken down by disease, and on the 20th of December last he left the scenes of his earthly toil to enter upon his heavenly rest and reward.

Mr. Kirby devoted nearly his entire professional life to the promotion of the cause of Home Missions. While pursuing his theological studies at New Haven, he united with several of his classmates in an association for this purpose, and in the spring of 1831 entered upon his work. First as an instructor in Illinois College, of which he was one of the founders; afterwards as a missionary to several feeble churches; and finally as the Agent, for more than six years, of this Society, he labored with great zeal, fidelity and self-denial. With what success he fulfilled his mission in these several relations,—the many churches he encouraged and strengthened; the congregations to which he broke the bread of life; the institutions of learning which he nurtured; the brethren whom he counseled in their difficulties, cheered in their trials, and stimulated in every good work; the spirit of missions awakened by his teachings; the souls saved by his labors, and yet to be saved through instrumentalities which he set in motion, will testify when we stand with him before the Son of Man. While engaged in a benevolent mission in behalf of a feeble church, away from home, the messenger of death overtook him; and he laid aside his armor to put on his crown. He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

In Southern Illinois, where no Agent has been regularly employed, the Society has enjoyed the cordial co-operation of the Presbytery of Alton, which, in addition to the valuable services of its Missionary Committee, has contributed $644 50 towards the support of the missionaries laboring within its bounds. The Secretary of the Committee, Rev. A. T. Norton, states, as evidences of progress and grounds of encouragement, that during the past year four congregations have commenced the erection of houses of worship, and three have become independent of foreign aid. A decided increase of interest is manifested in the cause of Education, in the Temperance reformation, and in the various plans of christian benevolence.

Since the present plan of co-operation was adopted in 1840, the outlay of missionary funds in this neglected portion of the State has yielded a rich return. The number of ministers connected with this Presbytery, which covers the 39 southern counties, has increased from 7 to 23; its churches from 10 to 32; and the members connected with them from 399 to more than 1,500. At that time, the churches were confined to five contiguous counties in the neighborhood of Alton. In eight others churches have since been organized, and foundations have been laid, by the occasional labors of the missionaries, in four or five counties more. There still remain, however, some 25 counties in this section of the State "to be possessed" through the instrumentality of this Society.

Many causes have combined, during the year, to augment the labors and burdens, and to try the faith of our missionary brethren. The continued emigration to the land of gold has removed the very pillars of many feeble churches. Others were greatly impoverished by the desolating floods of the last summer; and others, still, by the failure of the wheat harvest which followed. Infidelity, too, in new and ensnaring forms; fanaticism in manifold shapes; popular excitements on questions of no profit, have greatly hindered the progress of the truth. Yet, in the face of all these obstacles, visible progress has been made, and encouragements abound to prosecute our work with redoubled diligence. Those portions of the State to which our missionaries have not yet extended their labors, are assuming a position of new interest and promise. In the eastern section, there is a region of country nearly 100 miles in width, and extending from the Kankakee to the Ohio river, nearly 300 miles, in which the work of the Society has hardly been commenced. In eight contiguous counties, containing a population of more than 30,000, no missionary, it is believed, has ever been stationed.

A system of railroads has been commenced, by which this region, hitherto comparatively secluded, will be traversed, and brought into connection with the great channels of travel and commerce. The population, which has doubled within ten years, will increase at an accelerated rate; and industry, enterprise, improvement will receive a new impulse. But foremost among the agencies that are set in operation to determine the character of these infant communities, should be the Church of Christ hastening to take possession in the name of her King. To delay or falter in such a work, at such a juncture, would be a base betrayal of her trust.

Wisconsin.

REV. DEXTER CLARY, Beloit, Agent.

Eighty four missionaries have preached the Gospel in this State, under the direction of this Society, since our last Report, and their labors have been attended by encouraging tokens of the divine approbation. Fourteen churches, enjoying their ministrations, have received special visitations of the Spirit, and several more have been favored in different degrees with seasons of spiritual refreshing. A few churches, also, have received large and important accessions, the fruit of revivals which occurred during the preceding year. It is gratifying to discover, from a review of the year, that, although the churches have suffered much embarrassment, in common with those of other Western States, from the causes already alluded to in this Report; yet, through the blessing of God attending the faithful labors of his servants, no inconsiderable progress has been made in rearing christian institutions in that infant State. Fifteen churches have been organized in connection with the denominations which sustain this Society; seven houses of worship have been completed, and eleven others are in process of erection; three congregations have assumed the entire support of their pastors, and nearly 900 members have been added to the churches—more than half of them on profession of their faith.

The religious statistics of this State bear witness to the efficiency of the agencies by which its institutions have been reared. When the first missionary commenced his labors there in 1836, only one church organization among the white population existed in the Territory. At the present time there are 159 connected with the Presbyterian and Congregational bodies, containing about 5,400 members. This number includes the few Welsh and German churches that were aided by the funds of this Society. More than 100 of these churches were organized through the agency, and nearly all have been assisted from the treasury of this Institution. Fifteen of those have already passed through the period of their minority, and are now independent.

The Agent of the Society has, during the year, made extensive tours in the northern counties, and has gathered much information in regard to the condition of this important portion of the missionary field. His Report bears testimony to the efficiency and zeal with which the few laborers there are prosecuting their work; but they are inadequate to supply the wide-spread and growing destitutions around them. They ask for a large and speedy reinforcement. New schemes of internal improvement are opening new fields for evangelical effort. A connection is about to be formed, by canal, between the Wisconsin and Fox rivers, thus uniting the navigable waters which flow into the Gulf of Mexico with those which flow into the St. Lawrence, and opening an important thoroughfare diagonally through the center of the State. Over this whole region the tide of population is rapidly flowing. Several counties, which five years ago had scarcely been reached by white settlers, now contain each a population of more than 10,000. But the work of supplying them with the means of religious instruction and training, has hardly been commenced. The Agent states that "Washington county, with a population of more than 20,000, has but one minister of our connection; Manitowoc, Brown, Outagamie, La Crosse, and Richland counties have each but one; Waupaca, Wausara, and Portage share the labors of another; while Adams, Bad Axe, and Crawford are entirely destitute. Yet in these counties are many settlements of New England people; villages are springing up, farms are under cultivation, and an extensive lumber business is carried on. The people there need the Gospel; and such men are wanted as will break up the fallow ground, and, like John the Baptist in the wilderness, say to the people, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord.' Great numbers of professors of religion are located in these regions, and ministers are wanted to go after and enfold these lost sheep of the house of Israel. Abundance of work can be found here for all who will come. But who will supply the more than 30 destitute churches in other portions of the State?"

Iowa.

Rev. JULIUS A. REED, Davenport, Agent.

Fifty missionaries have held commissions from this Society in this State since our last Report, which exceeds by nine the number commissioned in any previous year. The churches under their ministrations have been favored with revivals of religion only to a limited extent, though many of them, including several German churches, have been encouraged and strengthened by valuable accessions to their numbers. In consequence of the losses and failures of the harvest, caused by the excessive rains of the last season, the congregations aided have not greatly increased their pledges for the support of the ministry. None, however, have diminished the amount of their subscriptions, while some, in face of the obstacles referred to, have made a considerable advance. Two missionaries have been installed as pastors during the year; six churches have been organized; four houses of worship have been completed; and ten others are now in process of erection—making the whole number of edifices already dedicated to the worship of God, twenty nine.

It is gratifying to notice how large a share of the work of planting christian institutions in this State has been borne by this Society. It is stated that there are now laboring, in the various departments of ministerial service, sixty one Congregational and N. S. Presbyterian ministers, all but four of whom are, or have been, aided by this Institution; and of the seventy one existing churches of the same denominations, all except two have been planted or nurtured by the same agency. But while we testify our gratitude to God for the success with which our past efforts have been crowned, we look with painful apprehension upon the wide harvest still perishing for want of reapers. Of the 100 organized counties in the State, about one half are so far settled as to furnish a field for ministerial effort; yet the labors of our missionaries have thus far been confined almost wholly to 28 counties, leaving 17 others, with a population of from 500 to 5,000 each, and five or six with a somewhat smaller population, entirely unsupplied. Not less than eight missionaries are needed at once to occupy posts where churches have already been gathered, and as many more to enter new and promising fields.

Since our last Report, a new station has been occupied on the western frontier of the State, in the vicinity of Council Bluffs. Scattered along the eastern banks of the Missouri river, is a population of about 14,000—more than half of them Mormons—living without the Sabbath, and the restraints of religious institutions, addicted to all the vices of a wild border life. The Mormons have determined to abandon their homes and emigrate to Utah in the course of the present year, and their places will be occupied by a population more accessible to the truth, and presenting an urgent claim to the sympathy and aid of the eastern churches.

"The destitutions of this State," says the Agent, "are destined, we fear, to increase faster than they can be supplied. The emigration to Iowa in 1851, according to a statement recently made on the floor of Congress, was 60,000, and we believe it will be as great annually till 1860. The soil of three fourths of the State is superior to that of the best river lands in New England. Lead abounds in some parts of the State, and coal throughout nearly half its extent. According to the returns of the last census, the ratio of mortality is a little more than half what it is in Massachusetts, showing that it ranks as the third State in the Union in point of healthfulness. It is bounded on the east and west by the two largest rivers in the Union, and is intersected by the Des Moines, which will soon afford slack water navigation to the heart of the State. It is confidently expected that in a few years a railroad will be built across the State, connecting these three rivers, and uniting them, by a continuous line of railroads, with the Atlantic cities. The attention of emigrants is turned, by these circumstances, to Iowa; and the population of the State must increase more rapidly than ever. If its annual increase continues to be as great till 1860, as it is estimated to have been the last year, it will then amount to 750,000. To keep pace with the population, an annual increase of eighteen ministers, besides providing for losses by removals and deaths, will be needed for years to come; which is about four times the net annual increase of our ministry for the last four years. Thus is this work growing upon our hands; and we should despair of final success were we not permitted to pray him, to send forth laborers to the harvest, to whom the gold and the silver belong, and in whose hands are the hearts of all men."

Oregon.

The embarrassments adverted to in the last Report, as arising from the unsettled condition of society in Oregon, have continued to operate disastrously on the missions in that Territory. The absence of a large part of the male population for months together, not only left the missionaries without coadjutors in matters pertaining to the churches, but also devolved on them the responsibility and labor of educational and other social interests. When, at length, the crowd of adventurers began to return from the gold region, it was only to be dispersed again from the towns and villages by the operation of the "Land Law." This enactment makes liberal allotments of land to all who will actually settle on them previous to December 1st, 1853. Stimulated by this offer, great numbers of people have left the towns to take up farms in the country. The desire to "make claims," spread among all ranks, and for a time amounted almost to a mania. Families were scattered far from each other; beginnings which had been made in collecting congregations were arrested, and nearly every form of social improvement experienced a check. It is hoped, however, that this effect will be but temporary; and that the necessities of the increasing population, and the general desire manifested for schools and for the preaching of the Gospel, will triumph over the present embarrassment.

During the year past, the Society has sent out no additional missionaries to Oregon. The stations already occupied have been gradually strengthened, so far as the circumstances of the country would allow. In respect to the interests of education, especially, it is believed that the counsels and efforts of the missionaries have been of great value.

The station at Portland, under the care of Rev. Horace Lyman, since the last Report has assumed the character of a permanent congregation, with the fixtures of regularly organized society, that promise to make it a rallying point of good agencies for all time to come. A church edifice, 48 by 32 feet, with a spire and belfry, has been completed, after a severe and self-denying struggle; and on the 15th of June last, was dedicated to the worship of the Most High. On the same day, a Congregational church was organized, with ten members.

Rev. George H. Atkinson has continued his labors at Oregon City, and the various stations in the neighborhood, where he had previously planted Sabbath schools, and collected the people for preaching.

Arrangements have also been made, by which it is expected that Kalapooya, in Linn county, will be supplied at the expense of this Society.

The Committee have looked on the condition of the settlements in Oregon with deep concern. While these have not increased with a rapidity to be compared with that which characterizes the neighboring State of California, they are nevertheless outstripping the efforts of the Church to supply them with the bread of life. It is said that 10,000 emigrants entered Oregon in the year 1851. From the Umpqua Valley on the south, and the region around Puget's Sound on the north, the request of the pioneer is heard, asking for the teachings of the minister of God. Thus far, it is believed, no Protestant missionary has planted himself among the white settlers north of the Columbia. Immediate efforts are contemplated to meet these demands, and especially to furnish ministers to some points which have lately become important on account of their commercial or political relations.

California.

The churches planted in California by the Society's missionaries, have continued to make steady advancement during the year. The Howard street church in San Francisco, which has been gathered by the labors of Rev. S. H. Willey, has increased in numbers and strength, in the face of severe external embarrassments. The congregation had but just completed their church building, when, in May, 1851, the city was visited by a disastrous conflagration; and though their "holy and beautiful house" was spared, the private fortunes of the people were almost wholly swept away by the flames; and the expense of this mission, which the congregation were about to assume, was thrown again, for a few months, upon the Society. A Presbyterian church was organized June 15th, 1851, on the same day that the house of worship was dedicated to the service of God.

Rev. James H. Warren commenced laboring at Nevada City early in April, 1851. His first efforts were directed to secure a church edifice. On the 28th of September following, the building—complete within and without, including a fine bell—was dedicated to Jehovah; and on the same day, a goodly number of professors united in covenant obligations as a church of Christ.

The church organized at Marysville, by Rev. W. W. Brier, has nearly doubled its numbers, and raised the means of building a house of worship, and furnishing it with a bell. Recently, in consequence of the failure of his health, Mr. Brier has been obliged to relinquish his labors.

At San José, Rev. Isaac H. Brayton reports a good measure of prosperity in the general affairs of his church, and the addition of several members, both by letter and by profession. Mr. B. has made extensive tours in the northern and southern mines, preaching the Gospel, and surveying the ground with reference to the establishment of new missions.

The above-named missionaries have been supported by the contributions of their people, except Rev. Messrs. Warren and Willey. The dependence of the latter on the Society terminated on the 1st of January last.

Only about three years have passed since the first Protestant missionaries began their labors in California. In that rush of people, that hazard of health and fortune, that excitement of new circumstances, and absence of social bonds, the attempt to establish the institutions of religion was like laying the foundations of a temple amid the breakers of the ocean. But what will not perseverance effect when working with self-denial, directed by intelligence, and upheld by faith! Already, in most of the important towns of California, one or more evangelical churches exist, sanctuaries rear their spires towards heaven, and living preachers proclaim the messages of mercy. The same wonderful rapidity that has marked this whole development of society in that new State, is seen also in the rise and progress of its religious institutions. Indeed, no limit has thus far been reached in the success of founding churches, and gathering about them the healthful institutions of settled society, but such as are imposed by the want of more laborers suited and willing to do the work. It is established beyond all doubt, that the demand for missionaries, such as this Society seeks to send forth, is not the mere creation of a heated zeal, but an actual and urgent necessity of the country. A hundred thousand men, now in the mines, require some more reliable provision for giving them the Gospel, than the irregular and uncertain visits of the itinerant. Their numbers and condition are becoming such as to admit of the stated ministry, and the social fixtures connected with permanent churches. If these can be supplied to them now, ere the vigor of their new life is absorbed by worldliness—while their ardor and generosity are not yet perverted to purposes of sin—the Gospel may achieve triumphs there, such as can hardly be expected in an unexcited community. Every consideration of the greatest usefulness and economy, calls for an immediate reinforcement of this mission with the ablest men that can be obtained for the service. Such a reinforcement the Committee are attempting the present season, with good prospects of success.

CONCLUSION.

Such is a brief summary of our last Missionary year. Although it has not been wanting in trials, but has furnished occasions for faith and patience, its passing months have yet been crowned with loving kindness and tender mercy. The members of the Society have this joy—a joy which no man taketh from them—that they have not labored in vain, nor spent their strength for nought. They rejoice in the confirmation furnished by another year, that the smile of Heaven rests upon their association. Its object is the noblest possible to men; its means, chosen and ordained by the Lord Jesus Christ; its results, priceless in their value, and eternal in their duration. No powers of computation can measure the present, and still less the future effects of the missionary labors of a single year. What may we not hope from the ceaseless activity, the whole year round, of a thousand enlightened, devoted minds, all pressed on by one impelling purpose, all fraught with the same message, all teaching the same great system of doctrines—doctrines, which, as has been well said, “have done more work, have rolled off more woes, have originated more good influences and good institutions, than all other doctrines ever preached, than all the philosophy ever written.” The yearly summing up of these results of Home Missionary labor, revives the courage of the christian heart. It confirms our faith in the adaptation and adequacy of the Gospel, as the means of national regeneration. The patrons and conductors of the Society, and their co-laborers in the field, may go forth afresh to the duties of another year, exulting in the belief of that coming hour, when the tribes of the people gathering upon our shores, shall say one to another, “Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.”

But animating as it is to contemplate the work accomplished, and that which is in hopeful progress, we may not forget that there is a class of facts less hopeful in their aspect; facts, discouraging for their magnitude rather than their kind. Though we have in this country some formidable shapes of error to encounter, we have, also, some uncommon facilities for meeting them with success. It is not Romanism, therefore, nor Infidelity, nor any of the indigenous forms of fanaticism, that we have chiefly to dread; but it is the whole of them together—the collective impenitence of the land—the aggregate of error, worldliness and sin, in all forms and under every denomination. It is the quantity rather than the nature of the work to be done, which looks disheartening. As lands that are made desolate by the visitations of clouds of locusts, we are in danger of being overwhelmed by the multitude rather than the prowess of our foes. Every where, the fallow ground exceeds the means of culture. Even around our homesteads and amid our altars, new wastes expand. The people are breaking forth on the right hand and on the left, extending the bounds of their habitation. Further and further on, beyond all previous limits, the great column of emigration is pressing, but never recedes. Social changes are so frequent, business enterprise and political excitement are so vehement, that an intenser action of the Gospel is needful to keep the community at all under its power. And this is required simultaneously, at a thousand points, thousands of miles asunder. There is, indeed, nothing in all this to make us despair of filling this land with the Gospel, provided the christian heart can but be awakened, and kept awake, to the magnitude of the interests in jeopardy;—can be brought to feel how much more rapidly the Church must now move than formerly, to avoid falling entirely behind the age. A rate of progress that once was prosperity, would now be little better than defeat. Fifty years ago, there were few openings and few facilities for the diffusion of the Gospel. The Church could then advance by slow degrees, and yet be ahead of the world. A large portion of the earth was inaccessible to the light. The Mahomedan world was the abode of bigotry and cruelty, and could not be entered. China was environed by impregnable barriers of prejudice. Maritime discovery and trade had not brought the remotest nations into familiar nearness, as at present. The extent and capabilities of our Great Central Valley, where now dwell eleven millions of freemen, were unexplored, and almost unsuspected. No Schoolcraft had found the sources of the Mississippi; Oregon and California were names belonging to romance rather than to geography. Fifty years ago, Fulton had not given the steamboat to the world; railways had not girded the earth with bands of iron, nor the electric telegraph pervaded it as with nerves of sensation; there were no power-presses, no locomotives. These, and a thousand wonders of art besides, have but lately come into being to expedite human enterprise and abridge human labor. The quickening effect is not only felt in the external world, but, the very soul of man itself seems changed. It works on a larger scale; it plans and expects what it never dreamed before. It cannot be controlled by such application of christian truth as sufficed to guide it when the century began. And if the last few years have given such an impulse to human life, what may we expect in years to come? Must not our moral machinery be greatly increased, and be worked with far more momentum than it is now? Though it is the same Gospel that must be preached, it must yet be preached with more diligence and power. The excited minds of men must be made to see the truth more clearly, to believe it more firmly, to feel it more intensely, or vast multitudes will break away from its influence.

But the danger is, that the Christians of America will not appreciate this emergency as they should. There is danger that they will fail to know, in this their day, the things that belong to their peace; that they will not understand how valuable is the price that is put into their hands to secure the welfare of Zion; that they will withhold their best counsels, their personal efforts, and their earnest prayers; that their wealth will be locked up in worldly enterprises, instead of being consecrated to the immediate and pressing wants of evangelization; danger that their sons will be devoted to trade, to art, to ambition, rather than to the ministry of reconciliation. It involves no ordinary responsibility, because it is no ordinary privilege, to be a citizen of this country in such a day as this. It is a greater thing to be an American editor, to fill an American pulpit, to stand in the halls of American legislation, to mingle with and mold the popular feeling of American society, than to hold the same relations any where else. They who possess this privilege, seem to stand just now nearer to the throne of power, to the great center of motion of God's engine-ry for saving the world than others. He, then, thus privileged, that can act, let him act here and now. He that can give, let him give with simplicity; for God loveth a cheerful giver. He that can pray, let him pray; for God is a hearer of prayer; and all the promises of his word, and all the signs of his providence, assure us that he waiteth to be gracious. While, then, his sounding chariot wheels are shaking the nations, let all who have named the name of Christ, come forth in the fullness of an honest and entire devotement, and gird themselves to the glorious work of rendering this whole land IMMANUEL'S.

The Maine Law in Minnesota.

The fifth of April, 1852, will be as memorable in Minnesota, as the fifth day of November in Great Britain—not, however, for the abolition of the gunpowder plot, but for the abolition of all whisky-sellers' plots—by the passage of a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all those liquors, which cause greater injury to a community than the explosion of a powder magazine in the heart of a city. The excitement throughout the Territory on Monday, the day of election, was greater than we have seen for a long time upon such an occasion, in any place. On the Saturday night previous, in Saint Paul, a meeting was held by the opposers of the law. The remarks by the "nice young men" that spoke, gave evidence that the vote in favor of "Rum" would be heavy.

On Sunday, the Roman Catholic Bishop, and all of the Protestant ministry, with the exception of the Episcopal, delivered discourses in favor of the contemplated law. At the opening of the polls on Monday, there was a crowd at the window, which continued through the day. With few exceptions, the sentiments of those at the polls could be told by their external appearance and demeanor.—When I say that all of the religious influence, and nearly all the industry and intelligence of the town were on our side, you can easily picture the color of the faces, and general bearing of the opposite party.

We believe all of the public officers and editors, with one exception, voted in favor of the law. Six hundred and seventy-four votes were polled in the town of Saint Paul; and though the liquor-sellers used every influence, in the shape of whisky and hired carriages, to bring all their force to the polls, it was found, after the votes were counted, that they had succeeded in this, their Gibraltar, by the meagre majority of twelve—not even a "baker's dozen."

Monday night was clear and calm, and the moon shone brightly, and by nine o'clock the news came that Ramsey County, of which Saint Paul is the seat, had given a decided majority in favor of the law!

Great was the joy of every friend of religion and good order, as the merry ringing of four church bells did testify; which ringing, however, was a death-knell to the respectability of selling this liquid pestilence, either by the small glass or the large hoghead.

The other counties, as far as heard from, have gone in favor of the law; and there remains not the shadow of a doubt that, on the first Monday in May, the famous Maine Liquor Law will become the law of this South-western Territory.

Its influence cannot but be happy. It will fill our sanctuaries, and be instrumental in the conversion of souls.

IOWA.

The Outpost.

Rev. G. G. Rice, of Kaneshville, has the distinction of residing further West than any other Missionary this side of the Rocky Mountains. His station is at the place on the Missouri River, which, for several years past, has been the great rendezvous of the Mormons, whence they set out on their journey to Salt Lake. As they depart, their places are supplied by other settlers, and thus a permanent community is gradually growing up in the a fertile section of the State, which will in its turn form a starting point for emigrants settling higher up the Missouri. At present, the labors of the Missionary must be comparatively desultory and scattered, and attended with many difficulties.

We are quite isolated during the winter season. We have the Indians on the West, and 150 miles of mostly uninhabited prairie on the East. Of course, there can be but little intercourse abroad. It is expected that in a few weeks emigrants for the Pacific coast, will begin to flock in here. Here are hundreds, and I think I might say thousands, who are preparing to emigrate to Utah, California, and Oregon, this spring. The Mormons are preparing to leave in a body, and are very active in getting ready their outfit. Every one who can handle a mechanic's tool is engaged in making wagons, which are to cross the Rocky Mountains. The din and bustle of business here would make one think he was in some manufacturing town of New England, instead of an isolated town—isolated in winter, but in summer, steamboats come up here from St. Louis.

With the natural features of this country I am more and more pleased. The Missouri Bluffs, two to six miles back from the river, are of exceeding beauty from whatever point you choose to view them. The country is so rolling and the streams so rapid, I am confident it must be healthy; and the appearance of the people who have lived here is evidence of this. But few parts of the West present so many natural advantages to invite settlers as this, and without doubt here will soon be seen a dense population. A large immigration to settle in this part of the State is looked for next summer.

Of the moral aspects here, a longer acquaintance has not given me any more favorable impression. The more I become acquainted with the Mormons, the more I see that their works are "only evil continually." They have a meeting on Sabbath forenoon; but they make no distinction, but mix up secular business with their worship. They say that all their business is for the church, and is alike sacred to them. Stores are opened on the Sabbath, and during all its sacred hours you may hear the sound of the ax and the hammer. Neither business nor pleasure stops for the Sabbath here. I believe the Mormons guilty of nearly all the charges urged against them. That they practice polygamy, is now notorious; and very recently an article in defense of it, was published in their paper here. The leaders teach the people that God is about to destroy all of this nation who do not embrace the Mormon faith, and that they will then take possession of this whole land; hence they look upon us as a doomed people, out of the pale of mercy, and that they are under no moral obligation to show us any mercy. It is this sentiment that has caused the disturbances between the Mormons and others wherever they have lived; for they believe they need not be very scrupulous in their dealings with those whom God has doomed to destruction, and whose possessions he has given to them. They profess that they are only going to the Valley of the Salt Lake 'till the "calamities be overpast," which God is about to send upon this nation, and the way is prepared for them to come back and possess the land. Many have told me that they had no idea what the Mormon doctrines were 'till they came out here among them; that those who proselyted them, concealed their true doctrines. Yet very few, after they have made this confession, will renounce Mormonism. A few, I trust, will do it. It seems to spoil a man to become a Mormon; even if he renounces it, he can never get it out of his system. It is like leprosy, and clings to him 'till he fairly rots out. The mass of them are dupes to the system, and trembling slaves to their leaders.

The leaders are despots, and rule their people with a rod of iron—who fear their curses as much as ever the dupe of Romanism did that of the Pope. Their preaching consists principally in enforcing the duty of paying tithes, and obeying the counsels of their leaders; and they are made to believe that if they disobey Council, the fate of Korah will be visited upon them. The people dare not give or attend parties without permission, and tickets to balls or parties must contain on them, "Permitted by Council." To speak against the authorities is a crime that must be atoned for by the payment of money. They usually punish by fines, and those who refuse to pay fines are excommunicated.

Nearly all are addicted to the use of profane language, from the man of gray hairs down to the prattling child. Yet they style themselves "Latter-Day Saints," and claim that they are the only true worshipers of God upon earth, and they denominate all those "Gentiles," or heathen, who are not of their faith.

WISCONSIN.Concealed Church Members.

We have lately been taking the spiritual census of this field. Several members of our church cheerfully took part in this work, to their own profit, and I trust also to the profit of others. Christians manifested some desire for a deeper work of grace, and to witness a revival. One or two cases of great declension were found, with some promise of a better life. There was also a free access to the minds of the unconverted, with scarcely an exception.

One fact has been developed, which to us is astonishing. We have often been told that there are many who leave the eastern churches, and remove to the West, that never connect themselves with any church here; but if the small field we have explored, be any criterion by which to judge in this matter, the half has never been told; and eastern churches have but a very limited sense of their responsibility to removing members. We were aware that there were several of that class among us; and two aged individuals, trembling over the grave, who had held their letters for five or six years, had come forward and connected with the church. But there are now about thirty persons within the circumference of a few miles, who have been formerly, or are now connected with churches of different denominations elsewhere, but who hold no such relation here. Some of these are, we trust, still trying to adorn the doctrine of Christ, but are found in their present position because of denominational preferences, or other causes, but are, notwithstanding, a valuable help to us. But there are many others, who, if ever converted, are now backsliders in heart and life—persons enough, were they sufficiently united in mind and heart, to form a church nearly as large as the one now existing here, or for nearly double our present number. Oh, that the mind of the Spirit would blow upon this valley of dry bones, that these slain might live!

Recognition of Responsibility and dependence.

Your commission came duly to hand, and caused such emotions as the missionary family alone experiences. We feel that the amount you promise is our salary. My people have made an extra effort this year; but yet, were it not for the sure promises of God, I should fear for the future. But God has taken care of me and mine thus far, and I cannot find it in my heart to distrust him. I have not seen the results I wished; and two weeks ago I began to present such truth as was calculated to arouse the church to renewed activity. My own soul has been led to seek a fresh baptism from on high. I confidently hope that God will revive his work.

Never, I think, did I feel such a weight of responsibility resting on me as at the present time. When I think that every sermon I try to preach may sink some soul deeper in the torments of hell, I am forced to exclaim, again and again, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Well might an angel shrink from such a responsibility. But poor, weak man can lean on the strong arm of Jehovah. "Lo, I am with you." How such a promise nerves us for the combat. If I had not such a pledge to rest on, and such a stay and helper as our God, I must lay aside my armor in despair. There are many things I need; but I constantly pray that every thing else be denied rather than to be shut up to my own resources, when I go to minister to my people.

I often wonder that such a worm as I should have met with such kindness and encouragement from your Society, but I wonder much more, that God, in whose hands are the hearts of all flesh, should have taken me from the plow and sent me to be his ambassador to men. But in wisdom he has seen fit to place this precious treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power, may be of God and not of us. If any good is accomplished here, the world must say, "This is the finger of God."

O, brethren, pray for us in these ends of the earth, that God will graciously pour out his Spirit and revive his work.

Care in Admitting Members.

Our number is three less than a year ago—some having died, and some left us. We might have kept our number good, but from the past we wished to learn lessons of wisdom for the future. Whatever may be the practice of other churches, this, so long as I am its pastor, will, I trust, be slow in receiving members. Nothing will be lost by delaying the connection of converts with the church for some time; while often much is gained by it. Some who have given evidence of piety for a year past, will next Sabbath sit down with us for the first time at the table of the Lord.

Since the Census of 1840, 1,166,432 square miles, including Oregon, have been added to the territory of the United States, by which it has been extended from 2,055,163, to 3,221,595 square miles. This does not include the great Lakes which lie upon our northern borders, or the bays which indent our Atlantic and Pacific shores.

The absolute increase of the population in ten years, including the amount acquired by additions of territory, has been 6,186,260; and the increase per cent. has been 36.25, viz.:

New England States, (6)	22.97 per cent.
Middle States, (3)	30.22 "
Southern Atlantic States, (7)	19.10 "
South-western States, (8)	47.86 "
North-western States, (6)	59.66 "
States East of the Alleghenies, (16)	23.86 "
States West of " (14, excluding California)	53.47 "
White population,	39.28 "
Free Colored,	10.09 "
Slaves,	25.58 "

If one third of the population of Pennsylvania and Virginia be considered as belonging to the Great Western Valley, the comparative population and political power of the two sections of the country will be as follows:

	POPULATION.		REPRESENTATIVES.
	1840.	1860.	1840.	1860.
States East of the Mountains,	9,654,139	12,049,846	134	198
States West of the Mountains,	7,364,715	11,207,877	89	165
Difference,	2,289,424	841,969	45	23

From this statement it appears, that in ten years, the East has lost six and the West has gained sixteen Representatives, and that the majority of Eastern Representatives in the next Congress will be only thirteen. Four Territories send each one delegate, who is not entitled to vote. The present ratio of representation, is 1 to 93,716.

In ten years 1,639,699 foreign passengers have arrived in the ports of the United States; and it is estimated that the total number of immigrants into the United States since 1790, and their descendants, amounted in 1850, to 4,350,934.

The total number of deaths in the United States, for the year ending June 1st, 1860, was 299,104.

* The original thirteen States.

America seen from Abroad.

Extract of a Letter from Genoa, of March 12, 1852.

Every thoughtful American traveler will go home with a deep impression of the importance of the Home Missionary enterprise. The thorough evangelization of our own country, is infinitely the most important work on earth, not only in relation to our own interests, but the interests of the world. While the foreign field should not be neglected, no post in our own country should be left unoccupied. If the light that is in America become darkness, how great and lasting shall be the darkness that will enshroud the earth!

Fifty Years ago.

Fifty years ago, within the present limits of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, there were only 50,000 inhabitants; and the log cabins of the enterprising pioneers and frontier settlers of this North-western Territory were few and far between. Then, there were only about 5,000 acres of improved land in the Territory—the prairies and forests, the rivers and lakes of this “extensive tract of country” were mostly in the undisturbed and undisputed possession of untamed savage men and wild beasts. Then, the Indian trails, the bridle-paths and bark canoes, were the only signs of “internal improvements,” and the only guides and means of internal communication. Indeed “this part of the American Empire” was then an almost uninhabited and unimproved “tract of country,” and school-houses, churches, canals, railways, steamboats and telegraphic wires—there were none.

And now, in 1852, this North-western Territory comprises four States, containing about 4,500,000 people, entitled to 48 Representatives; has 23,000,000 of acres of improved land; raised in 1850, 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, 177,000,000 bushels of corn, 24,500,000 pounds of cheese, and 67,000,000 pounds of butter. It has McAdamized roads, canals and railroads made and being made throughout each State, with hundreds of elegant steamers plying upon its rivers and lakes, telegraphic communications between all its chief cities and towns and those of all other portions of the Union, with churches, colleges and school-houses, sufficient and convenient for the education of the millions. Yes, these “great (State) communities” were founded by, and their present prosperity and happiness are based upon, the early labors and influences of those energetic pioneer settlers—those few “well ordered families.”

Thirty Years' Struggle with Debt.

I hardly know in what terms to express my gratitude for the relief afforded me by the last draft of eighty dollars, which came to hand a few days since. My memory goes back at least 45 years, and for more than 30 of them I have been burdened with debts. From the moment I purchased a Latin grammar or commenced my course of study for the ministry, until a few days after you sent me that draft, I have been in debt, and nearly all that long (or short) period, I have been paying interest. Surely, if the Apostle was right in saying that we should “owe no man any thing,” it is truly desirable that a minister should be able to reach such a scriptural standard as early in life as 50. “The desire accomplished is sweet to the soul.” Since I have broken this subject, I feel like illustrating my habits of economy, by a fact or two. The only watch I ever owned I still have for a companion in all my labors. It cost me $10 in 1827. The horse that has performed the offices of cars and steamboats for a much greater distance than the circumference of the earth, still claims me for as good a friend as 16 years ago.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL, Mark xvi. 15.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

Vol. XXV.

JULY, 1852.

No. 3.

Illustrations of the West.

So long as the exertions of the Church fall far behind the demands of our great missionary field, the capabilities and dangers of the West cannot be too urgently pressed on the public attention. This portion of our land requires increased missionary attention, not only on account of its own intrinsic importance and growth, but because it is in a great measure the nursery for the population which is migrating to regions further on. The "West" is already a starting point for tens of thousands seeking that other West, lying upon the Pacific coast; and on its missionary training is to depend, in no small degree, the manner in which the Gospel will be received, supported, and propagated by the dwellers in California and Oregon.

The following illustrations of the West and its dangers and influence were presented at the late Anniversary of the American Home Missionary Society, in the address of Rev. JOSEPH F. TUTTLE, of Rockaway, N. J.

The West—What it is.

The question is often asked, what is the West? In general terms it may be answered, the West is a vast empire, three thousand miles long by one thousand broad, containing two and a quarter millions of square miles, and equal to Great Britain, Ireland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Poland, and Russia in Europe. It embraces fifteen hundred millions of acres, which would allow forty acres each to nearly forty million families, or two hundred millions of individuals. Once its frontier was at Geneva; now it is at San Francisco; now it is the Pacific. The West is constructed on Nature's vastest scale. It has forests yet undisturbed, covering as much territory as some of the kingdoms of Europe, every foot of which is available for the plow. It has rich, glorious prairies, which stretch out like trackless oceans. Its rivers, fringed with fat alluvial plains, sink the Thames, the Rhine, the Seine, and the Hudson into mere rivulets. To know the majestic outlines of the West, you must sail down the Ohio a thousand miles; up the Mississippi to St. Paul; up the Missouri to the Rocky Mountains; up the Yellow Stone a thousand miles to the place where its head waters are only a stone's throw distant from the sources of the Columbia; up the numerous tributaries of the turbid Missouri, spreading their mighty network over five hundred thousand square miles of territory, or up the almost countless streams pouring into the Mississippi, on the one side reaching the Alleghanies, and on the other the Rocky Mountains. You must have some definite conception of the fact that the West is coursed by rivers whose aggregate length is thirty thousand miles, and whose valleys are as rich as the valley of the Nile.

Rapid Growth of the West.

The political progress of the West is also on a vast scale. I can name to you the man—he yet lives—who was the first white child born in the State of Ohio. Scarcely sixty-four years have passed away, and now behold ten States, four Territories, and eleven millions of inhabitants. In January, 1799, the delegates to the first Legislature west of the Ohio river, traveled through almost unbroken forest from two to four hundred miles, swimming the rivers on horseback, and camping by night in the woods; but now the representatives of eleven millions assemble in their capital cities, in circumstances as pleasant as in Boston or Harrisburgh. In 1794 the mail communication between Ohio and the East was through Kentucky and North Carolina; but now Cincinnati by railroad is forty hours distant from New York; and by telegraph, distance is absolutely annihilated. Progress at the West is at railroad rates. Yesterday it was a wilderness, to-day an inhabited place. Yesterday the wolf, the bear, the deer, and the savage, were there; to-day the West resounds with the potential voice of millions of citizens. Yesterday the traveler on horseback was picking his difficult way through vast forests by the dim trail of the hunter, or the blazed trees of the pioneer or savage; to-day he is following the screaming locomotives along iron highways with the speed of the wind. Yesterday the West was a dependent nursling in the swaddling clothes of infancy; to-day its eldest State, the young giant of the Ohio, is crying out "Excelsior," and is reaching out for the boasted banner and motto of the Empire State. Yesterday the West was distinguished only by her insignificance, scarcely exciting the contempt of her peers; to-day she plants one foot on the Ohio, and the other on the Columbia, waving one giant hand over the Yellow Stone, and the other over the American, and in the calm sublimity of conscious power awaits the day as near when she shall concentrate in herself the civil and political power of the nation. Convert the West to Christ, and she will make her power felt in Russia and in the heart of China; but let Jesuitism and Infidelity attain the mastery of the West, and she will roll back the dark ages over the world, and reërect the despotism of Hildebrand; or she will rock the nations with another French Revolution on a vaster scale. Convert the West to Christ, and her sons will be the foremost warriors in the great battle which is now waging in the world, and when at last the victory shall be won, her myriad voices shall blend in majestic harmony with the redeemed in earth and heaven, as they shall unite in the thunder-voiced ascription, "Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

Dangers of the West.

As for the dangers which beset the West, their "name is Legion;" but among them all the most active and dangerous are two; the first being Universalism, with its syren song of universal and indiscriminate salvation, blending into one the polite Unitarian infidelity of New England and the refined transcendentalism of Germany; the second being the system which declares that there is no road to heaven except through Rome, and seeks to reduce this republic, founded on and shaped by the vernacular Bible, beneath the iron rule which is crushing the patriots of Italy and Hungary. I well remember the remark made by a Western archbishop, who in Cincinnati publicly eulogized the common schools of that city, but in Europe denounced the same schools as hungry wolves which met the poor defenseless children of emigrants as they landed on the wharves, and devoured them! Said he on one occasion, privately, but with unctuous complacency, "Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to plant the cross upon the steeple of Dr. Beecher's church!" For once the Jesuit spoke out his mind honestly. In justice to the man whose church was to be distinguished with such a peculiar honor, it ought to be stated, that the Doctor was once passing by the great cathedral erected in Cincinnati by the aforesaid Bishop, and after looking for some time at the building so poorly calculated for preaching the gospel, he exclaimed, in a tone half mirthful and half prophetic, "I don't know what use we can put that thing to, by and by, when the colics are converted to Christ."

Progress of Religion at the West.

The progress of religion at the West has been of itself a prodigy. The first sermon preached to the white people in the Northwestern Territory was by a Mr. Breck, on the 20th of July, 1788, in the Block House at Marietta. But now, in 1852, not less than six hundred Presbyterian and Congregational ministers hold forth the word of life in Ohio alone, to some seven hundred congregations. In 1820, two years before the State was admitted into the Union, there were probably not a half dozen ministers in Indiana; now there are more than 200 ministers, and 300 churches of these denominations, the most of which are the nurslings of Home Missions. In 1814, so far as I can ascertain, there was not a Presbyterian or Congregational church or minister in Illinois. In 1829, the first Presbytery was formed of seven members; and on the Mississippi, above St. Louis, there was not a single minister or church, nor one within 200 miles in any direction of Galena, where Kent, the veteran pioneer of the A. H. M. S. had just been stationed. But now there are more than 350 churches on the same field, and the gospel is preached to listening thousands. In 1829, Mr. Kent visited Wisconsin, and tells us that, losing his way, he was led to the cabin of a backsliding Englishman, who had been converted in Calcutta. There was not, to his knowledge, a man within twenty miles who could pray with him, nor an Evangelical Christian church within 200 miles. In 1835, the work of Home Missions began in earnest in Wisconsin; and now it has some 200 churches, and 150 ministers.

The Home Missionary Society at the West.

The instrumentality in these changes is Home Missions, and in this work no Society has been more signally blessed than the one whose anniversary we celebrate to-night. Look at its condensed history in figures. In Western New York it has nurtured 300 churches; in Ohio, 300; in Indiana, some 150; and over the whole field of its operations, over 3,000 churches. It has stationed men on Lake Michigan and at St. Paul—it has scattered holy influences over the mighty West, from the Ohio to the mouth of the Columbia. It has become identified with the march of civilization, and the rush of influences which are shaping the West. The American Home Missionary Society has sent the Gospel into thousands of school houses and waste places; nay, more, it has been the parent stock from which have sprung colleges, seminaries, and schools, which are now nobly striving to save the West by educating its sons in Home institutions. It has been the handmaid of every moral reformation in the Great Valley. Its sons have been foremost in the fight with intemperance in Ohio, Wisconsin, and Iowa; and in the Divine might it has poured such holy and powerful influences over the West, that even now, in spite of the thousand leagued errors which are at work to ruin it, I can see the enemy giving way, and I hope to see the day when this Society shall have aided the good in laying the foundations of this young empire so firmly on the everlasting rock, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

I am acquainted with many of your missionaries, and I feel that I venture nothing in the assertion that the heroic and self-sacrificing spirit of the gospel has no better illustrations than are to be found in them. Many of them are men of strong and cultivated intellects, who would have excelled in any station or pursuit in life. They are men whose whole souls are swayed and controlled by one idea, and that not the ambition of the politician, or the narrow bigotry of the Jesuit, but the constraining love of Christ. I seem to see them looking over the sublime heritage of the West; and in unmoved confidence of faith in God, I seem to hear them exclaiming, in trumpet tones, to American Christians, "The land through which we passed to search it, is an exceeding good land. If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this land and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey. Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us; their defense is departed from them, and the Lord is with us." They shrink at no self-denial, are appalled by no danger, are discouraged by no labors; but laying themselves a living sacrifice on the altar of Christ, they are bending their energies with an enthusiasm which might shock Festus, and a wisdom higher than human, and a love which is divine, to the mighty work of securing this glorious field for their Master.

We have seen that their labor is not in vain. The churches they have erected are numbered by the thousand, and the subjects of revivals under their preaching by hundreds of thousands. In the labors of these noble men, I see one of the cheering evidences of hope that the Lord will not suffer false religion to take possession of the West.

Reports from the Missionaries.

IOWA.

Commencing a Mission.

A large proportion of the churches in the frontier states grow up somewhat after the manner of the offsets from bulbs in the vegetable kingdom. A missionary, in visiting his scattered flock, gathers the people in different neighborhoods, and supplies them with occasional preaching. Soon, some of these become so important as to warrant the formation of Sabbath schools. He procures libraries, lectures on Temperance, establishes prayer meetings for the neighborhood. Ere long, his appointments for preaching become stated, and the people begin to feel in some small degree the power and advantage of regular religious privileges, and to desire more. But these points are more numerous than one man can supply. The Missionary cries out for help. In due time, other laborers arrive; one, two, or more of these infant neighborhoods are combined and become the charge of a new Missionary, who in his turn has the same experience and performs the same service in extending church organizations as his predecessor. It is to this second stage in the religious progress of a new county that the following report refers.

From Rev. John Summers, Benton Co.

The first quarter of my missionary year for Benton Co., Iowa, has closed. I removed from my former place of residence in the State of Illinois in the month of December, just before the very severe cold weather commenced. We were detained for several weeks on the way, and near the Mississippi river, before we were able to cross it. On the first day of January we crossed to the Iowa side; and on the third day after, I preached in Benton Co. The weather continued very cold, and on the 20th of March, I sent my son and team to bring my books &c. from Illinois. A few days after, the weather grew mild, and before my books reached the Mississippi, the ice became so rotten, that it was considered unsafe to cross. Knowing that I was without a horse, my son in attempting to cross with one of them, broke through the ice, but finally succeeded with the horse in reaching the Illinois side in safety. Thus I was prevented from obtaining my horse, and consequently from laboring much away from the settlement where my family resides, and where also most of the members of the church live.

This settlement has been nearly all made within the last three years, and is now one of the largest in the county. The school house, where our meetings are held, is a good, hewed log building, 20 feet square; and on the Sabbath, when the weather is favorable, it is crowded by persons who pay as much respect to the services of God's house as is usual in the older settlements of other States. I have established a weekly prayer meeting, which is usually well attended by professors of religion and others. Some of them come two miles and a half to attend it.

The cause of Temperance is also gaining ground. I deliver a Temperance lecture about once a month. There has been some opposition, and still is, to Temperance societies, on the part of some even of the members of the church; but as a general thing, I think, the members of the church abstain from the use of strong drink. Fremont, the county-seat of Benton Co., is a small village, containing some 10 or 12 families. Hereafter, I expect to preach there about one third of my time. I design also to labor a part of my time on the east side of Cedar river in Benton Co., as soon as the river can be crossed. At present, there is no ferry at the county seat, but will be one in a few weeks. I have also preached at other places in the county occasionally; but in consequence of not being able to obtain a house in which to hold meetings, I made no other appointments.

Most of the members of my church are poor, or in moderate circumstances.

They have as yet but little land under a state of cultivation, and can contribute but a small amount for benevolent objects. Last year the church subscribed $30, to the support of a minister who labored for them part of the year; this year I am in hopes they will subscribe $50.

The Habit of Emigration.

You will be surprised to learn, that the church in this place has been diminished one fifth, during the past year, by emigration; and that the business of the whole community has suffered in a similar proportion, from the same cause. This would not seem strange, if reported from one of the older States; but in a portion of country that has been settled only nine years, it may appear a little singular. Still, I suppose it is true, that a far greater proportion of the population of the new and recently settled section of the country removes to Oregon and California than from the older sections.

This is a natural result of the habit of emigration. The great body of the population of Iowa, as far as my knowledge extends, have come by regular stages of emigration from the more eastern States to their present residence. Many have come from the extreme East—the very waters of the Atlantic—rolling along with the wave of emigration, moving westward for the last fifty years. Many, probably by far the larger part, have been born and reared up along the route, while a few, a very few, have come the whole distance at a single trip. These last are known and recognized instantly as “genuine,” “Simon pure,” “live Yankees;” and although they may smack of salt water, they are looked upon as rather “fresh.”

A Western home is a place of sojourn, like the home of Abraham or Lot or the Patriarchs that we read of in the Bible. Very few, however, like Abraham, are willing to go either to the East or the West. The whole land is not before them, the East is occupied. But it is not merely vacant, unsettled country that is needed. A change of country, a better country, the romance of an unknown country, is desired. When the advantages and beauties of a country are fully known, it ceases to charm. A young man recently left for California, who for two years has been very anxious to go, but during his minority had been restrained by the influence and authority of his parents.

They offered, for the sake of diverting him from his purpose, to furnish him the means to travel and visit the Eastern cities. He derided the idea. He would not turn his hand over to see all that could be seen in the East, but he must go to the Utopia of the New World; and he has gone. This is but one instance of many in this community, who go against the wishes and entreaties of friends at home and in spite of the elaborately written remonstrances and warnings of friends already there.

It seems to have been settled both by the providence of God in his wisdom, and by the improvidence of men in their folly, that the western coast of the United States is to be settled by a heavy population, and that very speedily; and that the whole population from the Atlantic to the Pacific should be homogenous in its character. If then, our churches here send a part of their number across the mountains, shall we say that they are becoming weak and feeble? Shall we not rather say that their influence is extended over a wider field? They have not gone out from us because ‘they were not of us.’ We did not know how tenderly they were attached to us, and we to them, until the time drew near for us to be separated,—until we gathered, for the last time, around the table of our common Lord and Master, realizing that we should drink no more of the fruit of the vine with them, until we should drink it new with him in his kingdom. Is the church weaker then, because nine persons have been dismissed to labor in other portions of their Master’s vineyard, and one has been called into the presence of her Master to receive her final reward? No, no! It has a history in the past, as well as hopes in the future. Endearing memories will cluster with us in the concert room, and will mingle with our prayers as they go up to the great Head of the Church.

Protracted Prayer Meeting.

From Rev. F. Gaylord, Danville, Des Moines Co.

Last winter I proposed to the brethren to commence a protracted prayer meeting. They approved of the suggestion, and we commenced such a meeting early in February. We held prayer meetings every evening for one week. During this week there was one very decided case of conversion. Others became interested, especially some of the children. At the close of this week, Rev. Asa Turner came and assisted me for ten days. The meetings were solemn and deeply interesting. The church was much revived. Two members of a sister church, formerly connected with us, and residing here for the winter, were refreshed, and left for Oregon a few weeks since, in a most delightful state of religious feeling.

The last Sabbath was a day of deep interest. The house was full, and the attention of every one seemed fixed. It was a precious meeting; though we did not see those results in the conversion of sinners that we wished and hoped for: there were three or four cases of conversion among the adults; and of quite a number of the children we have considerable hope. I have formed a class of 12 or 14, which I meet from week to week for religious instruction. I think the number will increase when the season becomes more favorable. The church have been very much quickened and advanced in spirituality. They seem truly to love one another like brethren.

Nucleus of a Church for Oregon.

We have dismissed three for Oregon. At first I felt sad to think that any should leave this feeble band. But I now feel that the hand of God is in it, and that our meeting may be the means of laying the foundation of a church in that new country. Of the five that go from here, four made a profession of religion in this church; and they go determined to plant the standard of the cross where they make a final settlement. Many prayers are offered up in their behalf. An immense tide of emigration is moving toward the Pacific shore.

From Rev. G. C. Beaman, Montrose, Lee Co.

Backsliders Reclaimed—Conversions.

There has been a very good religious state of feeling here ever since last October. There have been during the winter more than sixty inquirers. Over thirty backsliding professors of different denominations have been hunted up, and some of them, we hope, permanently revived. I am happy to say that none of these backsliders had been Presbyterians or Congregationalists. Those reclaimed have joined us. There have been in all over thirty hopeful conversions—four from my Bible class of young men, several from the Sabbath school. Twenty-one of the converts have united with our church; some few—I think five or six—with the Methodists. The whole work has been still and deep. For about three weeks, there were conversions every day, or nearly so. Some very full confessions were made by old professors of religion. Very great change has been produced on the community at large; swearing has become unpopular; temperance has advanced; the Sabbath school increased; and the house has generally been full all winter, when there was preaching.

Interesting Departure of Christian Emigrants.

Three whole families, and several parts, i. e., husbands and young men, left here three weeks ago for California. This was a new and sublime scene for this place. When the Mormons went off (when I first came here, six years ago), they started on Sabbath if they could, generally drinking, swearing, fighting, and stealing. Now, these persons, seven professors—five of them subjects of the revival—entered into covenant, or articles of agreement, to stop on the Sabbath while on their journey, and to have prayers every morning and evening. Although ready on Saturday to start, they stayed till Monday, and went to church three times on the Sabbath. On Monday two or three hundred of the citizens collected at the edge of the town, to bid them farewell. They sung a farewell hymn. By request, and to save feelings and tears, and to make a long work a short one, in behalf of the Californians I bade farewell to the citizens, and in behalf of the citizens I bade farewell to those leaving. Then we all, under the canopy of Heaven, united in prayer to God for his blessing on those going and on those remaining. They then moved on; many in hacks and on foot escorted them out of sight of the town. This was truly grand and touching—a scene of moral sublimity seldom witnessed in this western world.

In the contrast between this company, bound for California, and the Mormons, bound six years ago for Salt Lake, we see what God has done for this place. Let his great and holy name be praised for it; for he has done it, not we ourselves.

Good Effect.

If it had not been for the American Home Missionary Society, this great good would not—could not—have been done, so far as we can see. No missionary could have lived and labored in Christ's cause here without its aid. Now, there are three churches organized within my field of labor—one here of 40 members; one at Croton of 21; and one at Pleasant Grove of 12 members. Through the same influences mostly, some 12 or 15 Sabbath schools have been formed, giving instruction to 6 or 700 children, and some 8 or 900 persons induced, by this and other co-operating agencies, to sign the Temperance pledge.

I would most devoutly and heartily praise God, and thank the friends and contributors of A. H. M. Society, that I have been permitted to see this good done, and bear some humble part, as an unworthy instrument, in doing it.

From Rev. C. Burnham, Hamilton, Marion Co.

Healthful Condition of a Young Church.

It is with joy that I am permitted to say, the Lord has been with us indeed. "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." The church here have been much interested during the winter, and our weekly prayer meetings have been well attended, and some of them deeply interesting; the eye has been moistened with tears, and utterance almost choked by deep feeling. Christians felt that they had wandered from God; they confessed their sins, and sought again the face of their Heavenly Father. He heard their cry, and delivered them. The church have very manifestly been growing in grace. They are higher in spiritual stature than they were six months ago. At our communion, the first Sabbath in April, three united with the church, on profession of their faith, and two by letters. We are in hourly expectation of the arrival among us of several families from Pennsylvania, who will cast in their lot with us.

Liberality.

This church is not yet one year old. At the time of its organization, the tone of piety was low; and most of them are poor in this world's goods, and none of them rich; and the country is new, where everything in the way of improvement has to be done. And yet, when I presented to them the claims of the A. H. M. S., they subscribed $20—two dollars for each member of the church. Few churches, I imagine, have done so much as this, considering their number and ability. Beside this, they are now pledged to another benevolent object, $15. They will also increase their subscription for my support. My heart has been greatly cheered to see their readiness to engage in every good work; and I think you may look to this, now little, church, to become a very efficient helper in the work of Home Missions. They will remember your Society, and according to their ability, they will sustain it. They feel very grateful for the aid you have afforded them, and their late contribution is but the first fruits of their liberality.

In connection with our weekly prayer meetings, I have recently introduced a NEW MEASURE, viz.: I proposed to the church, and others who were disposed to engage in the exercise, to take up some of the leading doctrines of the Bible, and have them commit to memory as many proof-texts as they could, and then, after calling upon them for the texts, I add others, or make such remarks as seem to me appropriate.

In justice to the church, I must say they remember their minister, and his family. We have on frequent occasions had a manifestation of their kindness and sympathy, which has caused us to thank God and take courage.

A Standard Bearer Fallen.

Our good deacon was one of the oldest citizens in town, and one of the most influential in every religious and moral enterprise. He was, indeed, our standard bearer, and had stood by the little church, and fought courageously for it, almost single handed, in its severe struggles for an existence. He lived long enough to see, as we hope, a brighter day dawning on the little Bethel he loved so well, and for which he so ardently prayed, even in the last prayer-meeting, six days before he died, as well as on his sick bed. Need I add how such a Christian died? He died as he lived—in the faith; died, almost with the words of prayer trembling on his lips. All have lost in him a counselor, a friend, and a devoted Christian brother; and we can all feel the deep meaning of that Scripture which says, when Samuel died, "and all the Israelites lamented him."

Emigration—Sacrifices.

Fourteen wagons, averaging from five to eight persons to each, stood on our square, on the Sabbath, as we came out of church. Nearly forty of these teams, with a great number of cattle, have passed through our town daily.

But, notwithstanding all this California excitement, and, what is worse, spirit rappings, and the great losses we have met with in crops and in members, I think we shall succeed with our new church. It is now nearly framed, and we hope to see it finished before New Year's. I never knew greater sacrifices, in proportion to the wealth, or greater perseverance to accomplish so great and so noble an object by so few, and that without foreign aid. We have a hard struggle yet to go through, if we succeed. May the Lord prosper us and bring strength out of weakness, is our prayer.

Efforts at Edification.

I have endeavored to present the cardinal truths of religion, and to build up my people in the faith and order of the Gospel, rather than to produce any momentary excitement, and influence the feelings without reaching the judgment and conscience.

I think I see the good effects of my endeavors to establish them in the faith. If I have not misjudged, these cardinal truths have done more to arouse the impenitent than any sermons I have ever preached here.

I have not failed, however, to mingle practical truth with doctrinal, and have tried to urge the importance of performed as well as known duty.

I think there is progress in things pertaining to Christ's cause here. We have had no revival; but there has been a gradual increase of interest on the part of many of the impenitent, and the church appears to be growing stronger in the Lord. Our Sabbath school, for the first time, has been sustained through the winter, and with encouraging success.

A number of children and some grown persons have committed the "Westminster Assembly's Catechism" this winter, and received each a Bible therefor. Others are now learning it. We have opened the Sabbath school for the summer, and introduced a new Sunday school library, kindly furnished us by the Massachusetts Sunday School Society.

The prospect is, that we shall have a large and interesting school, although the Methodists have one but a few rods from ours.

Work for Missionaries.

The country is filling up rapidly this spring. The families come in so fast, that I cannot keep up with the tide in calling upon them. They are principally from Pennsylvania and New York; and appear to be moral and enterprising people. Very few of them are pious. Settlements are opening rapidly on the north and west of me, and new demands for ministers are constantly arising. We need at this moment four ministers in this immediate vicinity, to go to places where churches could be organized at once. They are important points, and will soon be large places. Can you not send at least three this spring?

MISSOURI.Impenitence and Delusion.

A few weeks ago, I attended the funeral of a young man who, while our meetings were in progress, was quite serious on the subject of religion; but, while others were submitting their hearts to God, he said he was skeptical, and could not seem to be able to rid himself of his unbelief. The meeting passed away, his convictions wore off, and he again became indifferent. Soon afterwards, he was thrown upon a bed of sickness. I called often to see him. At first, the subject of religion seemed not to be agreeable. After a time he listened with more and more interest, and said he would rejoice above all things to be a genuine child of God. He had no more doubts, he prayed often, but said he did not know how to believe. Day after day, he was hoping to get well; "then he would give himself entirely to the Saviour." But his disease was deceptive. He counted on life while on the very threshold of death.

His friend and partner in business sent for me early one morning, to go and inform the sick man that the physician had given him up, and he must die in a few hours. I hastened to his bedside to communicate the sad news. Said I to him, "Is your peace made with God?" "Oh! no," he said; "when I get well, I will be a Christian." "You may not live. Would you not like me to pray with you, that God may now have mercy on you?" He said he had no objection, but wished I would. When I arose from my knees, I asked him the state of his feelings. He made no definite reply. I then communicated to him the fact that he must die. He raised his head, looked upon me with a vacant stare, said he knew his disease was a complicated one. He soon became dizzy-headed, and in two hours he was dead. He never got well to become a Christian. How deceitful are the ways of men! When in health, they will become religious when sick; when sick, after health returns.

A Church Wasted by Emigration.

The great majority of those who desired to go to Oregon are gone. If they should prosper on the way, and arrive in Oregon at the place where three families and six members of our church are now living, there will be ten families, with thirty-two members there from one church, in South Western Missouri. They ought to have a Presbyterian minister soon. Those who lived nearest our church are now gone. Three elders are now gone; the place of one elder is now owned by a widow, a Baptist. The farm of another elder is owned by an influential man, who, it is said, keeps whisky about him. The other elder's late residence is now occupied by a Baptist preacher. There are no Presbyterians at any of the places occupied formerly by the ten Presbyterian families who have left us; and I do not know that there are any with Presbyterian predilections. We have two ruling elders left; both of them are old and feeble, and not able to do a day's work. The other members are generally poor, and so dispersed that I never expect to meet them all at any one time on earth. One is nearly fifty miles east of our place of worship. Others are six, eight, or ten miles in different directions.

I must now begin, as it were, anew in a new place. I have been trying to perform missionary labor as formerly, though it has appeared to be against wind and tide. I have had doubts about being able to accomplish much good while the mental excitement has been so high and so general in regard to a paradise beyond the Rocky Mountains. I cannot predict how it will be hereafter.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. S. H. Ashmun, Waupun, Wis.

First Efforts.

Upon my arrival in the State, I found my mission had been anticipated, and numerous fields of labor pointed out. After a few days spent in resting from the fatigues of a long, rough, lake voyage, and making arrangements for my family, I came directly to this place.

Waupun is a village lying in two counties (Dodge and Fond Du Lac), and also two towns. The dividing line passes through the center of the village. There are two school-houses at the extreme parts of the village. We occupy each on alternate Sabbaths. The small church in this place was left vacant about eighteen months ago; and they have been as sheep without a shepherd since, having very seldom any preaching or meetings of any kind.

My first efforts were directed to the importance of erecting a church edifice suitable to the wants of the congregation. We have purchased the lot, and paid for it; and also for nearly all the materials. We have on subscription nearly or quite enough to complete our church edifice. There is a very general interest awakened. A portion of my labors have been directed to show the people at large how greatly they need the improving and reforming influence of the Gospel faithfully preached, both for their temporal and spiritual interests.

I have visited all the settlements and school-districts for this purpose, and addressed them in public and private.

As the fruit of my labors, we shall probably have a good convenient house finished and all paid for, and be in it, enjoying its benefits, before my first half-year is finished. This is a work which, under all the circumstances, you would probably deem second to none.

We are not without some encouragement spiritually. We have just had a communion season, at which five joined the church; three on profession, and two by letter. This event has been seemingly blessed. Our meetings have been fully attended, and several very interesting cases of awakening; and our school-houses are more than filled. We have two weekly meetings well attended. I have organized a flourishing Sabbath school, and it gives me more promise for permanent good than anything on my field.

Nucleus of a Congregation.

The following extract exemplifies the work which our Western missionaries are constantly doing around them, and shows a natural and effectual mode of church extension:—

I recently spent some time in visiting from house to house in ——. I found about twenty individuals who were hopefully pious, and desirous of being organized into a Presbyterian church. Included in this number are seven or eight men, heads of families with their wives. It is at a little village where are mills, a store, post-office, and tavern; and, when we hold our meetings, our place of assembling is a poor school-house, about 20 by 20. My pulpit is the back of a chair; and in this room I have an audience commonly of about one hundred. The house is literally packed full of bodies of men, women, and children; and my place to stand is, where I can find it, by turns in every corner of the house, and facing every point of the compass. I am happy to state further, in regard to this people, that they manifest great interest in coming to meeting on the Sabbath. Many females walk from one to three miles, and a number frequently carry babes half that distance.

From Rev. C. Zipp, Delavan, Walworth Co.

It gives me pleasure to report to you, that I have had, a few weeks past, a precious time in my field of labor at Sharon, Walworth Co. I had preached eight days in succession every evening, and though the roads were almost impracticable, the school-houses in which I had to preach, were filled with hearers. The seed of divine truth has been sown richly, and by God's quickening spirit five persons have been converted.

Calvin said, in some of his writings, that the first signum by which those who are born again are known is, "Respiration de Vie," (la Priere;) so it proved with these, as soon as they saw, and were quickened, they began to pray for themselves and for others.

On Sabbath, the second day of May, I had the pleasure to see an old man return to his Saviour, and I hope his son is also giving his heart to God. The old man was formerly a great opposer to experimental religion. The first time he heard me preach, he said: "This, too, is one of those who go about to make fools, but never shall he make one of me." "I know," continued he, "my religion, and never shall I abandon it." God's ways are not ours, and very often they lead through deep waters, unseen to us. The son of this man was taken very sick; and on the last Sabbath, after the second service in the afternoon, I went to see him, and had a long conversation with him about what man is by nature, what he deserves, what God has done for men in Christ Jesus, and about his willingness to bestow his grace, the forgiveness of sins, and the bestowment of eternal life on those who return to him like the prodigal son. To my joy I saw, that his heart was longing after the Saviour.

In the evening we had a prayer-meeting in the house adjoining his. The old man came in. I always read a chapter, followed with some practical remarks, and then pray. He was touched; God was merciful to him; he went home, but could not rest through the night. In the morning I went again to see his son, and when I was ready to pray with his son, he said: "Pray for me also; I, too, am a sick man; I am a criminal, a bad man, in me is nothing good." At this evidence of the working of the Spirit of God, I felt comforted; and my soul in me rejoiced.

We have three prayer-meetings in the settlement; the people live some distance one from the other.

From Rev. O. S. Powell, Shopiere, Rock Co.

Additions—Religious interest.

At our last communion we received ten by profession and five by letter; there are six or seven other adults, most of them heads of families, that I trust will publicly profess their faith in Christ ere long. We have a class of children, in an interesting state of mind; two of fifteen have made a profession of religion, and several others probably will do so during the summer and fall.

The next week after our meetings closed here, I went to assist Brother Curtis at Emerald Grove; and in consequence of his feeble health and the interesting state of the work, I labored there the greater part of the time, except Sabbaths, for five or six weeks. Here the Lord of the Harvest continued to increase harvest labors on our hands.

"No-Soulism."

What is in this region called Hall-ism, in allusion to the name of the man who first propagated the doctrine, and No-soul-ism, in allusion to the doctrine itself, commenced at this place. Its advocates believe in the literal destruction of the wicked—their absolute annihilation. By the Universalist argument, they set aside the everlasting punishment of the wicked; and so they gain the sympathies of that class of people of all shades of opinion. The excitement produced by the discussion of a doctrine that professes to be a new discovery, has left a corrupting influence on the minds of many; and even where it did not produce conviction of its truth on the mind, it has tended to produce a disbelief of Gospel truth. The doctrine alluded to is only a sprig of Millerism, which God himself has long since exploded in all its original features. This phase of it is already passing away in this region, very much like our prairie fires which go out of themselves, after burning the combustibles that lie on the surface, and perhaps singeing and scorching and blackening the more permanent objects they come in contact with. The above described doctrine has made some ravages in this church. I have often thought no doctrine is too absurd to be received by some professedly good men; but in this case it is probably true that "they went out from us because they were not of us." Such doctrines constitute the sieve wherewith Satan desires to sift the people of God as wheat; but if through Christ's intercessions, their faith fail not, they remain firm; but if their faith fail, they indicate it by apostacy.

Stumbling Blocks.

We have frequent occasion to report the lamentable hindrances to the cause of religion in the West, arising from the defection of professors who dishonor the Christian name. The reference in the following cases is not to persons connected with the Presbyterian or Congregational churches; but the disastrous effect is equally against these and all other denominations of the people of God.

There is unusual interest among the ———, and even some reported conversions. The work, however, has not as yet spread among the inhabitants of the town. There is so much of glaring inconsistency in the conduct of many in this communion, so much backsliding, that the mouths of the gainsaying are filled with opposing arguments, and even sinners under conviction are loth to admit any interest in the subject of their soul's well being. This is a most unhappy state of things, not peculiar, indeed, to this place; but Christians at the East cannot form an adequate conception of the injury done to the cause of religion by these, many of whom, when Eastern professors, were in "good and regular standing." If the course of thousands and tens of thousands of church members from the older States, who have helped to swell the tide of emigration Westward, could be traced out, it would be found in a multitude—I sometimes think in a majority—of cases, a most devious and crooked course. Some bring with them the form of godliness, but the power is lacking. Multitudes in a short time lose both form and substance, and become an open reproach to the cause which they have deserted, and the Master whom they once professed to love.

These examples of dereliction—these backsliders—are at present the most formidable of all the obstacles which the missionary meets with in these new settlements. To use a Western illustration, they are so much drift wood obstructing the navigation of the River of Salvation; they are bars and quicksands upon which the Gospel vessel grounds, to steer clear of which, and to lift the keel above which, needs a skillful and watchful helmsman, and the outpouring of divine grace, until the stream of life swell like Jordan in its overflowing.

Look Upward.

Whenever I steadily contemplate the moral stupidity, the impiety, the vice and the unblushing infidelity, which prevail around me, the feeling arises, in spite of my firm conviction to the contrary, that here is a thing "too hard for the Lord." I have learned that it is necessary for me to look less about me, and more above me. Some in our church are beginning to understand this. I hope we shall come soon to be so habituated to the upward look—to the vision of faith, which keeps the power and the promise of God always clearly in view—that when we pray for the reviving of religion here, we shall not be afraid to expect the blessing we ask for.

ILLINOIS.Testimony for the Society from Southern Illinois.

Although I have not been directly dependent on your Society for my support, during my present year in commission, yet words would fail to express the gratitude I feel, for the past favors, comforts and support, so cheerfully rendered to myself and family, through the agency of your Society. While it is a fact that I have not held as frequent intercourse with your Society by report as formerly, I feel like clinging to it with growing zeal. This feeling is not engendered because of the loaves and fishes, but because I believe the Home Missionary Society, in the hand of God, is now, and is to be, one of the great, if not the greatest instrumentality of saving the Great West. I think it is beginning to be felt generally, and in many places acknowledged, that wherever the missionaries of the A. H. M. S. are located, public opinion is being formed in the right direction. It is true, in many places the signs of the times are dark, and there is much rubbish, moral and intellectual, yet to be removed; however, the truth is beginning to shine into the dark places, and obstacles that were heretofore apparently insurmountable, are giving way.

With regard to this region, the facts respecting its past and present condition were more forcibly detailed in Presbytery last fall by an elder in one of our young missionary churches, than I could present them, were I to undertake it. He stated that previous to the Home Missionaries coming amongst them, they had no preaching that deserved the name. Every man was living and doing what seemed right in his own eyes. They were fishing, gunning, swearing, fighting, drinking, and horseracing on the Sabbath. The largest collections were always found around a whiskey barrel. But now, said he, this is all done away, or nearly so. The people in the community generally love to go to meeting. They behave themselves orderly; sit and hear the words of salvation, and are benefited. Men respect each other's rights, &c., &c.

The greatest opposition I have had to contend with in my operations in this place, has been from professed ministers and members of other denominations. They misrepresent the objects and motives of the A. H. M. S. and their missionaries.

Keeping the Equilibrium.

I feel a deep interest in the spiritual welfare of this church; but to mortal ken her future prospects are not the most flattering. Few in number, and without a warm, glowing, Christlike sympathy with each other, I know not how they can stand in a world like this. All our hope is in the rebaptizing influences of the Holy Spirit. Nothing else can save us. The churches have looked for accessions to their numbers and strength from foreign immigration. But they have been disappointed in this, and mainly, I believe, in consequence of the apathetic and uninviting state of the churches.

With all the difficulties we meet with in this community, in consequence of its peculiarities to which I have referred in former reports, I am satisfied that nothing now prevents effectually the enlargement and prosperity of this church so much as a want of true love to God and love to one another. But, taking the whole bundle of our discouragements under one arm, and the blessed Book of Promise under the other, we have as yet maintained our equilibrium.

Brethren, pray for us, that salvation may yet come out of Zion.

End of the First Year's Labor.

This is my first year of missionary and ministerial labor. I review it with mingled emotions of sadness and pleasure,—sadness, that I have been no more faithful and earnest in my efforts; and pleasure in the hope that my labors, feeble as they have been, have not been in vain in the Lord.

Although I have now and then had a touch of the "chills and fever," I have not failed to fill every appointment, either in person or by proxy. I have been happy in having a pleasant place to commence my labors as a minister. The churches are perfectly harmonious in feeling and action. There is enough of the New England element in the church to give direction and efficiency to every effort, and regularity and permanency to the institutions of the Gospel. The people have done largely, for their pecuniary ability, toward the support of preaching and in other benevolent works. I have sympathy and aid in my labor. The church is not working against me. We have now thirty-two members only, and of these there are five of the brethren, who are capable of conducting a prayer meeting and talking to edification.

I have, as I think, enjoyed to an unusual degree the confidence and affection of the people; and this, not because I "prophecy smooth things" to them; for I have endeavored to preach the whole Gospel, kindly and yet pointedly.

We have had nothing which could be called a revival of religion, yet we rejoice that three young men, children of the church, have professed religion, and give good evidence of a change of heart. The congregation increases, and a growing interest is manifested in the truth. Many of the church members seem to have grown in piety decidedly.

Yet there are discouragements. The fact that the cars are running through the place has given an impetus to business and increased the value of property so much, that a spirit of worldliness has crept in, and shows itself plainly in some individuals. There is also an undercurrent of error around us. There are atheists near us, who seek opportunities to spit out their venom against religion and its professors. They are so openly profane, that the mass of the community are not influenced by them, and the families of the church are not at all affected; yet their scoffs operate on a few; and those who are externally decent do influence in some degree other young men.

On the whole, I think there is reason to be encouraged. The people employ me again, and it is intended that I shall remain permanently.

From Rev. Joseph B. Wilson, Elbridge, Edgar Co.

It is now nearly four years since I commenced my labors here in the ministry. Of course, the novelty in my methods of presenting divine truth has worn off. And whilst there have not been the last year such immediate results to my labors as have some times seemed to mark them, I still thank God and take courage.

Wishing to avail myself of every opening for the preaching of the Gospel, I am increasing the number of points, in this vicinity, where I shall endeavor to maintain regular or irregular preaching.

There is good attendance on the means of grace; seldom do I hold forth the word of life, at this center of my labors and my hopes, to a thin congregation. At other points, the attendance is more variable, owing doubtless to the want of settled habits. Our Sabbath school, having been discontinued through the winter, is now in operation again. It has heretofore done great good among the children and youth of this neighborhood, and it still may, under the blessing of God, be a fountain of sweet influences to the minds and hearts of the young.

My church and people here are in harmony with each other, and with all evangelical denominations of Christians. There is a growing desire to possess more of a self-denying spirit; I think there is a greater readiness to give of their substance to the great objects of beneficence. I hope that by frequently laying the scriptural rule before them, in this matter, and presenting the work to be done, the grace of charity may have a much richer development in the hearts of the members of this church, than has been the case.

From the Rev. E. B. Olmsted, Caledonia, Pulaski Co.

An important field in Preparation.

This and Alexander county lie on the point made by the confluence of the Ohio with the Mississippi river, and is a portion of the West abounding with a restless population, and has been the scene of much wickedness. But little evangelical labor has ever been bestowed on that region.

In looking back, I can see, if not what I would wish, at least enough to cheer my heart and strengthen my hands in the arduous though delightful work of the ministry. I have expended most labor at Caledonia, because I thought the prospects were better than at Cairo.

I have lectured all winter on the subject of temperance, most of the time once a week. No lecture had ever been delivered on the subject in the place before. It was wholly given up to drunkenness. Between thirty and forty have signed the pledge, and some who deal in liquor are, I am told, determined to quit the business.

On next Sabbath we expect to organize a Sabbath school at Caledonia. I hope also to organize one at Cairo; and have applied to the Mass. Sunday School Society for libraries. There is not a school in this county, nor in Alexander, in which Cairo is situated. It is painful to see the Sabbath desecration, by both parents and children. For the former it is a day of social visitation, for the latter of sport. Of course, there are several who respect the day, but the proportion is painfully small.

A few Sabbaths ago, a man in a state of intoxication was thrown from his horse and was instantly killed; the man who "put the bottle to his neighbor's lips and made him drunken," refused to aid in carrying him to his house, that he might be prepared for his burial, but steadily refused to look at him. "Put him in a box and I will help bury him," said the wretched man. How true it is, "that conscience makes cowards of us all." While many in this region die as this poor man died; others dying more calmly scarcely give better evidence of acceptance with God. A few days ago an aged man, a member of a Protestant church, assured his friends he was ready to die, "for," said he, "I have taken the sacrament sixteen times." Another died a few weeks ago, assuring his physician, who warned him faithfully, that "he could see no reason why he ought to be afraid of death; that he was honest in all his dealings, and, save that he was in debt some, (which he wished was paid,) there was nothing for him to regret." These three cases represent three numerous classes in our community. Those who in spite of knowledge are victims of sensual appetites. Those whose religious training leads them to trust undoubtingly to the ordinances of the Church; and those who rarely see the inside of a church or hear a sermon, and trust for salvation to their native goodness. Alas! how few know any thing of the pure and undefiled religion of our Saviour! Dear brethren, this is a wide, a desolate, yet an exceedingly interesting field. The tide of emigration is setting in along the line of the central railroad.

Junction of the Ohio and Mississippi.

The termination is fixed at Cairo. The city company and the railroad company are acting in concert, in the extension of the present levee, and its elevation above all possible floods. The railroad company are to add 80 feet to the width of the levee, which will be a street, for which they are to have the privilege of laying down the rails into the point. Thus the cars laden with the produce of the rich prairies of the North will run into the point down the Ohio levee, discharge their freight, and hasten up the Mississippi levee with the products of the South. It is said the Mobile Railroad will reach the Mississippi a few miles below Cairo. Can any one be extravagant in his estimate of the amount of business that must concentrate on that spot? There will be men there and these will have immortal interests. It is a wise foresight in us to get in a little ahead of the population. I preach in the dining-room of the Cairo Hotel every other Sabbath. As yet there is no prospect of organizing a church in Cairo.

From Rev. D. Gore, Wethersfield, Henry Co.

Helpers Departed.

• In the past quarter, two of the members of this church have been called to their rest. They have entered upon their reward, having left the church militant for the church triumphant. One had been for about fifteen years in this place, as a private member of the church, though formerly a minister of the Gospel, and a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. to the Sandwich Islands. He was Rev. Joseph Goodrich; born in Wethersfield, Conn., in 1794; graduated at Yale College in 1821, and ordained at Kailua, in 1826, where he spent fourteen years in the missionary work. He lived an exemplary life, and without doubt was prepared for death. His disease being paralysis, he was unable to speak of his hopes in a dying hour. He was a pillar in this church, and a friend to every good work.

The other one, who has departed this life, was a sister of devoted piety, a wife and a mother, whose prominent traits were meekness, charity, faith and spirituality. She was ready and waiting the call of him whom she served.

Several have been added to this branch of Zion, both by profession and by letter, so that there has been on the whole an increase in our members. The external and local circumstances around us have been favorable for the past few years to the growth of this church. Those circumstances are still favorable; and future accessions may be expected to our ranks from immigration.

In the three months now closed, I have been able to labor without any interruption; and I think divine truth is having a good effect on this people. It is to be hoped that much good seed is being sown, which will yet bring forth fruit in an abundant harvest. The presence of the Holy Spirit is at times felt to be among us. Its more sensible manifestations are what we need. For such special operations of its power we are looking and praying.

*From Rev. C. A. Williams, South

A Seed Time.

My Sabbath labors are all expended at this place, but I have regular monthly appointments in three school-houses, distant from three to five miles; and last week held meetings, at the desire of some friends, in two other neighborhoods a little more remote. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth," is a principle applicable to missionary labor in a country like this. The dispersed population will not come to us for the Gospel, and we must be willing to carry it to them. In this portion of the West it is now a seed time. The door of every cabin, farm house, and country school room is open to the bearer of the Gospel; and throughout this entire county of about a thousand square miles, there is not, to my knowledge, a single organization among Protestants to maintain "another Gospel," save perhaps a little body of Christians.

But our grief is that this is a sort of frigid zone, an ocean of icebergs. The "world" makes our climate, and the churches and scattered Christians are chilled by the contact. Here is mind and energy, but they are directed to earthly things. There are many more emigrants of necessity, of adventure, and of cupidity, than of religion, in this wide West. Few come, I fear, in the spirit of the Pilgrims, with religion as the leading object of their emigration; and hence one great source of weakness and spiritual degeneracy.

Prosperity and Hope.

But in my own field we are permitted to record some progress. The last quarter has added three to the number of our church, one of them from a neighboring church, and two from Pennsylvania. The Society paid, last year, half of their remaining debt; and the other hundred dollars, due in a few weeks, has been in part provided for, and will probably be met. Another year, I trust, the church will be able to do more towards the support of their minister. My home is among a scattered agricultural people. Unless God should specially pour out his Spirit, the growth of the church may be more gradual than in some more densely populated districts. But emigrants are coming among us, and some of our youth have been converted to God. Looking back a year, and remembering that during that time sixteen have been added to our church—three fifths more than its original number—and going back two years further to the time when I came here and preached in a miserable school house, and sometimes to a mere handful of people, while my knees would at times almost smite together from the cold—I cannot but feel that, in view of the contrast which the present exhibits, we have occasion to thank God and be encouraged.

Good Devised and Begun.

You will be interested to know that our County Tract Society have now a Depository in Ottawa, that the colporteur and Bible agent have been abroad, and that our County Bible Society, after supplying its own wants, and making some appropriations for destitutions outside of the county, voted at its last meeting to pay over $500 to the A. B. Society.

INDIANA.

From Rev. John M. Bishop, Missionary in Southern Indiana.

Revival.

In Lawrence county we have had a precious quickening, at a neighborhood some seven miles from Bedford, where I have had a monthly appointment during the fall and winter. A few of the members reside there. On the 5th Sabbath of February we commenced a protracted meeting and continued it over four Sabbaths, meeting almost every night. As the result of the effort, fifteen united with us, the membership were revived, and a favorable opening made. A little village is springing up there, at the present terminus of the Albany and Michigan Railroad. It is emphatically a missionary work. I expect to organize a Sabbath school there, and probably shall succeed in building a house of worship, either as a church, or in connection with the school district.

Under the labors of Mr. B., measures are in progress to secure houses of worship also in Jackson and Dubois counties.

From Rev. W. H. Rogers, Noblesville, Hamilton Co.

Grateful appreciation of Missionary aid.

My family and the churches here would unite in thanks to your Society for the commission lately received by myself as your missionary. Were it not for that assistance, I could not remain in this field another month; unless the Lord should raise up help for us that we know not of. May he richly bless the donors of the A. H. M. Society, in their labors to sustain the feeble churches of our land! Thus encouraged, we hope to increase in faith and good works, and to be more prayerful and self-denying.

Our congregations this spring are already increasing. The Sabbath school has been much larger than usual through the whole winter, and more interest manifested in reading the books, and in studying the Scriptures. That the seed thus sown will soon bring forth fruit, is both our prayer and our expectation.

Teachers prized.

We have procured from the Society of National Education two female teachers. Their school opened in the county Seminary building (the first school taught in it) last fall. Their school consists of males and females. The first day they had seventy-one scholars. The number soon increased to over a hundred. Mrs. R., my wife, assisted them most of the first quarter, though her strength was scarcely sufficient for the labor.

Their second quarter was a full school for themselves without assistance. They have been remarkably successful in interesting both parents and children in the cause of education. I know of no objection offered against them whatever. They are well qualified, not only as to their knowledge of the branches of learning necessary, especially in a female education, but also as to their tact for governing; and above all, as to their piety. They well deserve the respect and gratitude of this whole community for their persevering efforts to educate and enlighten the young.

It is not inappropriate to say, that the procuring of these teachers, commencing and getting under way this school, has been the result of the efforts of the missionary, with the assistance of one or two others. In view of this, and some other enterprises in which this little church has taken the most active part, a wealthy and business man of the place, not a member of any church, remarked to a Christian, an intelligent business man, that "this small church was doing more for the place in the cause of education and other things than both the other churches, each of which is four times as large in numbers."

Our Sabbath school in the country church was commenced again during the month of March, under more favorable auspices than ever before. In some respects we feel encouraged in our labors in this field. The greatest want is a baptism of the Holy Ghost, to bring into activity all our energies for the salvation of men.

MICHIGAN.

Stumbling Blocks.

There are here, as in all our western towns and villages, many not only of our own denomination but of others, who were previous to their coming professors of religion. Some have relapsed wholly and are identified with the world. They never frequent the sanctuary, and it is almost impossible to bring the truth to bear upon their consciences. Others, knowing that there was no church in successful operation in the place brought no letters, and still retain a nominal connection with the bodies to which they first attached themselves. A few possess certificates dated back one, two or three years.

Gaining ground.

The Tract distribution, which circumstances compelled us for a short season to suspend, has been renewed. The half dozen ladies, who have taken this work in hand, prosecute it with much regularity. Little do they know how their punctuality in this matter encourages their pastor. Already this distribution has enabled me to place the word of God in families where the Bible was unknown and unread.

The prayer meetings have been continued without interruption. The contributions at the monthly missionary concert which has been established since my last report, have been more liberal than I had reason to expect. Meeting the children every four weeks, together with the circulation among them of about forty copies of the "Child's Paper," has had a tendency to increase the number of scholars, as well as to infuse some degree of interest into their exercises.

Every day's observation forces upon my mind the immense importance of keeping the word of God constantly preached in this field. The place, for so many years utterly at a stand-still, has received an impulse that will not soon be expended. The quantity of goods imported during the last year was treble that of any previous year, and great preparations are making for a busy season. Old warehouses are being repaired, new docks are being built; plank road projects so long talked about, have been undertaken. New boats will probably be put on the line of travel. Accessions also are gradually being made to the German population—indeed a very large proportion of the inhabitants of our county are emigrants from Germany.

From Rev. D. L. Eaton, Farmers' Creek and Campbell's Corners.

Awakening.

The past year has been one of marked interest to the missionary on this field. While Farmers' Creek Church has suffered a parching spiritual drought, the other church has enjoyed a refreshing revival, and increased—and I trust, permanent—activity. To the former there has been the regular ministration of the Gospel. The truth has been dispensed, the attendance on Sabbath has been good, and the prospect of a harvest in the future is encouraging, though for the present we find occasion to lament. To the church at Campbell's Corners there has been the same regular ministration of the same truth; the congregation on the Sabbath has been unusually large, and the prayer meeting well attended; the result, a revival, an ingathering of souls, the church built up, the present prosperous, and the future hopeful. The cause of temperance is onward in my field. But little ardent spirit is sold, and less is drunk. Success seems certain.

The subject of Home Missions has a strong hold on the hearts of this people. If the child can love the parent that bare him, the man his kind benefactor to whom he owes the preservation of his life, then have these churches occasion for a strong and abiding affection for your Society. Without you, they would not attempt to support the Gospel; and without the Gospel they would go to ruin. This is true of many Western churches. Your Society, by the blessing of God, is the hope of the West. The eyes of thousands are turned towards you. The principles of your Society endure investigation; the more you are known, the better you are loved.

Infidel Efforts Unsuccessful.

Last week was a week of continued infidel influence. The Saturday evening previous, and Monday and Tuesday evenings of last week, a lecturer on Spiritual Rappings tried his influence; his lectures being decidedly infidel. The three succeeding days, an agent for an infidel club in Boston, with their publications, was here, by day continually hawking his books about through the streets and in taverns, and lecturing at night. He says he was a Methodist preacher for seventeen years; now he is an atheist. A man of our county, formerly a resident of this place, and a county officer, and once our representative to the Legislature, was with him, and using all his influence (which, fortunately, is not much at present) to induce the people to attend; and I can truly say, I have been not a little encouraged by the result. But very few would even notice him enough to hear him. I have heard of but one man's receiving any of his books, and that as boot between horses. Last Sabbath, having a full audience, I contrasted the condition of nations without the Bible, with that of Christian nations, and asked my people to judge for themselves whether a religion exerting every where such an influence was an evil to our world—a delusion, or the Word of God a mere fable. In the evening, a Methodist missionary among the Indians preached here to a very full congregation. He ably described the wretchedness of these Indians, and contrasted their condition, mentally, physically, and morally, with that of the whites; and then assured the congregation that our Christianity was what had caused the difference. They were heathen; we blessed with the Bible. The infidel has now gone; and I believe he succeeded in doing us but little hurt. A most manifest and striking change in public sentiment has taken place during the time I have been here with regard to the value of the Christian religion; and this encourages me to hope the time will yet come when the spiritual seed here sown will be seen springing up and bearing fruit to the glory of God. Be not discouraged, brethren, in aiding us. In due time we shall reap.

KENTUCKY.

From Rev. D. Smith, Missionary to the Germans in Louisville.

I have now labored three months, among the teeming thousands of Germans here, who are either entirely destitute of religious training, or, which is still worse, fed upon the "husks," by rationalistic ministers. There is perhaps no city in the Union which presents a larger field for evangelical missionary operations, and which has stronger claims than this.

There are about nine thousand Protestant Germans, with an equal number of Catholics in this city. Many of the latter are accessible by the truth. I am operating among these Germans in view of collecting together and building up an Evangelical Lutheran Congregation if possible. My prospects are encouraging. Frequently after preaching, I am surrounded by these poor Germans, begging with tears, that I would only stay and continue to break the bread of life to their starving souls. They say they are disgusted with the character and conduct of their European preachers, and they want an American organization and an American minister in whom they can have confidence, and whose faithful instructions they will gladly receive. I have no doubt, from the present indications of Providence, that if a good, faithful, pious minister could be sustained here, for one year, or at most for two, that a permanent organization could be effected, which would in a great degree, if not entirely, be self-sustaining. In the midst of the difficulties and self-denials, incident to such an enterprise, I have still been encouraged by the tears and prayers of some, whose hearts the Lord has made tender by his holy truth and Spirit, whose cries still are, "stay among us and see what the Lord will do for us."

Revival.

Through the divine blessing I am enabled to forward my first quarterly report for the present year. It is a source of joy and gratitude to the great and beneficent Giver of every good and perfect gift, that he has preserved my life, and in a great measure restored my health.

With one exception, I have not been prevented by indisposition from attending to my regular appointments during the quarter that has just closed.

But that for which I have most reason to be joyful and thankful is, that God has so visibly, so graciously blessed my feeble efforts, in the hopeful conversion of precious immortal souls.

We held a meeting in Carrol Co., commencing on Saturday before the third Sabbath in November. On the first day of the meeting, but few persons attended. On Sabbath the church was crowded; after sermon, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to about a dozen members. Preaching was appointed at night; a large congregation assembled; there was much feeling manifested, and at the close of the sermon, the "anxious seat" was introduced. Five or six persons came forward, each one anxiously inquiring, "What must I do to be saved?" Preaching was again appointed on Monday morning. After preaching, the invitation was again given to all who were anxiously concerned, and desired an interest in our prayers, to come and occupy a designated seat, when the most solemn, impressive, and at the same time, delightful scene was exhibited, that I ever beheld. The whole congregation, (except two or three little boys and ten or twelve members of the church,) as if moved by one impulse, rose and moved forward, trembling, sobbing—some almost convulsed—from the old gray headed man of sixty, down to the youth of ten. It was evident God was with us; his Spirit was poured out in a most astonishing manner. The meeting continued till Tuesday night, and although it was late in the night, it was with considerable difficulty we could get the people to leave. Sixteen were added to the church, and about twenty five conversions—some were waiting for their wives, and others for their husbands, to unite with them. I expect to be there on next Sabbath, when it is thought six or eight others will attach themselves to the church.

The people there are very desirous that I should go and live among them.

From Rev. H. R. Smith, Leesburg, Loudoun Co.

The first quarter of my third year's labor, as a missionary of your Society, has passed rapidly away—though not, I trust, without leaving impressions for good upon portions of my field. We have been permitted to see God's glory displayed in the awakening and conversion of sinners. We have enjoyed no Pentecostal shower, but the Lord has been pleased to grant us a few mercy drops. During the month of December, I commenced a series of meetings at one of my preaching points in the country. Desiring to follow up the good impressions made by the occurrence of the sudden death of a favorite youth, and believing the Lord had by this afflictive dispensation prepared the way for successful effort, with the assistance of brothers P. and H., I hoped to be able to continue my meetings for at least six days. But owing to the extreme severity of the weather, we were compelled to close our meetings in the country on Friday morning, after continuing them four days. From Friday until Monday Bro. H. remained with me, and we had an interesting meeting in town. As the result of these meetings we are permitted to rejoice over souls converted; as we trust, and made heirs of eternal life. At our last communion, eight united with us—seven of them by profession of faith in Christ. It was truly an interesting sight to us, to see no less than six young converts standing to receive the ordinance of baptism. This to us was a very great accession of strength. One of the young ladies (of whom there were three) had but a few weeks before assumed her position as a teacher in our Sabbath school, where she had previously been a scholar. In another case, the parents of a family were both baptized, and await a more favorable opportunity to present the youngest three of seven children for baptism. This family is a valuable accession to our little flock. One who joined us was almost the last one whom we would have expected to come into the fold of Christ. The Lord humbled his proud heart, and the once thoughtless youth is now an active, devoted Christian.

We feel that we have abundant cause for gratitude for what God has done for us; and our prayer and desire is for still greater blessings. There are others under deep conviction, and we hope some will yet find peace. Thus, the Lord is adding to our number, from time to time, of such (we hope) as shall finally be saved.

"Not unto us, O Lord! not unto us, but unto thy name, give glory for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake."

NEW YORK.

From Rev. H. Herrick, Ticonderoga, Essex Co.

Revival.

We have enjoyed a season of refreshing from on high. Meetings were held from the last week in November at the Lower Falls for about one month; and were kept up nearly every evening. Nearly all the preaching was done by the Boatman's preacher, stationed at Whitehall by the Am. Bethel Union, where he has been very useful. Our meetings were union meetings: yet they became more decidedly so when, on the 30th of December, the sermons were transferred to "the Street," and the three evangelical ministers, and those of their members residing at the Street agreed to cooperate and meet together for as long a time as the Spirit and providence of God seemed to open the way for us so to do. We continued our meetings, with scarcely any interruption, every evening of the month of January. The subject of religion was brought up before the community with greater distinctness and power than for several years past.

The people had a mind to work. We have had very little open or violent opposition from any quarter or at any time this winter. Sixteen are reckoned as the subjects of the Revival at "the Street"—making in all this winter 28 hopeful converts, including some backsliders who had given up hope, and were generally looked upon as giving no evidence of piety. The Methodist minister reckoned about 20 hopeful converts at the Street. Christians there have been greatly aroused and interested. The union of feeling among them has been remarkable. They have presented an unbroken front to the common enemy, and I hope will continue to do so.

Instead of the Sabbath school, we have held at the meeting house an Adult Bible Class.

Union Efforts to do Good—Revival.

For a few months past, I have been laying plans for multiplying my efforts in a portion of my field, as soon as circumstances would permit. Some seven or eight weeks since I added $20 worth of the bound volumes of the American Tract Society to some six or eight dollars' worth which I had previously on hand, and gave notice on the Sabbath that I purposed to visit through the community to supply the families with religious books at the Tract Society's prices, and to hold meetings at the church in the evenings. I sent word to the Methodist minister, informing him of my intention, and inviting his coöperation; to which he responded. I invited the Dutch Reformed minister, some of whose families were in the community, to visit with me and assist in the meetings; which invitation was also accepted. We all labored together with a very gratifying degree of harmony, for about three weeks, holding meetings every evening, except on Saturday evenings, with very gratifying results. Over sixty persons were led to a public manifestation of unusual interest, on the subject of religion, and about 50 were hopefully converted. Quite a number of families now meet daily at the family altar, in which, previously, prayer was rarely or never heard, except at the burial of some deceased member. Some serious minded persons came seven miles to attend the meeting. One man who came that distance with his wife, was hopefully converted.

Family visitation was manifestly blessed in this season of refreshing; and I disposed of some $20 worth of the Tract Society's publications in the time. At every house where I offered the books for sale, more or less were purchased.

The interest from this Union meeting extended into the congregation of the Dutch church, where I am assisting the pastor in evening meetings with pleasing indications. Quite a number are already rejoicing in hope.

Hopeful indications are also manifest at another point where I have been preaching for some time past, once in two weeks, on Sabbath afternoon. A prayer meeting has been recently commenced there, under the care of one of our elders.

From Rev. C. Young, Baiting Hollow, L.I.

Results of a Revival.

I think we may safely hope that your liberality has not been entirely lost or altogether unappreciated. If our progress has not equaled the amount of means employed, they have at least surpassed our expectations. Since the date of my last report, we have received two more additions to the church, making in all twenty two by profession of faith, and one by letter, with the expectation of some more at our next meeting.

Our Sabbath school has commenced with very flattering prospects. The teachers now are all pious. They have appointed me superintendent. I meet a Bible class on Sabbath afternoon. Our scholars are all supplied with the Westminster Shorter Catechism, Testament, and Hymn-Book. We shall number about 50. We have now two weekly prayer meetings. The converts thus far promise fair. I think that the revival has brought into the church some young men and heads of families that will be a great additional strength to the church. We have, however, to mourn over the return of some to the world, of whom we once cherished the hope that they were "not far from the kingdom."

The present state of religious interest and the accessions to the church, were brought about with only the stated means of grace. No extra efforts, no foreign influence, were introduced, but persevering, personal efforts. To God be all the glory!

From a Report.

Baptism of a Corpse.

By a note from a person unknown to me, I was summoned to the bed side of a dying woman. She was young, had evidently been beautiful; but now, leaning on the bosom of her agonized husband, she was insensible to all around her, and fast sinking in the arms of death. Her mother, sister and other friends were loud in their lamentations; at the same time accusing themselves and each other of unkindness to their dying friend. She had professed to be converted, and in her last sickness had repeatedly requested that a minister or some christian friend might be sent for to pray and converse with her. But this her gay and thoughtless friends had neglected until it was too late. With her, however, the scene was now closed. Her spirit had just departed, and the body was now laid in the attitude of its last repose, when a Roman priest, attracted by the lamentations of the family, entered the apartment. Walking hastily up to the bed on which the lifeless body was lying, he demanded, "Has she been baptized? has she been baptized?" To this the mother of the deceased gave a negative answer, when the priest again said, "Give me a bowl of water." At this the friends with one consent exclaimed "It is too late, she is dead! baptism now can do no good." Regardless, however, of their remonstrances, "the priest obtained his bowl of water, and in an unknown tongue, in the midst also of loud conversation, ac-accompanied by cries and many tears, he hurried through the ceremony of baptizing a corpse. Astonished and disgusted, I did not think it best to interfere, fully believing that such a baptism was just as valuable for the dead as for the living. I could not, however, but be struck with the singular consistency of baptizing a corpse in an unknown tongue.

From a City Missionary.

Labors Among the Germans.

I have been anxious to employ no small part of my time in visiting families, as the best means of bringing people to church, and I have visited, this quarter, 475 families, besides revisiting some. I made it my duty to visit generally every German family in a house or in a square, without regard to their denomination, partly because I find sometimes a better reception among Catholics, Jews, and Rationalists, than I expected; but chiefly to touch their souls with christian hints, and to form a true and comprehensive opinion of the spiritual condition of the German population. I have met in general a friendly reception in all families, and received from many the request to visit them again; and this is more than I expected, before I commenced. I can say that my experience on the ground has increased my courage; and I praise the Lord who has directed me to this field. There are many immortal souls here, who by our feeble instrumentality may be reclaimed from the ways of immorality and error, awakened from spiritual slumber, and so brought to the Lamb of God. In my visits I have found scenes of great poverty, which is the more distressing among German emigrants, who cannot speak the language of this land. The European revolutions have brought down many in Germany from easy to straightened circumstances. For their own and their children's welfare, they emigrate, but come here with empty hands. They are ready to work, but labor has been scarce, wages low, and rent and provisions high. If sickness visits such people, their condition is pitiful, indeed.

I generally make short visits (about 15 minutes long), but it often happens, and particularly with the Rationalists, that a longer conversation ensues.

Power of American Example

To promote the Cause of Civil and Religious Liberty.

[The duty of bringing the American people under the full influence of christian principle, was eloquently enforced, at the last Anniversary, by Rev. JOHN P. GULLIVER, in an argument drawn from the bearings of our national example on the people of other lands. We have the pleasure of presenting our readers with the following abridged exhibition of his remarks on that occasion.]

No questions have sunk deeper into the heart of our people than these—How ARE THE NATIONS TO BE MADE FREE? WHO IS TO FREE THEM? and especially, WHAT PART ARE WE TO TAKE IN THE STRUGGLE?

A few moments' discussion will perhaps convince us that these questions may receive a satisfactory answer, and that such an answer will in substance be this—Christianity alone can make the nations free. Christianity will effect this change mainly through the agency of this country. The power of this country in contributing to this result, will depend upon the purity of its christian character and principles.

Christianity alone can make the nations free. That is a great mistake, and a very foolish one, which many make who suppose that political institutions can be transferred from one people to another, as one might borrow and wear his neighbor's garment. Forms of government are the product of the opinions, habits, character and history of a nation. One people must have a despotism, and no other government will have any permanency or strength among them. Another must have an aristocracy. Another a republic. And you might transplant an orange grove from the tropics to the polar regions with as fair a prospect of succeeding in your experiment, as you would have in the attempt to make an elector of a Russian, or a serf of a New Englander. Such changes require deeper work than political revolutions can perform. This truth France has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the world, if not to her own, by a hundred visionary experiments. Especially should we notice that the government of a people must be molded by its religion. The religion makes the government, not the government the religion. No government can stand, which in its general spirit and principles does violence to the religious sentiment of a nation. On the other hand, the religion of a people, although it be superficial and superstitious, will impart permanence and strength to any government which fully coincides with it. China furnishes us a wonderful illustration of this truth. From a period scarcely more than one hundred years after the flood, down to the present hour, its political system has stood almost without a change. Revolutions have occurred, dynasties have risen and fallen, but the government is the same thing to-day, in all its essential characteristics, that it was three thousand years ago. What is the explanation of this extraordinary fact? Simply this—that the government is the precise fac simile of the religion. So Russia, which, although it undoubtedly contains within itself the seeds of its own destruction, may now be regarded as the most stable and the most thoroughly compacted power of Europe, owes nearly all its strength to the complete identification of its government with the religion of the people. These illustrations might be easily multiplied, and they would all concentrate upon one conclusion, viz., that governments must derive their stability from an intimate alliance with the religion of the people.

What, then, may not Christianity effect? What strength may it not bring to any government which coincides with it, which sympathizes with it, which grows out of it? I need not attempt to describe to you its power in the soul. I need not speak of the affections it awakens, of the purposes it forms, of the hopes it excites, of the control it exercises over the whole man. Remember what Christianity is. Universal love is its pervading characteristic. In love all its precepts are summed up; love is its badge of discipleship; love breathed and lived in the life of its founder, and when faith hath ceased and hope hath disappeared, love shall flourish in unfading beauty in the heaven it reveals of eternal and unmingled joy. Christianity knows no distinction among men except in knowledge and virtue. Christianity visits the cottage of the peasant and the palace of the king alike. Against all alike it brings the charge of deep guilt in the sight of God. To all alike it sends its messages of consolation. To all alike it offers an atoning Saviour and the renewing Spirit. In the presence of the Infinite Jehovah, in the prospect of a boundless eternity, it sinks into insignificance the petty distinctions of earth, and ranges upon a common level the heirs of a common immortality.

Christianity, then, will naturally develop a free and equal form of government. Nay, I hesitate not to go still farther, and to assert that it will necessarily produce a free government.

Who is this Christian man? The Christian is a soldier. He serves under the command of Immanuel. In all that affects that service, he knows no other leader, he recognizes no other authority, he obeys no other orders. It is not for him to inquire what difficulties or dangers are involved in the execution of his high commission. It is enough for him to know that he is commanded to succor the perishing, to relieve the distressed, to defend the honor of his Master and the laws of his kingdom. If toil and conflict or even death be involved in the issue, that is only what he has long anticipated and is fully prepared to meet. He is a formidable antagonist who asks no favor, fears no opposition, dreads no danger, to whom toil is a pastime, conflict a chosen employment, and death but the portal of triumph and honor! The Christian is the friend of God. He dwells fast by the throne of the Eternal! Who is to trample such a man in the dust? Who is to say to the favorite of Heaven, "Stoop, thou slave?" Ah! the men who pray are dangerous men to the ungodly kings of the earth! They may issue their decrees; they may utter their threats; they may ply promise and bribe; they may uncover the lion's den; they may open the jaws of the burning, fiery furnace, but there is a power within and above the men of prayer which bids defiance to royal rage, and brings them off conquerors, and more than conquerors, through Him who loves them!

Christianity—I repeat it—Christianity alone can make the nations free. “Where the Spirit of the Lord is, THERE IS LIBERTY!”

But, How is Christianity to effect this result? Through what agency, by what power, will its influence be brought to bear upon the oppressed nations? My answer is, AMERICA IS TO BE THE AGENT, and the purity of its christian character the power by which Christianity is to make the nations free. In advancing this proposition you will not understand me as presumptuously hazarding a prophecy in regard to that future which no human eye can penetrate. I speak only of the strong probabilities in the case; and yet they are probabilities so strong as to amount almost to a certainty.

Nor would I in a vainglorious spirit exclude the agency of other nations in working out this great result. Germany will do much. France, in her wild, impulsive, erratic way has done much and will do more. Hungary and Italy have borne themselves most wisely and heroically, and inspire the highest hopes for the future. England—God bless her!—has for long been the bulwark of freedom, and as she disentangles herself more and more from the remnants of her ancient feudal institutions, her voice and arm will become more and more mighty in the struggle.

Yet it is not without reason that the chief hopes of the friends of freedom are centered upon this country.

But I wish to present, prominently, another view of the subject.

What is now the great want of the world? What does the cause of civil and religious liberty chiefly demand? Mr. President, the world needs an example. The world, more than all things else, needs the example of a government which shall be the true product of Christianity, which shall be permeated by its spirit, controlled by its principles; which shall present to the nations the practical fulfillment of the law—“Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” Such an example, no matter how obscure or feeble the people who should give it, would develop a power against which despotism could not stand a day. I care not how many millions of the subservient, courageous, hardy sons of the North the Czar may summon at his bidding—I care not how many more millions Austria may array under the banners of despotism—I care not for the national armies of Prussia—nor for the mad antics of France—nor for the fulminations of His Holiness; let us only have the light and power of one such example, continued long enough to prove the experiment successful—and the battle is fought, the victory is won!

See what our own example has already done. Imperfect as it is—inconsistent as it is in many respects, it contributed more than any—more than all other causes, to produce the recent upheaving in Europe. It is doing, at this moment, more to change the political condition of man, than all the armies and navies, than all the diplomacy and king-craft of the world.

They talk, sir, of intervention—of remonstrating with the absolutists, of endeavoring to terrify them by the utterance of our opinion. What care they for our opinion or remonstrances so long as we do not deprive them of the power to do as they please?

They talk of armed intervention. Ah! well would it please the despots to see the energies now so successfully employed in creating knowledge and wealth, in subduing the forest and conquering the sea, in evolving all the elements of national greatness, to see those energies drawn from their legitimate channels into an exhausting war, carried on at a distance of three or four thousand miles. Well would it please them to counteract the mighty influence of this nation among the masses of their subjects, by exciting patriotism and national pride to resist America, by arraying their people in maddening contest with republicans, by teaching them to regard as enemies those whom they are beginning to consider their only friends. No! It is not the opinion or the arms of America which causes trembling at Petersburg, and Berlin, and Vienna. It is our example they fear. It is a moral contagion they strive to avert by their vexatious quarantines. It is the opinion of their own subjects, which is spreading itself like the extending of internal fires, and which ere long will burst with volcanic might beneath their thrones. This is the work which America is now doing in Europe; this is the sublime part she is now playing on the theater of affairs; this is her noble contribution to the cause of human freedom.

I repeat it, then, in no vain or boastful spirit, but in the deep conviction that I am giving utterance to the great truth of the times—the truth which should prominently occupy our thoughts and guide our actions—the battle of the world's freedom is to be fought on our own soil. The thorough conformation of our institutions and customs and laws to the spirit and principles of Christianity is the grand problem, the successful solution of which is to emancipate the nations.

Upon us their warm hopes shall be centered; for us their earnest prayers shall ascend; to us they will point every perplexed and storm-tossed navigator upon the rough ocean of public affairs. A pure and steady light shall blaze out from our rock-bound shore and our lofty mountains. “America!” shall be the watchword of liberty! It shall be spoken in the secret assembly of thoughtful and determined men who consult for their country's deliverance, and the sound shall rekindle light in their eye and courage in their heart! It shall be whispered from cottage to cottage amid the vales of Italy, over the plains of Austria, and along the steppes of benighted Russia; and the story of our freedom and our happiness shall open many a blinded eye, shall soften many a seared heart, shall liberate many an enslaved arm! It shall be spoken in the cabinet of the tyrant, and the word shall send paleness to his lips and faintness to his soul! It shall be spoken in the hour of desperate and bloody encounter; and the rising shout shall drown the din of conflict, while the rallying hosts of freedom shall roll back the tide of battle, and strike again and victoriously for liberty, for humanity, and for God! Never had a nation offered to it a destiny so sublime! Never had the friends of humanity such room and verge for the prosecution of their philanthropic enterprises. Never had the followers of Jesus such an opportunity to establish his kingdom. It is no distant, difficult enterprise, in which we are called to engage. The work is at our own door. We have not to fear the hostile principalities and powers of earth. Far beyond their reach, beneath the protection of freedom's flag, we can prosecute our enterprise in peace. We have not to expend our sympathy for struggling humanity in vain regrets that we can do nothing for its relief. We have the power to sap the foundations of every despotic throne, to break in pieces every foul ecclesiastical combination for the temporal and spiritual subjugation of men. We need not enter upon the hazardous experiment of war. Ours may be a peaceful and bloodless victory—the victory of a pure example, of a christian life, of an unsullied exemplification of a government permeated and controlled by the great christian law, “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.”

This is the high position now occupied by our Home Missionary enterprise. It is no longer merely a Home Missionary Society; it has been made by the grand events of the few past years a World's Missionary Society. The work which it is doing is, under God, a work for ALL RACES and for ALL TIME.

IOWA.

According to the Census of 1850, the population of Iowa was 192,214. The emigration during 1851, according to a statement made on the floor of Congress, was 60,000; and there is a probability that it will continue as great for some years to come. The soil is superior to that of the best river lands in New England; the ratio of mortality is but little more than half of what it is in Massachusetts; and, according to the late census, Wisconsin and Vermont are the only States that exceed it in healthfulness. Lead abounds in some parts of the State, and coal is found throughout half its extent. Its eastern and western borders are washed by two of the largest rivers in the Union, and the Des Moines, which intersects it, will soon afford slack-water navigation to the heart of the State. In the present state of public feeling in favor of facilities of transit, it is reasonable to expect that these three rivers will before many years be connected by railroads. The attention of emigrants is turned towards these circumstances, and by the year 1860 the population will undoubtedly be between half and three fourths of a million. Who shall preach to them the Great Salvation?

Tells and Consolations of a Pioneer.

Although the central point of my labors is in this village, still I preach out at nine other different places in the county. Here, I preach every two weeks two sermons; then go out to a third service in the country from five to eight miles. The alternate Sabbath is employed farther out east and west each way once a month, giving three sermons in each direction, and all in different places. One Sabbath I ride six miles and preach at 11 o'clock, then ride five miles and preach at 3 P. M., then ride three miles still beyond and preach at night. When I go in the other direction, my labors are harder still; as I go farther and the roads are worse. I went on last Saturday P. M. fifteen miles on horseback, facing a hard easterly storm. I passed through sloughs most intolerable—no bridges—and no getting around them. Once I was lost ere I got to my appointment at night, and had to pass through a slough some thirty rods wide—my horse sometimes sinking nearly half under—after which I found a cabin and was by the inmates conducted to my preaching place, in a little old log house, which looked dark and doleful. But I was cheered by a good sized congregation, and tried to present the truth faithfully. Then I was conducted a mile and a half, to the place where I rested for the night—what there was of it yet unspent. Sunday morning came, and after breakfast I rode some five miles and preached; then six miles and preached again; all to good and attentive congregations. Then, after riding several miles more, I was entertained for the night. On Monday morning I started for home with my horse well crippled and some shoes pulled off in the sloughs. I, too, had been lamed in one foot, but the horse was worse off than I; and so I walked, and we both limped our way home.

Thus I go the rounds week after week. Although my labors are great, still, I have the pleasure of feeling that good is being done. My meetings are all very well attended. The more I become acquainted in the county the more I see the need of much ministerial labor, and the more am I urged to go different ways to labor.

Our little church here is in a growing state. Every communion season since I came here has witnessed some additions. Our prayer meetings are well attended and interesting. Our Sabbath school is flourishing. The subject of temperance is receiving attention among us. Our people are engaged in building a meeting house. Although it is a great work, for us in our poverty, still we feel that the cause of Christ here demands it at our hands, and we are going forward with the work.

In view of all the circumstances, in view of all the former difficulties in this field, and what we now see, we thank God and take courage. We are still in our infancy, but united, and hope for better and better times.

Planting the Out-lots.

During the past three months, my labors have been about the same as during the preceding quarter—namely, one fourth of my time at this place, and dividing the other three fourths between five other places—one seven and one fourteen miles west; one three miles east, and one four and one twelve miles south. The attendance and the attention have been encouraging. One of these places is infested with deism: at this place I have always preached or held my meetings in the house of the leading deist of the region. My last meeting there, was somewhat peculiar in its character. Owing to rainy weather, there were only some four or five persons present besides the family. With these I should have held a regular meeting, had not Providence seemed to dictate otherwise. About the time for commencing the meeting, the man of the house and myself, while engaged in general conversation, struck a vein which led to a conversation on deism. The clash of views, the presentation of arguments and rebutting arguments, became interesting. The persons who came in becoming deeply interested, I did not think it best to break off the conversation. We continued it nearly an hour, or till it was time for me to leave for my other appointment. The effect of this conversation—I have reason to believe from what I have heard since—has been salutary. One or two of the persons present were from other places. Thus the account of it has spread through all the region.

Plea of the Hungry.

In the places west of me I have, though small yet, as large audiences as I can reasonably expect—the settlements are new and the people scattered. They are very solicitous to have meetings held among them. Mentioning to them during one of my visits that I did not know how long I could continue to labor with them, I was almost pained with their expressions of solicitude on the subject. They plead for the preaching of the Gospel as some of our eastern friends have not heard hungry souls plead, else there would not be the lack there is of men for this field.

Within the last few weeks I have been repeatedly urged to visit the county seat, seventeen miles distant. About two weeks ago I visited them during the week without having sent them notice. After my arrival I was requested to preach in the evening; I consented, and a few hours' notice brought together quite a respectable audience, which listened with eagerness to the truth. I left an appointment for last Sabbath, when I preached to them again. We occupied the court house, which was filled to overflowing. I should think near one hundred persons were present, although there was a Free Will Baptist meeting about three miles from ours. On my first visit I preached, they said, the first Congregational sermon ever preached in the place. The people urge me to spend half of my time with them, proposing to raise a liberal subscription if I will do so. There is no church organized in the place, and of the preaching they have had they express themselves as tired. From what I have seen I think they ought to have a good, thoroughgoing, judicious man stationed there. I gave them no encouragement further than to leave an appointment for four weeks from last Sabbath.

Thus, gentlemen and brethren, you see the calls for labor in this field are at least twice as great as I can supply. It pains me to see the destitution. Should it be thought best that I supply the county seat, I must leave at least four other places entirely destitute of Sabbath labors, and I can accomplish but little in the week during the busy season (summer) when we can get about most easily. About the time I entered your service you furnished me a fellow laborer, who took half my field off my hands. But during the six months that have elapsed since, the remaining part of my field has grown so that another helper is needed almost as much as he was.

Discouraging effect of Removals.

We are experiencing some of the evils of the unsettled state of society in portions of the West. My church at U. has been almost broken up by removals, about one half having left our bounds and gone to other states. These removals are not so much felt in the older states, where the churches are larger and well established. But in a new place like this, where the church is small and in an infantile state, we feel them most painfully.

This whole county is excited with the California emigration. Never have I seen such a rush. It is almost literally true that every grain of corn in our section is consumed by them; and what hundreds of families are to do for bread this summer, I know not.

I preach at various points through the county where there are no churches of our order, but where I have large, attentive and sometimes serious crowds to hear me. These appointments are usually during week days and evenings. Our Sunday school, at this place, is doing well; we have also recently organized two others, some miles from town, which are promising. Two years ago, when I came to this place, drinking, fighting, card playing and horse racing were frequent occurrences; but now, we have a valuable temperance organization, our groceries are almost starved out, and gambling has died away.

From Rev. D. B. Nichols, Warren, Lee Co.

Changes for the better.

In reviewing the past three years, I can hardly credit my own eyes. Great and important have been the changes that have been occurring here in this short interval of time. The West is proverbial for change. As many as three distinct classes of society occupy a new country before it is furnished with permanent settlers—except, perchance, a German buys a claim and occupies it. In that case, he becomes identified with the soil, and like the serf of Russia, he adheres to his soil for life. It is a rare thing to see a German sell out. But apart from this class, we generally see that the original claimant of western land yields to two subsequent classes of settlers, each exceeding the preceding class in intelligence, wealth and permanence. Such are the constant changes to which western society is exposed; such have been the changes that this mission field has been passing through for the last three years. Whole neighborhoods have given place to a German population. But these changes, however, have not been, I hope, altogether unfavorable to the progress of the Gospel in these parts.

When I first came, we had no church; the people had no regular preaching; the Sabbath was spent as a day of visiting; there were no Sabbath schools, and only occasionally a quarter's day school in the district school house.

But how great and glorious has been the change, by the blessed influences of the Holy Spirit! The people, by the help afforded them from your Benevolent Institution, are able to sustain the ordinances of God's house. Where there was no church, we now have one which numbers seventeen souls, with a prospect of speedy enlargement. We now have a Sabbath school which bids fair for prosperity. The Sabbath is honored; men are more inclined to visit the sanctuary to listen to the truth. We have a sanctuary for the worship of the living God; and, for the encouragement of the contributors to the cause of Home Missions, we would say, that for the last quarter we have a very encouraging increase in our attendance upon the public ministration of the word. I think that our congregation has doubled, if not trebled in number. We have a manifest indication, too, of the presence of the Spirit.

Oh that God would look upon us with mercy! We have had three accessions to our number this quarter; but what is this among the scores of impenitent who are hastening to ruin!

The Great Procession.

Much interest has been excited in gazing at the nine hundred wagons which have passed through here on their way to the land of gold and—I fear—to ruin. As we have looked on and beheld the old man and the matron, the husband and the wife, and little children, and some at the breast, not many days old—walking and driving through mud and water, rain and sunshine, cold and heat,—we could view them only as one vast funeral procession, following many of their friends to the silent mansions of the dead. And the thought which makes the christian heart more sad and mournful than any other is, that the greater part of this great company give little or no evidence of a preparedness to die. For they tarried not at the command of the Lord to keep his Sabbath; and they went forward without his orders.

And what can such a vast and almost unbroken army of rebels against the law and government of God expect, but fearful disaster, even before they come to the land which they so earnestly seek? If the dealings of God with the children of Israel in their wanderings and rebellion, be any rule by which to anticipate his dealings now, surely such rebellion on the part of gold hunters will not escape his severe chastisements, for "the way of transgressors is hard."

Rejoicing in the house of God.

I have just returned home from a communion in the Pleasantville church, on which occasion I was assisted by Rev. Charles Burnham. This meeting was one of great interest. Christians were stirred up to prayer and heart searching in an unusual manner; and we could say, "Behold how they love one another." Many of the unconverted were made to weep, in view of approaching eternity; while some errorists were brought to renounce their false systems.

But, dear brethren, what do you suppose were the feelings of my heart, when just beyond the little log hut in which I have preached for eighteen months, and in which the deacon lives, I saw our church edifice rearing its top high in the air? This house, that had been so long the subject of our prayers, and for which we had labored under such long protracted discouragements, here it is at last! Our prayers have been heard! God will give us a house in which we can worship; where it shall be said, "Lo, this man and that man was born there," within her sacred walls! Here the Gospel is to prepare man for heaven, yea, our own sons and daughters! These anticipations of good brought me to God in thanksgiving, and I seemed to feel myself on holy ground, because the temple of the Lord was there.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. C. W. Camp, Genesee, Waukesha Co.

A Visit of the Spirit.

At the date of my last report we were in the midst of a deeply interesting series of meetings. For four weeks, we held meetings on four week days in each week. In the morning, a company of inquirers and young Christians met at my house, for personal conversation. In the afternoon, I met with the church at the meeting house, and in the evening I preached to full assemblies. Rev. L. Clapp, of Wauwatosa, was present for one week, and though unable to preach, rendered much service by his counsels and prayers. Rev. E. J. Montague, of Summit, spent one day with us and preached. We had no other help from abroad, and I gratefully acknowledge the goodness of God in preserving my health during this time of unusual labor and care.

In reviewing the history of the revival which was enjoyed in connection with these meetings, I clearly see the Lord's hand in preparing the way for them. Our new meeting house was completed during the previous summer. Some friends at the East provided us with communion service and with lamps. When one of our deacons saw these he said, "the Lord has sent these for a protracted meeting." A Methodist quarterly meeting held in our house of worship, drew toward us more fully perhaps the sympathies of our Methodist brethren, who shared in this blessing, and were actively engaged in promoting the work, though the meetings were entirely under our direction. Moreover, I had just concluded a course of sermons on the last judgment, which I think prepared the way among unconverted persons.

The first obvious indications of unusual interest were at a prayer meeting. I had not been well that day, and when the evening came chilly and threatening a storm, I regretted the appointment. We were surprised to find a room full; and from that time the interest increased. Soon after this I find the following record in my journal—"Feb. 19. Largest prayer meeting ever yet held in this place. For the first time since I have been in this place was it carried on without dependence upon me, and the time not long enough for those who wished to take part." We had many such prayer meetings afterwards, and as one after another who had never been heard to pray took part in them, they were seasons of deep and joyful interest.

There was very little apparent excitement. Tears were not frequent, and sighs and other manifestations of feeling were hardly once heard. The depth of feeling was manifest only in the fixed gaze and almost painful stillness of the assemblies. Careless and hardened men who came would soon assume the same look of amazement and solemnity which seemed to testify—"Surely God is in this place, and we knew it not." The appearance of the congregation was most frequently that of men by whom the powers of the world to come were felt, and whose emotions were restrained by a sense of the presence of God.

Very little opposition was exhibited. Some unconverted men expressed their fears that Christians would become discouraged and the meetings cease before they would be converted—a sort of dismayed anticipation of the harvest past. There are many around us who hate vital religion; but God shut the mouths of these lions. There was nothing in the conduct of the meetings which they could call fanatical; they saw no ungoverned excitement, heard no inflammatory appeals, witnessed no uproar and confusion; only the solemnity of men calm and earnest; and this stopped their cavils and repressed their sneers.

We cannot report a great number of cases of conversion—about ten give evidence thus far of a permanent change, besides some in various stages of declension who have hopefully been restored, and some who have not as yet thrown off their seriousness, though they have not, I fear, submitted to Christ.

Those whom this revival will add to the church are mostly in the morning of life; but one man in middle life, the father of a family, is numbered among the converts. This revival is the first that has been enjoyed during my residence here, and I believe the first of any extent that has ever been enjoyed in this place. Some stout opposers seemed to think such a thing could not be in our quiet community, and I fear that Christians had been wont to qualify their desires by the thought—"If the Lord should make windows in heaven, might these things be." But God has rebuked all such unbelief.

Our prayer meetings are still interesting, and the worship of the Sabbath attended by large audiences. I see in these most clearly the results of this refreshing. Christians value prayer more highly, and the men of the world have a deeper sense of the reality of religion: and though, compared with the precious harvest of an eastern church, this seems a day of small things, yet it is to be regarded as a very important step towards the triumph of the Gospel.

From a Missionary Report.

Laboring without fruit but not without hope.

If God has truly called me to the work of the ministry, he sees fit to try my faith still further, by withholding from me the visible fruits of my labors. I do not suppose that I should complain of the dispensations of his grace. I have been encouraged by reading the 29th chapter of Jer. to labor with patience to build up the people of God in the faith, feed their souls with the truth, encourage them to prayer and doing good; that God's thoughts are thoughts of peace and not of evil, that when the set time to favor Zion shall come, if the tithes are all in the storehouse, they will have a blessing poured out till they shall not find room enough to receive it. It requires faith to walk through darkness, and more now, as the idea has so extensively prevailed that revivals depend upon the minister; and that the church is actually receding if not in a revival; and there is but little if any use of prayer, or the like, unless a protracted meeting is in view. Although I have encountered this idea in its different shades and forms, with some, I trust we have many who feel that our help cometh not from the hills—that in the Lord alone is salvation—and are diligently attending to the enthroning of God in their hearts. I wish I were assured that this was deeply felt in the hearts of all this church.

We are attended with some degree of outward prosperity. We have enlarged our house by putting in a gallery, which is filled with an interested and good choir. This is a great relief to me, for I have been obliged, for more than half of the time for two years past, to lead the singing on the Sabbath myself. Our house is usually as full as it can be with comfort. Parents have come to feel an increased interest in the Abrahamic covenant. Almost all our members are now believers and lovers of infant baptism. Good attention is paid to the word.

Collateral Benefits of an Active Ministry.

My labors have been as usual—preaching, visiting, and aiding in the cause of education and general improvement. We have nine school districts in the town, containing 850 children, who draw the public money. The clerks of these districts all expect me to furnish teachers for their schools; and I have had the privilege of employing eleven teachers for these schools the present season, most of whom are pious, pray in their schools, and, as to qualifications, are quite in advance of those employed in former years. Six of these teachers I obtained from Platteville Academy, two from Beloit Seminary, and two from Massachusetts, sent out by Gov. Slade. A good share of the children in these schools are marshaled under the banner of the cold water army, have monthly meetings for addresses on the subject of temperance, and singing under the direction of their teachers. They expect me to preside. They are exerting a happy influence in society, and especially at their respective homes.

From Rev. S. H. Ashmun, Waupun.

Hopes Brightening.

I have to report pleasing indications of prosperity, a steadily increasing interest in religious services, public and private. Four additional members united on confession of their faith at the last communion, all heads of as many families. More than as many more stand propounded.

Though the great burden of our labor has been, and is now, to secure a church edifice, yet the church has been greatly refreshed, and I trust souls converted. God has greatly blessed us in our efforts to honor Him, and our success surpasses our most ardent hopes. Our building is up and inclosed, very beautifully proportioned and substantially made. Before another quarterly report, we shall probably have dedicated and completed the building entire. And we are in strong hope of doing this without incurring debt. This will give us greatly the advantage over many in Wisconsin who are in these peculiar "hard times" struggling with a heavy debt.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. J. R. Dunn, Chesterfield and String Prairie, Macoupin Co.

Four Years Reviewed.

At our last communion at String Prairie we received nine into the church, making fourteen in the last year. Chesterfield is also growing in importance and population, and the neighboring settlements need stated preaching, which as I have been heretofore situated, they could but seldom have.

When I review my past labors, I have great occasion for thankfulness to the Great Head of the Church for his merciful dealings with us. But one member from each church has been removed from this earthly sphere of labor, in the last four years. Strength has been given me to fill nearly all of my regular appointments. The Spirit of the Lord has gently moved amongst us several times, calling, as we trust, some precious souls from death unto life. Perfect harmony and brotherly love reign in both these churches; and I know not that any root of bitterness or unfriendliness have at any time intercepted the kindest feelings between myself and any of the members of either of these churches. String Prairie church has more than doubled in numbers in four years; and this church has nearly doubled in two years. Such facts cause my heart to rejoice. But when I think of the precious souls that have attended my ministry, that are still unconverted, it makes my heart sad, and leads me to feel sensible of my own weakness and unfaithfulness. I think I can say, feelingly, that "It is not of him that will-eth nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." As I have been sorely pressed by accumulating duties, I have earnestly desired that the Lord of the harvest would send another laborer into this field, who might share the toil with me. We trust the Lord has sent us just the man we needed. Now the way seems clear for me to extend my labors in this vicinity. I can spend half my time near home to good advantage, where it will not be necessary for me to be absent from my family so much as has been necessary the last few years. Language is too tame to tell the anxious emotions that have made every heart string vibrate, as duty to my people has demanded my departure from home, while duty to my family, sick and careworn, and those tender sympathies so often felt by western missionaries, yet unexpressed, forbade such departure. But the struggle in such cases is brief, for invariably the less is overcome by the greater duty, and especially when the influence of the sick ones is thrown on the side of duty to the church, and they say "Go." But to labor for Christ is pleasant even in the midst of such trials. To feel that with the divine blessing we may lay the foundations for virtue and piety, intelligence and christian patriotism, is reward enough to lead every consecrated follower of Christ to count all but loss that this one glorious end may be secured.

From Rev. J. A. Hawley, Augusta, Hancock Co.

Religious Interest.

The last meeting of Association was a very pleasant meeting. Several of the churches had been visited during the past year, and about 300 hopeful conversions, in connection with the ministry of our churches, were reported; and a much greater number in places where revivals were enjoyed, in which our churches shared.

The past year has been one of great trial to me and to the people. Opposition has done its worst, and temporal misfortunes, in the failure of crops, has laid a heavy burden on the people. Still we hope that another year will bring material aid to strengthen the church and render it more independent.

From Rev. James Walker, Union Grove, Whiteside Co.

During the past three months, the Lord has not only spared me, but he has given me health and strength to publish the glad tidings of salvation in this destitute region. The field of which I have the oversight, has labor enough in it for two more men. But how can more be expected here, while other fields are white for the harvest, and not a single laborer to thrust in the sickle and gather it? No, I must toil here single handed, as God gives me ability, however great the care, the anxiety and the responsibility, and leave the result with him.

In reviewing my labors of the quarter just closed, what has been done can hardly be seen or told. The chief thing, and most of all to be desired, the quickening and converting influence of the Holy Spirit, has not been felt among us. Though we have to mourn this, yet there seems to have been progress made.

Since the return of warm weather there has been a better attendance on the services of the sanctuary, and a more diligent attention to the preaching of the word.

Three Sabbath schools have been opened at the different points where I preach regularly. They are all well conducted, well attended, and much interest seems to be taken in them. The Massachusetts Sabbath School Society has sent on forty copies of the "Well Spring," for gratuitous distribution among these schools. There has also been a donation of books sent on by the same Society. There is a Bible class connected with each school. In this place the Bible class is composed of ten or twelve young men, who seem much interested in the study of divine truth. Thus many of the children and youth of this region are brought under the direct influence of the Gospel.

We now hold our regular weekly prayer meeting and monthly concert, which were suspended during the inclemency of the winter. They are not numerously attended, but all who do attend feel that it is good to be there. They are precious little meetings; and I trust they will increase in numbers as well as in interest.

Strong current for Temperance.

Little is said on the subject of temperance at the present time, but there is a strong temperance current here, which will not soon subside. Alcohol can be obtained by going twenty miles for it. Some will get it and drink and give to their companions. But public sentiment here is right on this subject. These hidden works of darkness are viewed in their proper light, and are held in just abhorrence by the community in general.

The preparations for building a house of worship for the Congregational church in this place are progressing, but the progress is, and from the circumstances must be, slow. The reason is obvious. The community here is composed principally of farmers. Some are paying for their lands and are behind in their payments. Others must make improvements in order to receive a greater income. These are points to be attained in every new country. Also, for three years past the principal crop has failed, and the expectations of the people have been disappointed. With these difficulties to contend with, the work is still progressing, though but slowly.

Since my last report I have visited forty different families for the purpose of familiar conversation on the subject of religion. Some of these were habitual neglecters of the sanctuary, and live regardless of all the claims of religion. Thus far I have been received with kindness by such families, permitted to pray with them, and invited to call a second time. By this means some have been induced to attend public worship on the Sabbath, and many of their children are now in the Sabbath school.

I have also been called to preach the funeral sermon of a departed husband and father, some ten or twelve miles from here, and administer the consolations of the Gospel to the afflicted family. It was in a community where Universalism and irreligion prevail—where the people seldom have a Gospel sermon preached among them, except on such occasions, and seldom go where they can hear such. There was a good congregation at the funeral, who listened attentively while I explained the nature and urged the necessity of Gospel repentance. Such places in this western country are not a few. They must perish without the Gospel. It must be brought to them, even to their very doors. This can be done only by the occasional visit of the Home missionary, the colporteur, and in such like ways. This seems the only hope for communities thus situated. They will not sustain the Gospel nor will they put themselves to any trouble to go where it is preached.

I am not doing here half as much as I see ought to be done, and what is attempted to be done seems but half done. This I have always lamented and prayed over, and probably always shall till "that which is perfect is come, and that which is in part shall be done away."

From a Missionary in an interior field.

Division the parent of defeat.

Our people have been taking steps preparatory to the building of a meeting house; but an unhappy disagreement exists with regard to its location. It would require all their united exertions to build a small, temporary house, and make it comfortable for meetings. And their united prayers and corresponding efforts are indispensable to their prosperity, both temporal and spiritual. But alas! I fear both will be wanting, and this promising little church will languish under the withering influence of discord.

Links of the great Chain.

Dark and difficult as this field is, its prospective importance is great beyond estimation. The Railroad from Chicago to Mobile, one of the most important in the United States, is now definitely located to pass through Cumberland and Effingham counties, about three miles from this place. About three hundred miles are already under contract. And the Mississippi and Atlantic Railroad, designed to pass from Terre Haute, Ind., through Cumberland and Effingham counties, to St. Louis, is now considered almost equally certain. This will form the last link in a continuous chain of railroad from the eastern cities to St. Louis, whence a railroad is now in progress across the State of Missouri, towards California. With these improvements in progress and in prospect, (and very near at hand,) these counties, as well as all the others on these routes, will doubtless populate with greater rapidity than ever. And much is now needed to be done to "prepare the way of the Lord and make his paths straight" for the effectual raising of his standard against the enemy when he comes in more than ever like a flood.

From Rev. J. E. McMurray, Mulberry Grove, Bond Co.

At Vanburensburg the congregation is increasing in numbers, and wait upon the ministry of the word with more attention than was manifested during the winter. The old "Ironside" Baptists, as they are called, exert considerable influence in this neighborhood. These folks, you are doubtless aware, come out openly against missionary movements, colporteurs, tract and Sunday school Societies, and temperance organizations. Their influence is very deleterious. Still I am not altogether without hope. The members of the little church planted here are walking orderly, and appear to be men of zeal, of faith and of prayer.

My labors at Mt. Vernon have been pleasant. The house cannot hold the congregation, and the attention paid to preaching has been highly gratifying. The "few names" we have here, are doing well. Family religion is more attended to, and the Sabbath is much better observed than it was when your former missionary commenced his labors at this point. There is some little intemperance in the community, but for sobriety and good order, this community will compare very favorably with any country neighborhood in the bounds of our Presbytery.

At Mulberry Grove we are getting on slowly with our new church. This is occasioned by the fact that the greater portion of the community in which I live is made up of farmers. The spring has been backward, and farmers are very much behind with their planting operations. This will account for our slowness, for we have undertaken to build this house with our own hands. In due time, our Sabbath school was reöpened, and is doing well. We procured a new library from the A. S. S. Union, together with a regular supply of the "Youth's Penny Gazette." The school is increasing in interest, and is now placed upon a permanent basis. Providence permitting, we shall be able to continue it in future during both summer and winter. The Methodists have opened one in their house, and I am happy to say that both schools are well attended. There are children enough to make up two schools, and I hope all of the youth in our vicinity will be induced to attend one or the other schools.

The Temperance Law.

There is quite a commotion in our village at this time on the subject of temperance. Since the new law went into operation, a great many expedients have been resorted to to evade its penalties. For a time there was a prospect that these expedients would succeed. At our last circuit court, held last week, however, true bills were found by the grand jury against those persons who had been guilty of violating the law. This measure will stop the traffic, for I am sure that all who have violated the law will have to suffer its penalties to the utmost extent.

When I recur to the state of things here when I first came, and compare them with the present, I feel that I have abundant cause to rejoice. We now have six or seven male members that go forward in prayer meetings, &c. And more than this, we feel that the Lord is among us.

INDIANA.

From Rev. John Stuart, Connersville.

"Showers upon the mown grass."

When I approach the close of my quarter's labor, I feel sad if there be but little prospect of any thing encouraging to report. This was the case at the close of the last quarter; but I am glad now to say that I can inform you of a more encouraging state of things. We have experienced a season of refreshing from the presence of our God, in which Christians have been quickened and comforted, and sinners converted. Some two months ago, I commenced a series of meetings from house to house, unassisted by any but a few praying Christians, and the good promises of our God. We had two services during the day, preaching generally at night, and a prayer meeting in the morning. I found that by having our meetings in private houses, in different parts of the town, the attendance was much larger, as many persons would willingly attend a religious meeting in a neighbor's house, who would not go a short distance to attend a similar meeting in a public place, unless there were something very attractive about it. At the close of the second week, the attendance having increased to such a degree that it was thought advisable to have our meetings assume more of a public character, the exercises were removed to our place of worship on the Sabbath. By the assistance of a good brother near me, we were enabled to continue our meetings for two weeks longer, during which time the Lord hath blessed us abundantly, and both the church and myself have been taught not to despise the day of small things.

The result of this effort, under the divine blessing, has been the conversion, we hope, of seventeen persons; fifteen of these have united with my church at our late communion. But this is not all; it has greatly encouraged this little flock, which had been for some time previous desponding—thinking that the Lord had forgotten to be gracious. It has made them, I trust, more useful in the service of their Redeemer. My own heart has also been encouraged by receiving an amount of christian experience which cannot be misunderstood, and which tells me that it is believing labor only that God will bless.

This little church, by the recent accession to their numbers, have been greatly strengthened in a spiritual point of view. In pecuniary matters there has been but little added, as all, without a single exception, may be classed among the poor; thus verifying the Saviour's declaration, "To the poor is the Gospel preached." But still if they prove rich in faith and good works, God will be honored by their conversion, and his kingdom built up.

Our meetings were characterized with nothing worthy of our notice, except a deep solemnity, which seemed to pervade every soul present; and the affecting, melting words, which fell from the lips of the young converts, as they spoke of the love of Christ.

Our Sabbath school, and the Bible class which I teach, have been well attended, the school numbering, on an average, one hundred, including the teachers. Our prayer meeting has been very well attended. I might mention also our female prayer meeting, which meets every week, and which, I trust, will prove a blessing.

Progress against obstacles.

At the close of another quarter, I give you a short epitome of my efforts in the vineyard. We have our own difficulties and trials to contend with; trials which are common to all missionaries; and also such as are peculiar to certain locations and circumstances. But hitherto the Lord has prospered us. Our congregations are increasing every Sabbath, and a deeper interest and solemnity seems to pervade our audiences now than before. We trust the day is not far distant when we shall reap a precious harvest of souls for the Lord. We have preaching regularly twice each Sabbath, have meetings for prayer, and family visitations, accompanied by tract distribution; and while there is evidently a spiritual work commenced, which is as yet working as the leaven, we are also doing something by way of building up the walls of Zion externally. Our church will be 28 by 50 feet, of brick, one story high, and is to be completed in another month, if the Lord permits.

We have an irreverent and presumptuous ministry to contend with, whose public and private efforts are to forestall and hinder the work of the Lord. But blessed be God, their blind zeal and infatuation will ultimately result favorably to the cause of truth, if we faint not. My earnest prayer is, that the Lord may lead them to see their real condition, and to unfeigned repentance and faith. This opposition and hostility to the simple and practical preaching of the word, and the fact that we had no regular place of preaching, have operated against us and greatly retarded our prosperity.

MICHIGAN.

General Prosperity.

I have to report missionary labor under commission from your Society for six months.

During this period, the church to which I minister has enjoyed in some good measure the favor of God, in the general harmony of its members, and their increase, as I humbly trust, in grace and knowledge. A good deal of attention has been necessarily given of late to "the outward business of the house of God;" and for this reason, in part, we have been led to defer those special efforts for the ingathering of souls, which certain favorable circumstances and indications would otherwise, perhaps, have induced us to attempt. There has been, and still continues to be, a good deal of seriousness in the minds of some of the impenitent, and a few have been brought, as we hope, to Christ.

A Rum Shop Closed by the Ladies.

Certain efforts put forth by our ladies in furtherance of the temperance cause deserve mention:

In a section of the village, there has always been a strong public sentiment in favor of temperance, by the force of which, appropriately applied, an end has been speedily put to sundry enterprises in the way of liquor selling. But some time ago, a grocery was opened by a German, who persisted in retailing strong drink in spite of various attempts to dislodge him. Unfortunately the law was on his side. He had complied with the provisions of the statute, which allows any one to sell on giving bonds to a certain amount, on the principle of the Wisconsin law.

A few weeks ago, the ladies determined to take the matter in hand. Thirty or more of them organized themselves into companies of six each, and commenced a course of systematic visitation, one company going together each day. At first, though the man was somewhat disconcerted at the unexpected honor of a visit from six ladies, he was disposed to treat the matter as a very good joke, and facetiously recommended his liquors to the visitors. The next day, when another company called, he became angry, and scolded and threatened. The day after, the visiting committee found the front door of the store closed against them, but speedily made their way in through the back door. By the middle of the week, the man became thoroughly alarmed; and about the hour he expected a visit, he locked his store, and went away. The ladies called as usual, but, of course, without gaining admittance. About sundown, however, the man returned, and had hardly got the shop opened, and every thing ready to supply his waiting customers, when in filed the platoon of visitors, with their tongues unloosed, and their zeal raised to a higher pressure from having been the longer repressed. On Friday, the man was gone, and his store closed, the most of the day. He returned towards evening, and not daring quite yet to open his store, had stopped in at the blacksmith's shop, and was there condoling with one or two friends, in fancied security, when his unwelcome visitors were again upon him with their faithful reproofs. On Saturday, not a single detachment, but the whole regiment of ladies waited upon him in a body, and labored with him sufficiently, as they thought, to last over the Sabbath. Meanwhile they circulated a paper, to which they procured the signatures of most of the families in that part of the town, pledging themselves to purchase nothing at that store so long as liquor was sold there. The next week, one of the man's bondsmen left the place, and being unable to get new bail, in consequence of the movement of these ladies, he discontinued the open sale of liquor. More recently they have suspected him of selling illegally, and have appointed a committee to prosecute him.

Protracted Meeting.

In regard to my field of labor, there is at present a good prospect. The Lord has visited this people in great mercy. I commenced visiting the people from house to house, conversing with them freely on the subject of religion, praying with them, that God would give them repentance unto life. I found some skeptics, some infidels, some backsliders, and, "here and there a traveler." At the same time, I preached every evening in a school house at Long Lake, and the second evening there was a goodly number in attendance. The truth began to settle down into the hearts of the congregation; professors began to weep and confess their sins to God and to each other.

The next week we appointed meetings for inquiry; they were rather thinly attended at first, but soon became interesting. The meeting lasted about two weeks, and closed with much interest. At that time I was taken sick, and was confined to my house about three weeks; but the people had prayer meetings every other night, for some weeks. The entire result of the meeting was the hopeful conversion of some twenty souls. To God be all the praise.

Another Revival.

As soon as I was able to return to my labors, I commenced a series of meetings in a town some four miles from Long Lake. In the progress of this meeting I visited thirty families. Some of them had lived in this State from six to eight years, and had never been visited by a minister before. This circumstance is truly appalling; nevertheless the result of these visits has been very favorable; the attention of the people is called up to the subject of religion, and there have been some hopeful conversions; and many have been awakened to a sense of their lost condition. Professors are in the work; a prayer meeting is sustained, and a Sabbath school organized; and other means of grace are attended to, that before were neglected. Pray for us, that the great head of the Church may abundantly bless his truth, in this part of the country.

NEW YORK.

A City Missionary among Foreigners.

Entering a grocery one day I told the clerk the design of my visit. He had not the courage to express his epicurean sentiments, but his disdainful look was awful to me. Then a rough voice from a nook behind some hogsheads rushed upon me. "Tell me, is there also a barrel of brandy on draught, where you want people to meet!" I stepped nearer and saw a company around a drinking table. "Sir, said I, you know the object of the meeting, to which I invite all who are inclined to come; why do you ask thus?" "Ah, well!" said a giant in figure, all churches should be pulled down and the priests hanged; they enslave the people." Said I: "Is it reasonable, my friends, to confound things so different and blame what is good?"

You know very well that the church in Europe, in regard to the state and politics, is very different from the church in this country. Here is liberty!" "A fair liberty here, said one, where drinking is to be prohibited!" Then the giant cried, striking the table with his fists: "The priests have already the power in this land, as they have in Europe. We must seek liberty elsewhere!" That sentence was dearer to me than the value of all things in the grocery, and I left the place as one who had found a treasure.

I knocked at a door. "What do you want, sir?" said a young man. "As a minister of the Gospel I am visiting my countrymen, and would pay you a visit." The man seemed to be perplexed, as he had long ago bid adieu to the church. Still he wore mustaches, a sign of courage. Said he: "We have no religion here and want none, and so we have nothing to do with you. Our maxim is: Be just and fear none!" Said I, "If you adhere to that, sir, you cannot be against a good church." Staring at me through his spectacles, he said: "Well, sir, if you like to discourse with us about religion, take a seat!" and I conversed a good while with them.

In a large house, inhabited by Germans, I visited all, and the last were Jews. The man said, with perfect indifference, that he had no creed. The study of the Talmud and his acquaintance with a Rationalist professor had made him almost an Atheist. I argued with him and enforced the arguments by examples of men who, after doubting, believed. He said, with emotion, "O, that I could believe so!" He seemed to feel the truth, and said, "O, could I believe as you!" "There was a time when I could not believe, said I, but God turned my heart to him, and now I believe and am happy. And so it must happen with you, sir!" "Perhaps, sir, said he, with a lovely smile, perhaps I may see that happy day, when I can say the same!" He thanked me for my visit, and promised to visit the church. May the Lord give him faith!

I found a lady mourning over her dear child, which the Lord had taken from her a few days since. She was reared in the Roman church; but she told me that she had no sympathy with it, although her mother is a bigoted Catholic. But, alas, she had fallen from superstition to skepticism. As she had no Bible, I advised her to buy one, but she feared her husband would not permit it. She received my advice with apparent assent, and I can say, I preached Christ to a weeping sinner. Her husband, also, who came in a little after, seemed to take interest in the discourse.

It is at the feet of the Saviour that I lay my imperfect work. O, smile upon it, Lord!

Revival.

During the past year we have not been without some tokens of the special presence of the Holy Spirit. In the summer, a deep solemnity was manifest at times in our little congregation on the Sabbath, and two interesting cases of conversion came to the knowledge of the pastor. These individuals, and one other whose hope was of less recent date, united with the church in September. As the autumn advanced, the attendance on the weekly appointments was much increased, and a few appeared to be awakened to some sense of their guilt and danger, and brought to receive Christ as their Saviour. The first Sabbath of the year, one beloved youth presented himself, and entered into covenant with God and his people. The Friday previous to that day was observed as a season of special prayer by the church. About this time a rich blessing descended, resting especially upon the Sabbath school. Five of the teachers have been permitted to hear a new language from nearly all the members of their respective classes, and some of the hours which these teachers have passed with them, have left a deep trace on memory. The interest of our youth in each other, has been truly delightful. Those who had found Jesus could not rest, till they had brought their companions to him. They were abundant in prayer and affectionate exhortation, and their labors were not in vain.

Scenes of Interest.

In one of the week-day schools, a company of little girls commenced a prayer meeting, kneeling out of door, under a wintry sky, to look up to heaven for mercy for themselves and their associates. This becoming known, they were invited to a neighboring house, and the meeting continued with great interest till the close of the school term.

The prayer meetings of another circle of youth, composed of members of a select and a district school, will be long remembered by those who took part in them. Looking back to those hours, they will say, "happy seasons we have seen."

The flower of a community dedicated to God, is a beautiful sight. We may not hope that all these fair blossoms will remain to breathe fragrance and mature into fruit, or even a considerable number of them, in this little garden on the hills; for already the scattering process has begun. But we will pray that those who go away from us may beautify and enrich some other portion of the Lord's heritage.

Not far from forty express the hope of having passed from death unto life. There are those praying that this may be only the beginning of a glorious work.

From Rev. James Tisdale, Shutesbury, Mass.

Revival.

Through the loving kindness of the great Head of the Church, there has been an interesting revival of religion in Shutesbury, which commenced about the first of last October, and though at no time have there been many and sudden conversions, yet the interest remains unabated at the present time, two having indulged a hope this present week. The revival first became visible among the Baptists, whose Society is more than twice as large as the Congregational, and with them is the largest number of converts. The whole number who have indulged a hope from time to time since the revival commenced, is about 50. Of these there are not more than 15 who have heretofore been reckoned as belonging to the Congregational Society; and it is not sure that all these, if they profess religion, will unite with us; and perhaps the same may be said of a few others not included in this number. And further we may add, there has been an interest among the Methodists in the north part of the town, and some have experienced religion with them, making the whole number that think they have been born again, in this place, since October, about sixty.

There are some things connected with this work that rather add to its interest. No special means were used to wake up the people, or with a view to promote a revival. Its visible effects were first seen among the members of the Baptist church; and for some little time after it commenced, the Baptists had no minister to be with them during the week. I have attended their meetings on week days when I could, and have conducted them when they had no minister present. And since the Baptists have had a minister to be with them all the time, no foreign aid has been called in by either Society. My own health failed at one time, having been taken with a bilious fever, and was unable to go to the house of God, on the last two Sabbaths in December, and the first in January; and after I commenced preaching on the Sabbath, was unable to attend extra meetings, and am now only just beginning to visit from house to house. It has also been a remarkably cold winter, and at the center of the town, where the Baptist and Congregational meeting houses are, the land is quite elevated, and subject to hard winds, and there have been an unusual number of stormy Sabbaths. There have, however, been no lyceum or lectures, as usual, and though there are many opposers in the town, yet every thing has seemed to give way for religious meetings.

And thus you may form some idea by what means, and under what circumstances, God has carried on his work in this place. The hand of God may be clearly seen, by every attentive observer, in this work. It is by his grace that his people have been in any degree waked up to prayer, and other religious duties, and we know that to his name all the praise is due.

Miscellaneous.

Funerals of the distant dead.

It is painful to take a last look of departed friends, and bury them out of our sight for ever; and yet there may be an additional pang, when we are not even permitted to behold the cold remains whose obsequies we celebrate. Not a few pastors are called to preach funeral discourses for the flower of their flocks, who, in the fullness of health and hope, have gone away to seek gold in California, and have died there. Rev. J. F. Tuttle, of Rockaway, N. J., in his address at the Home Missionary Meeting in May last, thus alluded to the bereavements which have fallen upon families of his own flock:

"Will you pardon me for one word in behalf of that nation born in a day, to which your Society is beginning to throw most anxious and longing looks? In the congregation where I minister, there is scarcely a family who has not some tender tie binding them to California; and if those who have gone from us are a fair representation of that unparalleled community, then it is a community for which I beseech you to employ your wisdom, and exercise your utmost care. The most vigorous, enterprising, and hopeful young men of my parish are there, not to beg, but to dig; not to pine away with heartaching homesickness, but to hope on for the day when their toil shall give them independence. They are a noble body of men. Some of them are no doubt citizens of California for life, but the most of them expect to return; but alas, as some bleeding hearts among us testify, some, who went out in all the joyousness of hope, have gone from thence to that undiscovered country whence none return. Is this young prodigy of the Pacific, all throbbing with the irrepressible energies of young, ardent, powerful men—is it like an ocean stirred with conflicting tempests? Oh, then, let us take care to meet the responsibility, in order that when the California of the future shall emerge from the chaos of the present, it may be such a commonwealth as God himself may pronounce 'very good.'"

Position of the American Home Missionary Society.

The American Home Missionary Society is a voluntary association. The common principle which unites its members, is, that they are agreed in promoting Home Missions in the way proposed in its constitution and rules. They combine, not because they are of the same denomination, but because in this work they are of the same mind. In such a Society, the coöperation of different denominations is necessarily implied; and therefore it cannot become the propagandist of any one of them, to the disadvantage of others. It can work for each and for all of them; but it cannot be the tool of any of them for any purpose which is injurious to the interests of the rest.

As a voluntary Society, the A. H. M. S. is not subject to ecclesiastical control or direction. No church, or representation of churches, as such, has a voice in making the rules or choosing the officers. The responsibility of its executive officers is directly to their constituents, the members of the Society.

The founders and patrons of this Institution have preferred this voluntary principle in benevolence above the ecclesiastical, from a conviction of its superior efficiency and responsibility. The difference in the working of the two principles is readily acknowledged in secular affairs. Shrewd practical men well know how much better, quicker and cheaper, ships are built by private enterprise than by government; how individuals, or companies of individuals, can make railroads and canals at less cost, and manage them to better advantage than state commissioners. Colleges, too, when founded and controlled by the state, are more cumbrous and less efficient than those dependent only on the voluntary support of their friends.

The same principle of voluntariness, in distinction from ex officio management, has advantages also in the working of boards of benevolence. There is greater flexibility in accommodating the action to the circumstances; greater freedom to obey the convictions gained by experience. An ecclesiastical board is the creature of the ecclesiastical bodies by whom and for whom it is established; it is liable to have its action affected by church politics. Presbyteries have a right, to some extent, to dictate its operation within their respective bounds; while the board itself, with a far wider experience and a better knowledge of its own responsibility and means, is hampered and overruled by the church authority brought to bear upon its decisions. The voluntary society, on the other hand, has usually all the light, in a given case, which the recommendation of the ecclesiastical body can furnish; but then it is at liberty to modify the course recommended, if its own experience suggests such modification. It can also seek original information through independent channels; and thus have the best attainable means for a mature judgment, and be less liable than any other organization can be, to mistakes and the misappropriation of funds. Moreover, the executive officers of a voluntary society are under the most powerful motive to fidelity, because they use their own funds or the funds of those to whom they are directly responsible; and they feel every moment the pressure of the public opinion of those for whom they act—a public opinion, sleepless, and ever ready to detect and on the instant to expose any dereliction. The tribunal that calls them to account is not an impersonality; but every individual donor can arraign them at his own bar, and can punish them for a mistake as well as for a fault, simply by withholding his patronage; so that any considerable dissatisfaction must wind up their influence, by depriving them of resources. They are thus thrown continually on their best endeavors to act wisely and rightly.

The conductors of the American Home Missionary Society have stood in this relation more than twenty six years; and though they have had many trials, they have great occasion to be thankful for the success that has attended their labors. Especially, have they reason to rejoice, in the sanction which experience has given to the principles on which the Society was founded. Whatever those persons might prefer who have personal or party objects to promote in connection with benevolent boards, no one practically associated with this Society in the missionary work, if it were now blotted out of existence, and a new organization were to be originated, would think of any thing else but a board clothed with discretionary powers to act freely, without ecclesiastical shelter or control, amenable directly to the public, and having no claim for patronage or support but such as might grow out of their good behavior—their wisdom, energy and success. What title this Society may have to such influence and support, it is not for us to say; its constituents express their opinion from year to year, through the contribution box; and the history of a quarter of a century shows the result.

It was stated above, that a voluntary

Society has superior advantages for judicious and efficient action, by reason of its fuller and more exact information. This is owing, in no small degree, to its employing agents on definite fields, whose duty it is to know as intimately as possible the history, condition and claims of all parts of their respective districts, and to make specific examination of particular cases, when required. Lest in any case their want of correct information, or their partialities, might operate to the prejudice of any church whose case is referred to them, they are clothed with no authority to make decisions; their recommendation is not an official sanction on the one hand, nor a veto on the other; but is simply a report of facts, with their opinion thereon. This opinion has no other authority with the Executive Committee than what it derives from the known candor and fidelity of the agent. The Committee do not rely upon the opinion of the agent alone, but lay it beside the facts communicated by the applicant, and the judgment expressed by the ecclesiastical body to which those applicants belong, and from all these testimonies they make up a judgment of their own.

Such is the work and influence of an agent of this Institution. It is evident that if he is wise and faithful, he is immensely useful. He is the eye and the ear of the Committee, to see for them and hear for them many things which an ecclesiastical committee may not know and never would communicate. Such a committee have experience derived only from the few cases within their own bounds; the agent of the Society has a wider range of cases than they—has the advantage of more precedents. An ecclesiastical committee are under a strong bias from sympathy with their associates in the same body; the agent is less so, from his not having any such special relation, and therefore is more likely to give an impartial view. The ecclesiastical committee are often scattered widely asunder, and cases sent through them seldom have the advantage of their united examination. Usually, one of the number writes a line or two of general and cautious commendation, and then it is forwarded to another. Thus, no consultation is had, and it afterwards turns out, in many cases, that some one—perhaps every one—of the committee had his misgivings as to the propriety or the amount of the grant proposed; but from not knowing how the others felt, he hesitated to express it. The agent either has information pertinent to the case, or his duty requires him to obtain it, and send it along with the application and the endorsement of the ecclesiastical committee; and thus the executive board of the Society has the best preparation for deciding the case. The ecclesiastical committees are supposed, in theory, to be acquainted with all matters of this kind within their respective bounds; but in fact they frequently are not. Sometimes they reside 20, 50, or 100 miles from the applicants whom they recommend. Sometimes they make egregious mistakes, certifying the propriety of appointing men who are not in good standing, or who are in circumstances not to be proper subjects of charitable aid. Unless the Society had the means of protecting itself against influences arising from bias or from defective information, it would be continually exposed to have on its roll churches which ought to support their own ministers, and missionaries without character and qualifications for the work intrusted to them.

The employment of agents for the purposes above indicated is, therefore, an essential feature of this Society; it is an integral part of its system, and cannot be dispensed with. Any church or body of churches which coöperates with the Society, coöperates with this feature as well as with others. To ignore the agent—to refuse him access and information—to decline communicating through him, is to ignore the Executive Committee, and refuse them the access and the information which they need for the proper fulfillment of their trust.

But, it is said, the agent may abuse his power. We reply, as already intimated, he has but little power to abuse. Then, again, he is under the strongest motives to do his duty impartially. He is subject to constant scrutiny, not only by the Society, whose interest it is to watch him, but also by the ecclesiastical bodies among whom he moves. Any presbytery or association—any individual even—can report to the Society the misconduct of an agent, with the assurance that it will receive prompt investigation. Agents may fail in always doing just right. All men, however good and gifted, are liable to error; all power is liable to abuse; but it is not, therefore, wise, if it were possible, to intrust influence to no man. We do not claim for our agents, any more than for the Executive Committee, exemption from the common frailties and errors of humanity. But we do claim for them, that what power they have is exercised under such guards and limitations, and is subject to such accountability, as to furnish the strongest possible safeguards against abuse.

As the integrity and impartiality of the agents of the Society have of late been specially called in question, where circumstances did not allow of their vindication, it is proper, in this place, to bear testimony in their behalf. We, therefore, say of them, as a class, that they are men of training, selected for their general intelligence and experience. They have all of them been pastors of churches, and are familiar with the exigencies of church-founding in new and feeble communities, and with the trials of missionary life. They are men who, in their respective communities, held a blameless reputation; men of holy influence, such as were sought as laborers in seasons of revival, or as peace makers; well balanced and judicious men, not given to riding hobbies; men who, after years of service in difficult circumstances, have won, and have held to this hour, the respect and the approbation of an immense majority of those with whom they are conversant, and who know them best. In short, the Society, whose character and usefulness is so involved in employing the best men that can be had for such a work in their respective regions, believes these to be such; it knows of none whose fidelity and qualifications for such positions, better entitle them to confidence and respect.

Fault has indeed been found with some of the Society's agents, chiefly in the way of a priori suggestions, that in such a position men of necessity must be partial. There have also been insinuations of improper interference, on the part of agents, with denominational rights. The Society has always been ready to investigate every grievance

Home Evangelization.

The peculiar encouragements to a cordial and earnest coöperation in the great work of extending the saving influences of the Gospel in our country, are set forth with felicitous power, and in a spirit of enlarged disinterestedness, in the following passages, which constitute the substance of the address of the Rev. ASA D. SMITH, D. D., at the last Anniversary of the Society.

I call to mind, as I think of the salvation of our land, the goodly lineage in which, as a people, we rejoice. I think of the ancestral prayers which began with our beginning, and have multiplied with our progress. From the deck of the Mayflower I hear them; from amid the snow-covered graves at Plymouth, and from "the sounding aisles of the dim wood;" from the new-found home of the exiled Huguenot, and from the altars where knelt the immigrant Hollander. Of no other nation, since the world began—save only God's chosen people—were the foundations so laid with faith and prayer. Potent with God indeed, for ages past, have been the supplications rising continually from our father-land; and they will ever be, we trust, Britain's defense as well as her glory. Yet the voices that come from her early history, are voices of superstition from Druidical altars, under the sacred shade of the spreading oak and the twining mistletoe. It is a thought, perhaps a fancy, of some of the philosophers, that a word once uttered never perishes from the atmosphere—that onward endlessly the vibrations go. Oh, if it be so, if there float above us and around us all the voices of prayer which have been uttered for our land by its departed generations, and if these voices could but be blent together in one imploring cry, it would ring out from the Gulf to the Lakes, and from ocean to ocean. Here, under God, is one of my chief encouragements touching our beloved country. When I gaze upon my children as they sleep quietly upon their pillows, and anxiously ask, what, when I am gone, shall be their lot, and the lot of their children and their children's children—a lot linked for weal or woe with that of the thronging millions of our nation's coming history—my heart is comforted by the remembrance of the ancestral prayers which have entered into the ears of the Lord God of Hosts, and which, as surely as his throne standeth firm, shall not be in vain. If Queen Mary dreaded the supplications of John Knox, more than a hostile army, may we not deem these prayers our walls and battlements, our mailed and invincible legions? I come, as I think of them, with a warmer heart and a more firmly nerved arm, to the counsels and cares, the toils and sacrifices of our Home Missionary enterprise.

But wherever there is good prayer, there will be also, you may be sure, a good Providence. To the present period of time, and, if I mistake not, to our own broad land, a thousand lines of history have for ages been converging. Wonderful is the concatenation of human events. Wonderful is God's timing of them, with reference not to the present alone but to the Gospel's ultimate triumph. They stand in just the right connection. They come not too soon—they come not too late. There was the invention of the mariner's compass, hardly completed till the dawn of the 14th century. Why was it not earlier achieved? Better as the world had been, that the nations be kept apart. They would have come together to little profit—chiefly to bite and devour one another. Little, probably, thought Flavio Gioia, as he toiled in his obscure workshop at Naples, of what God designed. But the mariner's compass was given to the world just long enough before our continent was to be discovered, to have it ready as a tried and reliable guide to Christopher Columbus. The art of printing would have been comparatively useless for ages preceding its advent. What was there then to print? Would you have given to the press the profitless jargon of monkish speculation? Better let it lie in the cells of the monasteries, coated with dust. But note again the hand of God. Just long enough before the Reformation was the press given to the world, to have it ready for use on Luther's Bible—that Bible whose blessed influence has reached even to us. And just rapidly enough has it been advancing toward perfection to meet the unfolding exigencies and opportunities of this free land of ours. The discovery of America, too, was at just the right time. It was well that it should remain unknown till God could winnow three kingdoms for the seed wherewith to sow it. The Reformation—at just the right juncture did it occur, to make on this virgin land the first moral impress. The Smithfield fires, the star-chamber outrages, the ship-money oppressions, and a long series of like enormities, what were they but the furnace and the crucible, out of which, for American circulation, came the Puritan gold, seven times purified? A like timeliness was there in the discovery and introduction of the steam-power, the invention of the magnetic telegraph, and other achievements of science and art. For our times, for our land, and through us for the world, have the Bezaleels and the Aholiabs from age to age been working. And lo! at last, the wand of Providence points to the shores of the Pacific, and the Golden Gate opens there, through which—our own land saved—salvation is to be poured on waiting Asia.

Great is the work before us; and it is of God's wisdom, his permissive wisdom at least, that there are different bands of laborers—different societies, and men of different shades of opinion in our own Society. Whoever in all the vast field—on whatever prairie, in whatever wilderness, by whatever foaming torrent of the north, or sluggish water-course of the south—proclaims the glorious Gospel of the Son of God—no matter what peculiar livery he may wear—no matter what particular shibboleth he may utter—I hail him as a brother, and I bid him God speed. Yes, were the Gospel preached even “of envy and strife,” yet in view of what that Gospel is, of what our land's salvation is worth, and of the relation it bears to the salvation of the world—I would say, with something of Paul's magnanimity, “Notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached, and I therein do rejoice, yea and will rejoice." We may move in different orbits, yet, if it be around the Sun of Righteousness, why stay in our course to oppugn each other? Shall ardent Mercury complain of frigid Uranus, or ringed Saturn of belted Jupiter? Why should the commingled rays in the same beam of light quarrel with each other because of their different hues? Let them shine on, rather, each after his own peculiar manner, till the whole landscape be painted as by the finger of God. It is the glory of that Christianity which beats in the heart of this Society, that it is truly Catholic, it is felicitously coöperative. It makes much of an essence, but little of an ism; it makes much of salvation, but little of a sect. It feels continually, that if Christ be magnified; if the beauty of holiness be imparted to the individual soul; if spiritual organisms be scattered over the land as depositories of truth, and centers of influence—if that kingdom be built up which consisteth "not in meat and drink, but in righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost"—it matters little, comparatively, what becomes of this or that party interest. Not, said the speaker, that I have no ecclesiastical preferences. I have long sailed in the good old Presbyterian ship. I know the ropes pretty well, and think they are good enough ropes. Deeply interested am I to have the gallant craft ever headed toward the haven, and kept in good trim; her compass right, and her canvas pressed to the utmost. She will carry a great deal of precious freight, and carry it safely. But the worst and most perilous stuff that men have ever attempted to encumber her with, is sectarianism. It will prove as a rot in her timbers, and as a fire in her hold. I declare to you, sir, that if it must be put on board, much as I love the old ship, I do not know but, like certain animals in a certain emergency, I shall make my escape. But let us aim at better things. No other spirit than that of an enlarged catholic Christianity befits the magnitude of the enterprise we have in hand. To think of substituting for it a narrow, partizan bigotry, were like putting a pigmy to do the work of a Kentucky giant, or a purling rill in place of the Father of Waters.

Animated by these clustering prayers, and by these converging lines of Providence; impelled by an unselfish, unsectarian spirit, let us gird ourselves anew for our noble work. The millions already occupying the great valley, beckon us onward; and I hear the voices of other millions, almost "as of numbers without number," pressing toward the Rocky Mountains, and destined soon to throng the Pacific slope—heterogeneous millions gathered from every land and lineage under heaven, here to be assimilated, enlightened, elevated, saved. I remember, too, that every acre of that whole broad West belongs to Christ; it has been bought with his blood, it has been bedewed, as it were, with his tears. Let his love constrain us. Let our hearts be stirred, too, by the grandeur of our object! It will not have been accomplished till throughout all our borders, in every hall and every hut, not excepting even "Uncle Tom's cabin," the Gospel shall have done its perfect work. Our beloved country, then, in the words of Milton, shall be "as an eagle muing her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzled eyes, at the full midday beam, at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance, while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those that love the twilight, flutter about her, amazed at what she means." Nay, the nations shall know what she means. That sweet and blessed charity which has wrought so mightily at home, through a thousand avenues, shall flow abroad, and mainly through her wise and holy evangelism, the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ.

Anniversaries of Auxiliaries.

MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Fifty Third Anniversary of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, was held in the Hall of the Lowell Institute, Boston, May 25th, at 7½ o'clock, P. M. The venerable President of the Society, Rev. LEONARD WOODS, D. D., presided, and the services were opened with prayer by Rev. MILTON BADGER, D. D., Secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, New York. Extracts from the Annual Report were read by the Secretary, Rev. JOSEPH S. CLARK, D. D. An able and highly appropriate discourse was preached by Rev. EDWARD HITCHCOCK, D. D., President of Amherst College, from Matt. xiii. 33: The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened,—illustrating in a clear and felicitous manner, the influence of the Gospel on the religious character and destiny of mankind. From the sermon of President Hitchcock, which is soon to be published, we shall endeavor to give some valuable extracts to our readers.

The following selections from the Annual Report will suffice to exhibit a view of the operations of this important Auxiliary during the year.

The Treasury.

At the close of the last financial year, May 16, 1851, there was a balance of $1,177 39 remaining in the Treasurer's hands. During the subsequent twelve months he has received from all sources, $29,549 29. Within the same period he has paid to missionaries laboring in Massachusetts, $4,825 19; for incidental expenses, $1,092 17; and remitted to the American Home Missionary Society at New York, $24,000. To this last item add $6,880 78, contributed directly to that Society, without passing through the Treasury of this, but devoted to the same object with the rest, and the total sum realized to the cause of Home Missions within the bounds of Massachusetts, is $36,230 07; of which $30,759 28, or nearly six sevenths of the whole, has been disbursed on the great field beyond.

As compared with those of the previous year, the receipts of this are a little less; though the diminished necessities of our own State have enabled the Executive Committee to bestow a larger proportion than ever before in meeting the enlarged demands of Providence in other and more needy sections of the field.*

Systematic Contributions.

The experience of every year confirms the fact, that the Society's main reliance for funds is based on systematic collections annually taken up, either in the congregation on the Sabbath, or from house to house through the parish, at stated seasons. Nearly two thirds of all our donations are derived from this source. And, as it is impossible for your Secretary to visit more than one fifth of the churches in a single year—supposing that he had nothing else to do—it follows that these collections must come chiefly from the spontaneous action of the people, stimulated and sustained from year to year by no other agency than that of the pastors. And it gives the Committee great pleasure to acknowledge, that, in about three fourths of the congregations where such collections were taken up the past year, no other agency was employed; and in almost every instance the result shows that no other is needed, where this can be had. At the same time it must be reluctantly confessed, that it cannot, as yet, in all cases, be had. The Committee have tried to resist this conviction, and to strengthen their wavering hope, that a cause so sacred, so identified with the life and growth of Christianity in the land, might be left to the spontaneous workings of christian principle—at least for an annual contribution to its funds. But it now appears, on investigation, that out of our 467 churches, only 285 have made a collection for Home Missions during the past year—leaving 182 (or about two fifths of the whole) who “came not up to the help of the Lord; to the help of the Lord against the mighty.” It is true, that, in some of these, there are as-

* The financial year of this Auxiliary is not identical, of course, with that of the Parent Society, which ends with the 1st of March. It was stated in the last Report of the A. H. M. S., that the receipts from Massachusetts, for the year ending March 1, 1852, amounted to $41,804 58; which was more than one quarter of the total income of the Society for the year.

sociations of benevolent females, who, with characteristic constancy of affection, remembered this cause; but no general collection came from the congregation. Had all these made their collections with the rest, and on an equal scale of liberality, we might send at least fifty more missionaries immediately among the people now perishing for lack of vision in the destitute portions of our land. It cannot be supposed that in many cases this was a designed, premeditated neglect. It was rather an inadvertent omission. Probably in nine cases out of ten, the mere proposal of a collection by the pastor or a leading member of the church, at the appropriate time, would have met with a favoring response; and a few earnest remarks in commendation of it, would have secured a generous donation—provided a fair opportunity had been given. Is it impossible longer to hope that every minister of Jesus Christ, whose ordination vows bind him to this, as part of his sacred trust, will give to his flock an opportunity once a year of “ministering to the necessities of the saints?”

Fields of Labor and Laborers.

Under the patronage of this Society, the Gospel has been preached, and its various ordinances administered, during the past year, or some part of it, in 47 different congregations of the needy in Massachusetts, gathered from 1,100 families, furnishing in the aggregate, 4,800 attendants on public worship, more than half of whom have also been connected with Sabbath schools and Bible classes. Twenty seven of these congregations are favored with pastors; the remaining twenty have stated supplies. At all these stations, except two, there are regularly formed churches, numbering in the aggregate 1,920 members. To an unusual extent these churches at present appear to “have rest, and are edified, walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost.” Although the absence of religious revivals is a subject of general lamentation in the reports of the missionaries, it is hoped that about 80 souls under their charge have been converted to God.

Progress of the Work.

The present survey of missionary fields in Massachusetts, as compared with the number reported last year, shows a reduction of six. It is gratifying to add, that six others included in the present Report, have ceased to be missionary fields since the year commenced. These are Billerica, East Cambridge, Lancaster, Milton Railway Village, South Malden, and South Orange. In each case, the missionary's entire support was assumed by the people of his charge when his last commission expired. So that the present number of assisted churches in Massachusetts is only forty one.

As this class of facts furnishes the most reliable evidence of progress—showing the actual attainment of the great object sought by the friends of Home Missions—it may also be stated here, for their further encouragement, that we now have one hundred and twenty three churches in Massachusetts, which this Society has brought up from a state of absolute dependence on charity, to a condition of vigorous self-support; and they constitute nearly one third of all the self-supporting churches of our order. What stronger assurance do we want, that “our labor is not in vain in the Lord?” More than half of them have been placed in this condition within the last ten years. What better proof can we have of the increasing efficiency of these labors?

But a large proportion of the contributions from Massachusetts have been expended beyond its limits. And it must excite agreeable emotions in the breast of every one connected with this Auxiliary, to reflect that by virtue of the existing union between the two societies, every dollar of his donations to the cause of Home Missions, into whichever treasury it falls, goes to swell this broad and deep stream, whose waters are fertilizing the moral deserts of a continent.

Conservative Power of the Gospel.

The solemn apprehensions of danger to the body politic, and to the cause of Christ in this land, which rest upon many reflecting minds, will not appear utterly unfounded, if we attempt to estimate the native growth of irreligion, vice and violence in our midst, combining, as they do, with the superstition, infidelity and crime, that flow in upon us from abroad. And yet the real and the only ground of apprehension is, the possibility that God's prescribed remedy may not be applied. In this hour of conflict and peril we have in our hands what has ever proved “mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds.” If truth be overborne, and fall in our streets; if spiritual religion expire among us; if the land of the Pilgrims' sepulchres become the home of imported vice and superstition, it will not be because we have no adequate means of prevention. Fable or fancy has represented that the Emperor Constantine, on the eve of a battle which gave him the empire; saw pictured in the heavens the sign of the cross, and underneath it written, "By this sign, conquer." But there is no fable, no fancy, in the representation of Paul, that the PREACHING of the cross "is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek;" while the finger of Providence is continually writing underneath it, BY THIS SIGN, CONQUER.

PHILADELPHIA HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Twelfth Annual Meeting of the Philadelphia Home Missionary Society, was held in Philadelphia, on the 27th of April, at 3 o'clock, P. M. Mr. GEORGE W. M'CLELLAND, one of the Vice-Presidents, was called to preside. The meeting was opened with prayer, and the minutes of the last annual meeting were read. The Treasurer, HENRY PERKINS, Esq., presented his annual account, from which it appeared that the receipts into the Treasury of this Auxiliary, during the year, had been $10,588 27; and that the further sum of $2,749 27, had been paid into the treasury of the Parent Society, at New York, from the field of this Auxiliary, making a total of $13,337 54. The above receipts include a legacy of considerable amount from the late John Porter, Esq., of Northumberland, Pa. The amount expended on this field for missionary purposes, during the year, was $7,963 10.

The Twelfth Report of the Executive Committee was presented by the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. ROBERT ADAIR. It embraces the usual statistical details in regard to the churches aided by the Society, accompanied by many full and interesting communications from missionaries.

The following extracts are from the concluding summary of the Report.

During the year that has just closed, fifty three missionaries were in commission, whose ministrations were bestowed on about eighty feeble churches and missionary districts. At the present time, there are forty three missionaries in our employ. With few exceptions, they report encouraging progress in their respective fields of labor. Several of the churches have been favored with seasons of special religious interest, during which the people of God were quickened in the divine life, and sinners led to think upon their ways, and turn their feet to the testimonies of the Lord. In most of the churches, there is an increased attendance upon the means of grace, and in some places, the word preached is heard with unusual attention and solemnity.

The importance of having places of worship for the accommodation of the congregations, is exciting more interest every year among our feeble churches. It is beginning to be regarded as essential to their growth and permanent prosperity, and under this conviction they are making commendable exertions to effect so desirable an object. They do not appeal for help from abroad, till they have first taxed themselves to the utmost. In some cases all the funds have been raised for this purpose by the people in whose neighborhood the building is located. Generally, these buildings when completed, are entirely free from debt.

From the statistical reports of our missionaries, we gather the following facts. Hopeful conversions, one hundred and ninety two. Additions to the churches on examination and profession of faith, two hundred and sixty eight. Sabbath school pupils in connection with missionary churches, thirty four hundred. Volumes in Sabbath school libraries, seven thousand eight hundred and sixty three. Contributions for objects of benevolence, nine hundred and twenty two dollars. Candidates for the ministry, three. Four new churches have been organized, and three Sabbath schools. The amount contributed toward church building has not been reported; we presume it has been much greater than in former years, from the zeal displayed the last year in the erection of church buildings.

Within our bounds, some missionary churches are greatly retarded in their progress by the frequent removals of valuable members. The hearts of the minister and his people are often cast down by the rumor that this and that important family are about to leave for the West, or that some young man who is active in the Sabbath school and prayer meeting, is about to remove to some of our large towns or cities, in hope of advancing his worldly interests. Dependent churches are materially affected by all such changes. They feel the influence of every fluctuation in business, and every ebb and flow of population. A few removals not only diminish the moral power of an infant church, and its means of doing good to the community where it is located, but lessen its means of supporting the minister. Those who remain, therefore, are often discouraged and ready to give up in despair, in consequence of their pecuniary burdens, that are increased in order to make up the deficiency in the annual income of the congregation.

Yet the expenditure of money in such fields is not lost. Such churches are doing a good work in exerting a restraining and elevating power where they are situated, and by sending out a moral influence far beyond their own district. Their impoverishment is often the enriching of other churches. The seed which they have sown, and whose growth they watched with prayerful solicitude, may yield a rich harvest in other parts of the Lord's vineyard. "Herein is that saying true, one soweth and another reapeth," yet "both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

It is the general policy of the Executive Committee, to require two or more feeble churches to unite in the support of one missionary, where the population is sparse, and there is no prospect of an increase very soon. There must be enough work to do, and a reasonable prospect of gathering a self-sustaining church in a given field, before they feel justified in appointing a missionary for one feeble congregation; and when assured by competent judges that this is the case, they deem it wise and economical to make the appointment. For these reasons, some churches are now on our list as beneficiaries, that for a few years past did not seek our aid. This fact is not to be construed into a retrograde movement on the part of these churches. It rather shows progress, that the field once cultivated by one minister, has acquired an importance to demand the services of two. Besides, more is contributed by these churches separately, than when they were connected for the support of the Gospel, though each congregation may need a missionary appropriation to aid in the maintenance of its pastor.

A new impulse has been given to the cause of church extension during the past year; the Presbyteries have been more diligent in the cultivation of the territory embraced within their bounds than formerly. Churches almost extinct, have been inspired with new life, and the revived congregations, in some cases, have made successful efforts to sustain the preaching of the Gospel among them, and in some cases to erect houses of worship, or to repair and beautify their dilapidated buildings.

The following extract from a report of the late meeting of Montrose Presbytery, shows the energy with which this work is prosecuted in northeastern Pennsylvania.

"An unusual degree of interest was excited on the subject of Home Missions and the state of the feeble churches, in consequence of which, the Presbytery have resolved to renew their exertions, by adopting a more thorough and systematic mode of collection in all the churches, and among all the members of the congregation. From the earnest spirit manifested, we were satisfied that much good must result. To this renewed effort, the Presbytery are impelled by the growing necessities of the region, now so rapidly multiplying its population by the settlement of new towns and villages, and the establishment of large manufactories along the lines of railroad above mentioned. The woods and mountains, and streams of water, and places where no man dwelt or ever thought of dwelling, are fast filling up with an active and enterprising population. Much effort and expenditure are therefore more imperiously needed for the present, than were ever needed here before. It is a field of promise to the liberal, and to those who are truly willing to live and labor for the extension of the Church. There are few fields whereon the benevolent could expend their charities with more certain hopes of reward."

The Central Railroad, the New York and Erie Railroad, and the contemplated Erie and Sunbury Railroad, and the one in progress in the Lackawanna valley, are destined to give a new impulse to enterprise and population in these places. These improvements will open new missionary fields for our cultivation, and large means and vigorous exertions will be necessary to secure the harvest. Let the institutions of religion be established in these providential openings, and a healthful moral influence will be exerted on those attracted there for the purposes of merchandise or labor. It is of great importance to create a strong moral and religious sentiment in such places, lest worldliness and Sabbath desecration, and infidelity gain the ascendancy.

We have cause for thankfulness, that Providence has favored us already with many important positions in the vicinity of these thoroughfares. We have missionary churches planted in most of the northern tier of counties in Pennsylvania. In northeastern and western Pennsylvania, the work of church extension has been prosecuted with unusual energy and success.

From the history of our past operations, we believe this society has been a humble agency in promoting evangelical religion within the field of our efforts, and of advancing the interests of that branch of Christ's Church to which we belong. Where once there was moral desolation and ruin, where the sound of the church-going bell was never heard, now there is an attractive church building, whose spire is seen from the distance; the privileges of the sanctuary are enjoyed, the Sabbath is observed as holy time, and the cause of temperance advanced. The benign influence of these little churches is beginning to be felt, and the moral darkness to pass away, before the light that shines from these watch-towers of Zion. And we are persuaded, that the past is but an earnest of the future.

In closing their report, the Executive Committee would record with gratitude the goodness of God in crowning their humble efforts with so much success.

Nothing on a grand scale, according to man's estimate of greatness, has been effected; but enough has been done to fill with transport the inhabitants of Paradise. Churches have been planted and nourished, and places of worship erected, which will be a blessing to the community where they are located, long after their feebleness, and the toils and self-denial necessary to raise them to a position of independence, are forgotten. To engage in such a work is a blessed privilege; and though we may close our earthly career, before we shall see all the results of our present efforts, we shall reap an abundant reward in due season, if we faint not. Our memories shall be cherished as those who have raised "up the foundations of many generations, and we shall be called the repairer of the breach, the restorer of paths to dwell in." What we do, therefore, in this noble work, let us do heartily, as unto the Lord. The openings which Providence presents, through the wide extent of our land for our efforts, must soon be occupied by the friends of a scriptural Christianity, else error, and superstition, and infidelity will take possession of the field. Let us then "work while it is day; for the night cometh, when no man can work."

Details of Missionary Labors.

I entered upon my labors among this people, under favorable circumstances, in most respects. Some clouds, then gathering in the horizon with portentous aspect, have dispersed, and our prospects now are encouraging. I am pleased with the spirit of the church members generally, and am happy to observe the amount of mutual attachment and confidence which has already sprung up among us. I have reason to thank God that my lot has been cast among such a people, and I hope to be able so to exercise my ministry among them, that they will have occasion to feel that the Lord has sent me to them. But alas, how poorly prepared I am for the duties of my high calling! Oh, for more of the gifts and graces of my office, more of the spirit of my Master. I want to see more fruits of my labors than I have seen for the year past. But perhaps I have no right to expect fruits to follow such labors. May God prepare me and my people for the rich blessings of his grace.

My labors are as follows: I spend one Sabbath in the month with the Little Cedar church, and preach at two different points. On the other three Sabbaths, I preach each morning at this place. In the afternoon of the first Sabbath, I lecture here on the subject of Foreign Missions, in connection with the monthly concert. The other two Sabbath afternoons, I preach in two neighborhoods, two and five miles distant. I attend regularly upon the Bible class, Sabbath morning at 8 o'clock, and the prayer meeting Wednesday night. My congregations in town are pretty regular in their attendance, and average between 60 and 70. At other places they are less regular, varying from 25 to 100, or more. Sabbath before last, the Little Cedar church had a communion season, at which most of the members on the ground were present and we had a good season. The ordinance was administered at a private house, in order to accommodate an aged sister in the church, now 97 years of age. She is blind, and able to hear only with great difficulty. But while the outward man decays, the soul is prosperous. In the two neighborhoods near this place, where I preach, I have organized Sabbath schools, which are doing well. At one of the places, there has never been a Sabbath school or preaching before. Our Sabbath school in town, and the Wednesday evening prayer meeting are attended with interest. On the whole, the means of grace are well sustained for a new country, and we are hoping to see good results.

From Rev. James M. Phillips, Kossuth, Des Moines Co.

Mr. Phillips, after six years of faithful labor in connection with the Society, at Hazel Green, Grant Co., Wisconsin, has become the pastor of a church at Kossuth. In reference to this change, and to his late field, which peculiar obstacles to his success induced him reluctantly to leave, he says:

In seeking a new field of labor, I acted with the advice and consent of my brethren in the ministry, and in accordance with the conviction which I have before expressed. Still I feel anxious, and deem it very important, that my late field should be occupied, in connection with a neighboring place, which is now destitute. The ground should by no means be abandoned. The position will eventually be vastly more important than it is at present. There is still a small church, and in it some members of sterling worth. Its geographical position, also, must make it the center of a certain amount of influence, when the flowing tide of emigration shall have sought again its accustomed level.

My term of service as your missionary has now closed, and in taking leave of your Society, I wish to express my growing conviction, strengthened and matured by six years of observation, of the incalculable value and efficiency of the work in which you are engaged. I have long been satisfied that, under God, you are accomplishing that for the West (I say the West, because my observation has been mostly limited to this portion of your field), which no other human agency could or would accomplish. I am now in a large and flourishing church of 130 members, which in its infancy was nourished and aided by your patronage. And this, together with a thousand other "golden candlesticks" which are sending their sacred illumination over the land, owe their existence, under God, to your efforts.

California Emigration.

Since the middle of March, our town has been thronged with emigrants to California and Oregon. This is the most northern crossing-place on the Des Moines river. The emigration this season is immense; perhaps greater than ever. There is a far greater number of women and children in the train, than any previous season. The effect of this immense throng, all "armed to the teeth," is disastrous in every point of view. It unsettles every thing that comes within its range. Men become dissatisfied with the sober realities of life, and are eager to enter on one of adventure. In such a state of things, all public improvements, such as churches, school houses, roads, bridges, &c., are abandoned. The Sabbath, for the time being, is unknown and disregarded. Our town and vicinity has the appearance of some great military encampment. The service of mammon is complete.

In the church, here, there is a little religious interest; one or two are inquiring the way to Zion, but the multitude are for the world. The service of mammon is completely in the ascendancy, and nothing but the spirit of God can cast down the strongholds of Satan.

*From Rev. George G. Rice, Kainesville,

Influence of Christian Emigrants.

While absent from home on a short journey, this missionary writes:

I spend half of my Sabbaths in Kainesville, and the other half in different places. I expect they will be supplied with preaching in Kainesville, nearly every Sabbath till I return, by ministers stopping there on their way to California. My congregations, at most points where I have preached, have gradually increased. In Kainesville, the few last Sabbaths, our congregation was quite large. The house we had occupied became too small, and we engaged a large hall which was built for a dancing hall. This hall was well filled the last Sabbath I spent there. A large portion of the congregation consisted of emigrants to California and Oregon.

I have been forcibly struck with the powerful influence a few decided Christians may have in such a community as this. A company of decided Christians, bound for California, came to Kainesville about the first of March, to wait there until grass should grow, so as to enable them to start on their journey across the Plains. They strictly observed the Sabbath, and attended public worship. The result was, that our town was more quiet than it had been on the Sabbath, and numbers came out to meeting who had not been seen there before. This little company of strangers had a marked and decided influence upon the whole community. Would that all professing Christians would feel how much influence ~~they~~ exert, for good or for evil, when they are abroad, and would be as careful when abroad as when at home. One of our greatest trials on the frontiers has been the unchristian conduct of professors of religion, who, when they come among us, lay aside all religion. We have many such.

The population here is so changing, that I cannot count much upon the future. The field I occupy may be truly called a hard one, and I cannot flatter myself that I shall be free from severe trials for some time to come. The influence of Mormonism and Infidelity has a deep root here. But I do not feel like abandoning this field, nor have I ever regretted coming into it. If the Lord shall make me an instrument of good, it is all I ask.

From Rev. J. R. Upton, Tivoli, Dubuque Co.

Mr. Upton writes from Muscatine, under date of June 7, where he was in attendance on the meeting of the General Association of Iowa.

Romish Policy.

I am located in about the center of one of the most populous counties of the State. Romanism is struggling to gain an undisputed possession, and to convert this into a stronghold for "the man of sin." Jesuitism has lost none of its cunning or activity. Within about eight miles of me are three Catholic churches, German, Irish, and French. Large settlements of these people are growing up, evidently under the direction and preconcerted plan of their Papal leaders. When land once comes into the hands of a Romanist, the cases are rare of its ever again being offered for sale to a Protestant. Papiets all appear to consider themselves commissioned to be always looking out for some Catholic purchaser, whenever a Protestant farm is for sale. Would that those who profess a purer Christianity were "as wise in their generation." I trust, however, that the friends of truth will become enlightened so as to perceive clearly the full nature and extent of the work they have before them. I find many things to encourage me upon the field I occupy. Superstition, ignorance, and sin, array formidable obstacles in the way of my success. But I trust the truth will yet prevail, and that its friends will be able, with the divine blessing, to succeed in erecting upon these beautiful prairies, the true standard of the Cross.

Various Missionary Labors.

I have, during the quarter, had five regular preaching stations; to three of which, by riding from seven to nine miles, between services, I have been able to preach as often as once in two weeks, on the Sabbath, and to the others once in four weeks. At Tivoli, we are, with the aid of $100 from the East, endeavoring to build us a small but neat house of worship, which we cannot complete before fall; but intend to use it for the Sabbath school and for meetings immediately, the outside being now nearly finished and the floors laid. The brethren are generally poor, but have "a mind to the work." Our congregations are full and attentive, and our Sabbath school, I trust, will soon be flourishing.

Cook's Settlement I preach at on each alternate Sabbath. My audience is increasing, and every thing seems externally to afford strong grounds to hope that the day is not far distant when a rich spiritual harvest will be gathered in. In this place, I have almost the entire sympathy of the young people.

Durango, for the present, does not present many encouragements for missionary labor. The members of the churches are few and suffer much, as to their worldly interests, from the entire destruction of their crops, by the floods last year. We have also had to encounter much opposition. The little church has had to pass through a sore trial, but I trust its prayers and self-denying efforts and great sufferings, will not be overlooked by Him whose compassionate eye ever rests upon the children of his love.

Buena Vista, a landing eighteen miles above Dubuque, was discovered one year ago to be a mineral locality. It then had no dwelling-house; but now it is estimated that near a hundred houses stand in the deep and shady ravine, fenced in on every side by high bluffs. I have commenced preaching there once in four weeks. It is a hard field; gambling, drinking, Sabbath-breaking, and almost every vice finds very little restraint. A Sabbath school has been started, and I trust a different state of things will soon appear.

A delightful meeting of the General Association of Iowa, has just closed here, at Muscatine. The body of brother Thompson was washed ashore here on Saturday, identified by the brethren, and buried yesterday. It had floated down the river about 60 miles, having been in the water five weeks. The cause of Home Missions never seemed dearer to me, and I believe to my people, than at the present time. What I have witnessed at this General Association, has awakened in me emotions of sincere gratitude, that God in his providence has led me and my brethren to seek a home in this western wilderness.

Death of Rev. William A. Thompson.

The solemn event referred to in the concluding paragraph of the foregoing communication, is the recovery of the remains of the Rev. WILLIAM A. THOMPSON, late pastor of the church in Port Byron, Rock Island Co., Ill., who came to his lamented death by drowning, on the 2d of May last, while on his return from a meeting of his Association at Albany, about twenty miles north of Port Byron. Mr. Thompson, being alone in his own private conveyance, the immediate circumstances attending this afflictive suspension, can never be certainly known; and the event itself was for some time shrouded in painful mystery, in consequence of his horse and vehicle having been found safely secured on the side of the stream, which he would have had a chance of crossing. There no longer remains any doubt, however, that on coming to the stream, which he found suddenly swollen by the rains, he left his horse upon the bank, and attempted himself to cross in a small boat, for the purpose of obtaining the assistance of a ferryman from the other side; and that in this attempt, more hazardous probably than he was aware, he was overcome and carried away by the violence of the current. This sad disaster has occasioned a deep and lasting sorrow, not only to the beloved family and circle of relatives, from whom the deceased was thus suddenly snatched away, but to the people of his late charge, who have lost in him an esteemed and devoted pastor, and to the whole ecclesiastical connection, of which he was a valued and efficient member.

Mr. Thompson was one of the "Iowa Band," who went out under commission from the American Home Missionary Society, in the autumn of 1848; and he labored in this connection until the time of his death; having been first, for two years, in a wide and destitute field, at Troy and vicinity, in Iowa, and afterwards in Fairfield, in the same State, for a period of five years, until 1850, when he went to Port Byron, in Illinois, separated from Iowa only by the Mississippi. In all these different fields of labor, he endured hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, subjecting himself to great self-denial and unwearied efforts in his work. His labors, during his life, were repeatedly owned and blessed from on high, and great and abiding fruits are yet to be witnessed in time, as the result of the earnest instrumentality he put forth in the planting and nourishing of churches, destined, for ages to come, to constitute the pillar and ground of the truth in that rising community.

The solemn occurrence referred to in the letter of Mr. Upton, is made the subject of the following impressive reflections by another member of the General Association, in a communication to the Protestant Recorder of the 26th ult.

"A circumstance occurred on Saturday morning, that gave great solemnity to the subsequent exercises, and made an indelible impression on every mind. The body of Rev. Mr. Thompson who was drowned five weeks before, came ashore at Muscatine, and was recognized by some of the members of the Association. It seemed a marked providence, that it should, after so long a time, and after having floated more than sixty miles in this great thoroughfare, and passing several towns, have finally been, as it were, brought to our very doors, while we were in session. It seemed to be the voice of God speaking to those with whom the deceased had been associated, and warning them to watch, and admonishing them to do with their might what their hands find to do. Funeral exercises were had in the cemetery on the Sabbath morning, early. The deceased was once a fellow laborer with us in this State, much beloved and respected, and entirely devoted to his work. Appropriate resolutions were adopted by the Association in reference to his death."

Mr. Thompson has left a widow, who went out with him from the East, cheerfully sharing in the privations and toils of a Home Missionary, and who now survives, with two small children, to mourn his early death.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. S. D. Darling, Avoca, Fond du Lac Co.

District Convention.

I recently attended the annual meeting of the Winnebago District Convention, at Stockbridge. Its members, both lay and clerical, are for the most part located in a newly settled region, living in Fond du Lac, Marquette, Winnebago, Calumet, and Brown Counties. Connected with this body are some sixteen churches. There were present some ten ministers, most or all of them members of the Convention. Among these ministers but one is an ordained pastor, viz.: Brother Porter, of Green Bay. Of these churches, but two or three at most are self-sustaining. Of this small number is the church in Stockbridge, whose members are mostly Indians, who give their minister, Rev. O. P. Clinton, a salary of $400, paying quarterly in advance.

Some of these churches have been very recently organized. Most of them are yet feeble—have to contend with obstacles which at times seem to endanger their existence. But, enjoying your sympathy and assistance, they are hopeful.

As upon the afternoon of Thursday we were gathered with these missionaries of your Board and the delegates of these infant churches, in the Mission House of the oldest church in our connection in Wisconsin, that we might hear Christ crucified preached, and with our red brethren remember him at his table, we felt that we were permitted to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. And when in the evening we again assembled, for the ordination of two brethren to the solemn yet delightful work of the christian ministry, here among these infant churches, we could truly thank God and take courage. We could thank him for the work which he is accomplishing through your agency. We could hope and believe that through the instrumentality of your Society, in some good degree, this region shall, and ere long, become spiritually as beautiful and fruitful, as, physically, it is rich and desirable.

From Rev. J. B. Preston, Berlin, Marquette Co.

Revival.

I trust it is with devout thanksgiving to God that I am permitted to report to the A. H. M. Society his goodness manifested to us as a church and people during the last quarter. Our meetings through the winter have been uniformly full and solemn, and often it seemed that a cloud of mercy was gathered over us. The first Sabbath in March, at the close of the evening service, I invited those who would esteem it a privilege to attend upon the means of grace on Monday evening, to manifest it by rising. The whole congregation arose. I appointed a meeting. The evening was stormy, and but few could attend, but among the number were those inquiring, "What shall I do to be saved?" Evening meetings were continued in succession for nearly three weeks, when I became unable to endure the labor alone. Since that time our meetings have been less frequent, and governed by circumstances. The members of the church have been revived, their graces quickened, and there has been manifested an earnest desire for the salvation of souls. There has been no contention about means or measures. Harmony in the church has prevailed. Our usual course has been, after the sermon, to invite all those who wished for personal conversation on the subject of the soul's salvation, to remain after the congregation was dismissed. From fifteen to fifty have remained. In these meetings we have witnessed the power of the Spirit of God in convincing men of sin. "I feel that I am a sinner and need salvation," has been the expression of many in the midst of us. A deep seriousness pervaded the community generally. Religion became the topic of conversation among all classes. Very little opposition has been manifested. The work has not been confined to any particular class among us. The young in the Sabbath school have felt its influence, and numbers of the older scholars have commenced lives of prayer. Heads of families have been reached, and family altars have been erected. Numbers of our youth have, we trust, consecrated themselves to God.

Fruits Gathered in.

Our communion season in April was one of deep interest to this people. Fifteen came forward professing their faith in Christ, and entered into covenant with his people. Nine of the number were heads of families. Others will unite at a future period. About the same number have joined the Methodists. The Baptists have also received additions. A great work remains to be done. We still hope and pray that multitudes may be gathered in.

There have been cases of interest to Eastern parents who have sons at the West. One interesting young man removed last fall from Maine. For four years he had been a member of a Universalist church. His praying mother, on his leaving home, presented him a Bible, as a token of her affection, with the request that he would make it the guide of his life. He refused the gift, saying, "They probably have Bibles in Wisconsin." The gift of a mother rejected, the tear that stood in her eye, her sad countenance, and her prayers, which he knew would be offered for him, followed him on his long journey, and never forsook him till his Universalism was abandoned, and he became a humble penitent at the foot of the cross.

I hope to give interesting results in my next, the Lord strengthening and guiding us in his work.

From Rev. Edward G. Miner, Prairie du Sac, Sauk Co.

Six months have now passed away since I commenced my labors under the patronage of your Society, at Prairie du Sac. I am sorry that I cannot for this period report to you much greater success than the present state of religion and ecclesiastical prosperity will justify; but in this respect we yet remain as we were when I last wrote. We have enjoyed no revival. The word preached has not, so far, so profited as to bring forth fruit unto eternal life. And the number of our "little flock" has not increased beyond its original catalogue.

But while I am compelled to say this, and to say it sorrowfully, I at the same time believe some good has been done. There is evidently a growing interest in the community for Sabbath-day worship. During the winter there has been a sufficient number of seats to accommodate all who were disposed to come to church, but now it is becoming necessary to fill up a vacancy which had been left at the time the building was erected, with additional slips. Families from the lower village, about a mile distant, and also from the adjacent prairie, who have not before attended, are now seeking slips, intending to become regular worshippers.

The main opposition to the advance of evangelical truth here is Universalism. It is estimated that full half of the upper village are of this sect; and it is reported that they intend erecting during the summer a church edifice, though they have no organized society nor any minister. The opposition from this source is indeed strong, and most alarming evils are occasioned by it, especially in ensnaring the young, and awakening in them prejudices against the truth as it is in Jesus.

A False Refuge swept away.

A few days ago I visited a young man, then upon his dying bed, whose life I was aware had been passed in impenitence and without alarm as regards his future condition, by reason of the false hopes of Universalism. He was now so far reduced in strength, however, that it was impossible to hold a protracted conversation with him. After sitting, therefore, a few moments in comparative silence, I proposed to close the interview by offering prayer in his behalf. But, to my astonishment, I was denied the privilege, and was compelled to leave him in that hopeless condition of prayerlessness and hardness of heart. I turned away and bent my steps homeward, expecting that before I could call again he would be beyond the reach of hope. But life continued, and I visited him a second time.

I had no sooner entered his chamber and seated myself, than he beckoned me to his bedside. I went; and in a low whisper he requested me to pray. I knelt down as near to him as convenient, and commended his soul earnestly to God for forgiveness and reconciliation. I afterwards inquired of him what his feelings then were, especially in view of the work of Christ in his behalf, and the ground of his hopes for future blessedness. He said that he felt himself a sinner, and had prayed with all earnestness since I first visited him, that he might be delivered from the wrath to come and made an heir of heaven through the redemption of his Saviour. He believed himself to be in a lost condition, unless forgiven of God. With a few words of instruction and encouragement I withdrew. I called a third time, but he was then beyond the power of speech, and the next day he died. I was requested to preach a sermon at his funeral. This I did to a large assembly, and to the best of my endeavor sought to point out the necessity of an immediate preparation for death, and to make this providence of God a monitor and a warning.

*From Rev. J. C. Sherwin, La Crosse,

This place is situated on the Mississippi, about 90 miles above Prairie du Chien, and is the county town of the newly-organized county of the same name. Occupying one of the most beautiful sites on the river, and being the most convenient depot for the produce of the rich lands lying upon the La Crosse and Black rivers, it promises soon to become a place of much importance. In June 1851, it contained but half a dozen houses, and the Winnebago Indians, whose favorite haunt it had been, were still lingering around it. In July of the present year, one of the Secretaries of the Society, having occasion to visit this region, found here a village of between 400 and 500 inhabitants, with several evangelical churches, and one house of worship nearly completed. The little flock gathered here by the Missionary, though recently thinned by death, has enjoyed many tokens of divine favor, and is exerting a wide and happy influence in the region around. The aspect of this community, as well as the statements in the following communication, exhibits the importance of making prompt and efficient efforts to mold the character of those new settlements with Gospel influence. Mr. Sherwin writes:

Feeling obliged, on account of impaired health, to leave the church and society on the Western Reserve, Ohio, over which I was settled as pastor in the fall of 1840, I determined to put myself into some part of this northwestern field, where the kind of labor which demands more exposure in the open air, might be favorable to the recovery of health, and where also I deemed it of the first importance, to have an early concentration of religious influences. While passing up the river with the design of spending the winter at some point above, my attention was earnestly called to this place by a gentleman of the Baptist denomination, who has approved himself a truly good man, in his different relations as a citizen and a Christian. Against the remonstrances of several friends who were accompanying me, I consented to land my family and goods, with the purpose of remaining a single week, to settle the question of duty in relation to a more permanent settlement. I found the circumstances so favorable for making this an important center of influence, that the question of remaining was resolved into the single and definite inquiry, Do the wishes of the people demand my continuance among them? Their wishes were readily and strongly expressed, and up to this time, I have reason to believe, the line of duty has been followed.

As I suggested in a previous letter, we have been favored with the special presence of the Holy Spirit. Christians have been much quickened in their graces, and several among the impenitent have been hopefully converted. Our church was organized in January, with twelve members, and since that time, ten others have been added. Others still are waiting to unite with us at the earliest opportunity. The Trustees of the Society are already entering upon measures to secure the early erection of a house of worship, when we hope more fully to carry out our plans of usefulness.

I have deemed it important to bestow my labors mainly upon this place, particularly on the Sabbath. Consequently, I have been absent but two Sabbaths since my first arrival; one of these was spent in a rude tent with five others, during an exploring tour in the Sioux country, which was undertaken with the view of ascertaining the value of some points, both in the interior and on the river, as centers of influence. We probably constituted the first congregation of white men that ever spent a Sabbath in that part of the Indian country, with an acknowledgment, in religious services, of man's high obligations to God. There was something peculiarly interesting in looking around upon the wilderness, with the thought that soon, these wide-spread plains will yield a rich reward to the industry of white men, and with the prayer that the whole country may be possessed in the name of Jesus, the sinner's friend. Regarding it important to introduce the Gospel at the first beginning of settlements of promise, I have been preaching at one point in the rude hut of the claimant, where, at first, my congregation consisted of 20 men, who had neither wives nor children on their new fields to participate with them in any kind of services. I had been accustomed to a large congregation when I first settled in the ministry; but I scarcely ever preached with a deeper conviction of the importance of faithfulness, than when preaching to this small number of men, who are making the first beginnings in a wild country. I have a standing promise to preach at two other points as soon as the weather will admit of worship in the open air, or a house is fitted to hold an audience.

At one of these latter points (Minnesota City), there are already about one hundred persons, who have recently arrived, and who are expecting an immediate addition of about an equal number. Ten days ago there was in this town but one small board hut, in which thirteen men could lie down by having a lower and an upper tier as in steamboats.

Since the above was written, the population of Minnesota City has increased to nearly 400.

A New Field.

The church here numbered but eight a month since; but at a communion season recently, eight were received by letter, and two by examination, which makes our number now eighteen, with a fair prospect of a still further increase. I think this an interesting field for missionary effort. It is a rural district, lying adjacent to Keokuk, Iowa, and extending northward to Nauvoo, and is a beautiful farming region. The high lands approach boldly to the river on either side, with low and sloping bluffs, easy of ascent and descent, in many places, by teams, with the swift current of the lower rapids of the Mississippi washing their bases. From one to two miles from the river, the country is covered with timber, opening into beautiful prairies extending eastward farther than the eye can reach, with groves of timber reaching in the same direction, along the creeks and little streams which make their way from the interior, over their pebbly beds, to lose themselves in the Father of Waters. Most of these prairies are yet unsettled, and the whole country is still new.

The Mormons and their depredations have been the cause of the backwardness in the settlement of this desirable country; but it is now fast filling up with population. My congregations are as large as the school houses we worship in will contain, and we hope soon to have something to say about Sabbath schools.

From Rev. James H. Baldwin, Troy Grove, La Salle Co.

Light Breaking in.

I have preached regularly twice and three times on alternate Sabbaths, and at three different stations. We are about opening Sabbath schools at each station. On Waltham Ridge a school has been in existence during the summer season, for several years. At Troy Grove, where I now live, we organized a Sabbath school two years since, but for want of teachers and superintendents, who felt an appropriate interest, the school soon expired. It was impossible for me to attend on account of other engagements. We are now making a new effort here, and the prospects are flattering. We hope to have a large school, a new library, &c., and to gather the young people into Bible classes. This is truly missionary ground. There are three hundred inhabitants in the village, and more in the surrounding country, and yet, not more than from 40 to 80 attend preaching on the Sabbath. The Sabbath, in various ways, is desecrated. Still, as the fair weather approaches, our congregation is much enlarged and shows signs of growing interest. Our place of worship is small and uncomfortable, and we cannot expect the people to come out uniformly to stand out of doors. We are urging forward our new house of worship, and hope this fall to have it ready for dedication. It will be an event which will, no doubt, mark a new era in the history of this village. We have reason to hope that it will be marked by the prosperity of religion. It has cost us a two-years struggle, under complicated discouragements; but we believe it will be worth all it has cost.

A brighter day seems dawning upon this dark, DARK field. The light seems breaking, and the moral night, which for some years has reigned over this town, is now beginning to yield its empire. We are encouraged and hope with trembling; yet we cannot but hope that Heaven looks propitiously upon us, and is giving us unmistakable signs of better days.

Fruits of the Spirit.

As I was a Commissioner to our General Assembly, I did not make my report at the usual time. Previous to my leaving, as now, there were some things of an interesting nature. Such a disposition to hear the word preached, I have not known in the West. More than a hundred and thirty were added to our different churches; and our own received such an accession as to promise more permanency and give greater interest to our prayer meetings. It was most interesting to notice how the act of believing was followed by the faithful discharge of every duty. One man restored, first, $24, and in another case $40, of what he considered unjust gains, and devoted the energies of his great mind to the service of God. One such man truly converted is worth more than gold and silver.

From another Missionary's Report.

Seed Springing up.

A few days ago I received a letter from a member of the Hope Church, Wabash Co., earnestly requesting me to visit them. It seems that the Spirit of God has been poured out upon them, and some persons hitherto hardened in irreligion or dead in mere formality, have been aroused to a sense of their danger. In a former instance, the seed which Brother Hawes scattered upon the field, germinated after he was obliged to leave them; and there is the appearance of the same state of things since I was constrained to leave them. I sent some appointments for preaching, and intend, God willing, to visit them shortly.

From Rev. John Hawks, Newport, Vermillion Co.

A death-bed Repentance.

A very interesting case of death-bed repentance occurred here, which perhaps I ought not to omit.

While down the river about sixteen miles, assisting a brother, a very urgent telegraphic despatch came, requesting me to return immediately, as Mrs. C. was very sick and wished to see me. In the morning I returned and found her, as her friends supposed, in a dying state. When I came to the bed-side she seized my arm in frenzy, and seemed to throw herself upon me for salvation, instead of the Lord Jesus Christ. I told her plainly I could do nothing for her; that she must not trust to me. I prayed with her and gave her the best advice I could and left her. In a day or two I returned to town again and called to see her. I found her still living and a little better. She said her burden was not removed. I told her that the fear of death would not prepare her to receive pardon. It must be a sense of her sins. I composed her mind as much as possible, and sang the hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood," which seemed to quiet her mind very much, which was greatly agitated. I sang it in part the second time, and then prayed with her. While praying she broke out in the most rapturous expressions of ecstasy; and began to exhort her brother and sisters to come to Christ. She said that the burden was all gone, and that Christ was precious to her. I was absent from town when she died, but was told that she died happy. When in health she and her husband were both confirmed Universalists. I was anxious to know why she sent for me at such a distance, when there were others in town of far more experience than myself. She referred to the fact, that I had had some conversation with her on the subject of religion some time previous, and that her mind had been troubled ever since.

Miscellaneous.

Happy deaths of the Wives of Missionaries.

It is our sad duty, in the present number, to record the deaths of several of the wives of our beloved missionaries, laboring in the distant West. The communications which follow, from the brethren who have been thus bereaved, will be read with deep and sympathizing interest by many of the friends of Zion. It is true that in the testimony here borne to the piety and varied excellence of these devoted women, we listen to the voice of a tender and partial affection. We have reason to know, however, that it contains no undeserved or extravagant adulation; while its utterances, coming as they do, fresh from the fountains of sorrow, may move us, as no voice of "the stranger" could do, to "weep with those who weep."

It has often been remarked, in the case of our Foreign Missionaries, both male and female, that their consecration to a life of christian zeal and self denial among the heathen, has prepared them for unspeakable peace and joy in death. We think the same thing has been equally illustrated in the Home Missionary;—and especially in the wife of the Missionary, who, for the love of Christ and the salvation of souls, leaves a home of tenderness and refinement at the East, to wear herself out amidst the hardships and privations of our infant settlements. The more an active and sincere piety, is called into exercise by the severer duties and trials of life, wherever the sphere of action may lie, the surer and richer, may we expect, will be the consolations of the dying hour.

Death of Mrs. Howe, wife of Rev. Hiram R. Howe, Pine Grove, Gallia Co., O.

The last quarter has been one of trial and bereavement to this church, and especially to myself and family. The cloud which has for months hung in the distance, threatening our earthly prospects, has at length passed over us, and the mother is taken, and our house left unto us desolate. Mrs. Howe has been threatened with a pulmonary affection since last fall; still, when she commenced coughing, we hoped it was only the effect of a slight cold, which she took while on our way to the meeting of Synod last September, from which we hoped she would shortly recover. But our hopes were too soon turned to fears. As the winter advanced, the disease fastened upon her lungs, and although every means within our reach was employed to arrest it, it was only checked for a time, to renew its attack on the citadel of life with renewed strength and malignity.

But, in the midst of our grief, our hearts were cheered with the blessed assurance that, "while the outward man was perishing, the inward man was renewed day by day." The power of divine grace was remarkably displayed in the last days of my dear wife. She has left us scarcely any thing to regret but her loss. All possible preparation for leaving the world seemed to have been made, weeks before her death. At a prayer meeting, held at our house on the Sabbath, two and a half weeks before the closing scene, she took an affectionate leave of the brethren and sisters of the church, giving them her prayers and counsels, and expressing her undying attachment to them, and the precious cause of Christ. This, she afterward told me, was the day in which she let go the world and everything in it. She said she had given her little son, her only child, to the Lord, and felt perfectly satisfied that all would be well with him. He is now near two years old. She said, moreover, that she had committed her husband and the remaining members of the family, three daughters, children of two former wives, to the care of a kind Providence. And from that painful, yet joyous day, she seemed to possess her soul in perfect peace, never once expressing the least desire again to possess the things she had relinquished, or to return to the world, of which she had now taken a final adieu.

On the next Sabbath she requested that a few Christian friends should be called in, that she might once more, and for the last time, partake of the emblems of her Saviour's death.

As there was no minister near, it became necessary that these hands should minister those emblems to my dying wife; under the full assurance that she would no more drink of that cup till she should drink it new in her Father's kingdom.

Such scenes and such trials await the Western Missionary. She often spoke of this precious season afterwards. It seemed to bring her near "the General Assembly and Church of the first born in Heaven." She felt as though she was almost home. From this time she appeared to lie passive in the hands of her Redeemer, or quietly awaiting his will.

On the morning of the 16th ult. (June 16th), the solemn, and yet pleasing summons came, which remanded her ransomed spirit to God who gave it. But our prayer was heard; no groans, no convulsions attended the happy spirit's escape from its crumbling tenement of clay. Claspings both my hands in hers, in a few minutes she sweetly fell asleep, to wake no more till the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall awake.

This has been an expensive mission to the Church. It has cost the lives of three precious daughters of Zion. But much more costly has it been to me. Three dear companions, who once prayed, and labored, and wept with me on this field, now sleep side by side in the same sacred retreat. Ah, how many, how solemn, how precious the recollections which spring from those graves! One of these precious ones was born in Massachusetts; another in the City of London; another in this State; but all have found a resting-place here, in the same burying-ground, and each with an infant at her side.

In the midst of these scenes of sickness and death, I have been wonderfully sustained in body and in mind. I have been in the pulpit every Sabbath except one, and have preached on all except two. Now that the intensity of the excitement is passing off, I find myself very feeble.

Death of Mrs. Waters, wife of Rev. Simeon Waters, Mt. Pleasant, Henry Co., Iowa.

This day closes six months of my present commission, and three since my last report. To me the period has been one of change—of deep affliction; and in my work, one of some advancement. My dear companion was nurtured in a family circle which was a school of piety. Her moral and religious opinions were a fountain whence flowed all her thoughts, words, and actions. Principle and duty, justice, humanity and love were her life and soul. To these may be added the most ready adaptation to all the varying circumstances and conditions of society; a highly cultivated, refined, and fertile mind; keen and quick susceptibilities; a gentle and pleasing nature, with attachments ardent, unvarying and strong; and intelligence far beyond her years, and extending to almost every thing within the scope of ordinary human knowledge. She was but twenty three years of age: and to me, in a country so new, where such specimens of mind and heart are rare, she was my all of society—the life and light of my home. But she has gone and left me, with a little child, to mourn her loss. I am now alone. Oh, what should we do without those sources of consolation—the hopes of eternal life through a crucified Redeemer! Frail and weak in body beyond all seeming possibility, and still life remain, her mind continued in all its unclouded strength and vigor until the last breath. Her firm trust in God, the undisturbed serenity and strength of faith and hope with which she cast her eyes on the coming state, and laid hold on immortality, were truly wonderful, and produced a deep impression on this community. Nothing could move the placid calmness of her soul. She seemed like one invited to meet friends, yet friends of celestial mold and temper, whose society was so sweet, pure, and exalted, that all she left behind could hardly command one parting thought. It is consoling to feel that what to me is so trying and great a loss, is to her infinite gain; that while she cannot come back to me, yet I may again see her, and that she waits to meet me in that happy land. I hope and pray that God may sanctify this dispensation to my spiritual good, and that henceforth I may be more faithful to prepare, and to induce others to prepare, by a life like hers, for the same serene hopes in death, and the same blissful immortality.

Death of Mrs. Hill, wife of Rev. James J. Hill, Albany, Whitesides Co., Illinois.

The great, and to me, most melancholy event of the last quarter has been the instantaneous and mysterious removal of my beloved and faithful wife, by death; by which my house and heart have been left unto me desolate. She was gifted both by nature and by grace—a good scholar and a ripe Christian. She possessed rare traits and virtues, which won the universal respect, esteem, and affection of all who knew her. She had a large and a warm heart, of quick and generous impulses. Wisdom and prudence, life, light and love were beautifully blended in her character, and shone forth conspicuously in her deep, uniform, consistent and growing piety. She was a patient, persevering, indefatigable Home Missionary. Her piety was ardent, cheerful, hopeful, active, happy. Her earthly happiness consisted in making her home, her friends, and all about her happy.

I scarcely need, therefore, to tell you with what fervency she interceded for this church and people, how her heart was burdened with deep, and earnest, and anxious desires for the prosperity of Zion and the salvation of the ungodly, and with what faith, and hope, and zeal, she labored for their temporal, spiritual, and eternal good. She assisted, and participated with me, in one precious work of grace here; besides aiding me in laying the foundations of five churches in Northern Iowa, and gathering into them the fruits of four revivals of religion.

Justice, gratitude, and affection prompt me thus to associate her name with mine, in these delightful scenes and labors in the cause of Christ, in which we have been linked together, and in which I have been so much assisted, sustained, and encouraged by her tender sympathies, cheering counsels, and fervent prayers.

But now it has pleased the Great Head of the Church, the only wise God, to remove her from me, and to leave me to toil alone. I shall see her smiling face, and hear her cheerful voice no more. I shall no longer enjoy the comfort of her presence, nor the benefit of her counsels. But I trust her many prayers, which are kept as odors in golden vials, will now be poured out before the throne of God; and we shall all rejoice in seeing sinners in this place born again to a new and endless life.

The people here will long remember the stamp of her character, and the spirit and type of her piety. Though dead, she yet speaks; her influence is still felt; her light yet shines; her example still lives. Her death, however, is an unspeakable loss to her family, to her friends, and to the cause of Christ.

I cannot see why my Heavenly Father should so deeply afflict me, except it be to make me more sanctified and useful. If this is his design, I hope it is beginning to be accomplished. I think I have been made more fully acquainted with the consolations of the Gospel, and have been taught from my own experience how to feel for, and sympathize with the afflicted. I preached last Sabbath on the benefits of affliction to the minister of Christ. I trust that my recent and sore bereavement will qualify me better for this delicate and difficult part of my work. I think, too, that the Lord's dealings with us have not only been needful and profitable to me, but beneficial to this bereaved church. Our congregations of late, have been more full, solemn, earnest, and tender. I have no doubt but that these solemn and special providences are preparing the way of the Lord in the hearts of this people. If it please God thus to make this bereavement a benefit to me, and a means of grace and salvation to this people, I am content. I think I can truly say, "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight."

Death of Mrs. Woodward, wife of Rev. G. S. Woodward, Parkville, Platte Co., Missouri.

This has been the saddest and most melancholy quarter I have experienced since I have been connected with your Society. During these three months I have seen my dear wife sicken and die. She has been my counselor and support ever since I have been in this far off West. But a kind Providence has seen fit, in his inscrutable wisdom, to leave me lonely and desolate.

We came to the West, under a commission from your Society, nearly four years ago. We were located in this town, a place then just started, dotted here and there with log cabins; but God has blessed our labors, and in the rapid growth of the town we have had reason to feel that God has caused our little church to grow. We have had two powerful revivals, increasing our numbers ten fold. We have had built for us a snug and commodious little parsonage; and we had been living in it but a few months, when God called to himself the partner of my joys and sorrows. It is now leased to another family. Every thing about me looks dreary; for with every good work in which I have been engaged, my wife has been a sharer.

I do not complain, for I feel that God's grace is sufficient, even in this dark hour of affliction. I trust he will make the way clear before me. Two children, a little girl two years old, and a babe, a boy five months old, are left to my charge;—a charge to which I feel entirely incompetent.

Mrs. Woodward died of a rapid consumption. Three weeks after she took her bed, she was a corpse. Though she suffered much, she was always patient and happy. She was well aware that she must die; but death to her had no terrors.

"Death, of its sting disarm'd, she knew no fear,
And tasted heaven, even when she lingered here.
Oh happy saint! May we like thee be blest,
In life be faithful, and in death find rest!"

She had no regrets that she had given her life to the missionary work,—leaving home and home friends thousands of miles behind. The hour of her happy departure I shall never forget. When she found death stealing upon her, she broke out, in those delightful words—

"When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies,
I'll bid farewell to every fear,
And wipe my weeping eyes"

She seemed to see the Saviour beckoning her home.

She died on the 28th day of June. She was born and educated in Maine.

Death of Mrs. Andrus, wife of Rev. Elizur Andrus, Keelersville, Van Buren Co., Michigan.

The last three months, ending at this date, has been a time of severe trial and affliction to your missionary. Immediately after my March report, my companion was taken violently ill. Her disease soon assumed the type of quick consumption, and no medical skill seemed to arrest its fearful and rapid progress. She was a great sufferer during her sickness, but during all her pain the blessed Saviour was near to soothe and comfort her. Her faith and hope seemed to grow more firm as she drew near the dark valley and shadow of death. On the 31st day of May, at half past 5 o'clock, A. M., her happy spirit took its flight with triumphant hope and faith, to dwell for ever with the Lord; and, on the same day on which my report dates, her body was laid in the tomb, to await in hope the sound of the last trump.

In all my trial the Lord has sustained me, and I can still say, He doeth all things well, blessed be his holy name.

Mrs. Johnson, the wife of Rev. Asa Johnson, of Peru, Miami county, Indiana, died on the 23d of March, after a lingering and distressing sickness. Our limits do not permit the publication of Mr. Johnson's letter, at length.

She early consecrated herself to Christ, and kept herself consecrated to him,

Her love to the cause of the Redeemer, would not permit her to spare herself, as many do. She wore herself out in his service and regretted it not. She died in her 44th year, peacefully, joyfully, triumphantly; having been the devoted wife and fellow laborer of your Missionary nearly twenty two years.

Life and Labors of Dr. Worcester.

We are happy to acknowledge, as a donation to the library of the American Home Missionary Society from the respected author, the receipt of a copy of the Memoirs of Dr. SAMUEL WORCESTER, lately issued from the press of Messrs. Crocker and Brewster, of Boston. The work is entitled:

The Life and Labors of Rev. SAMUEL WORCESTER, D. D., former Pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Salem, Mass.; by his Son, SAMUEL M. WORCESTER, D. D., present Pastor of the Tabernacle Church.

It is in two volumes, large duodecimo, and is accompanied by an expressive likeness of that man of God whose name has become so extensively known and honored in the churches. These volumes, while they constitute a most valuable addition to our stock of biographical literature, comprehend, at the same time, a great amount of important information respecting the movements of that pregnant period of our social and religious history, in which our Home and Foreign Missions had their origin. In the public life and labors of Dr. Worcester, viewed in their living connections, as here graphically set forth, with the most prominent men and stirring incidents of the age to which he belonged, there lies a plain and beautiful illustration of the essential unity of the spirit of missions; whether that spirit finds its development in the home or the foreign field,—whether it seeks the salvation of the benighted pagan and idolator, or of the perverted and heedless wanderer from the Christian fold. The history of the earlier labors which he performed, and of the incipient forms of associated benevolent action in New England with which he was variously connected, shows the springing up of our two great missionary organizations to have been virtually identical; and that they became distinct in their carrying out, only as the suddenly increasing magnitude of each necessarily demanded a more convenient division of labor.

The friends of missions in Massachusetts were first associated in the "Massachusetts Missionary Society," whose object it was, as defined in the Constitution, adopted May 28, 1799, "To diffuse the knowledge of the Gospel among the heathens, as well as other people, in the remote parts of our country, where Christ is seldom or never preached." To this was added, a few years later, —"and through more distant regions of the earth, as circumstances shall invite, and the ability of the Society shall admit." Of the Massachusetts Missionary Magazine, issued as the organ of this Society, the biographer of Dr. Worcester justly observes: "It had the same foreign missionary spirit and general character that may now be seen in the Missionary Herald. But," he adds, "if any one would see an amazing contrast and a most cheering demonstration of an immense progress, let him read some of the last numbers of the Herald of the A. B. C. F. M., and some of the first of the Magazine of the Massachusetts Missionary Society. And let him compare, also, the Massachusetts Missionary Society, in 1801, with its two or three missionaries a part of the year, with the present American Home Missionary Society, in 1851, with its more than one thousand missionaries, from the Aroostook to Oregon and California."

The friends of missions in this country, in looking back over the period of half a century, which this interesting piece of biography and history so felicitously brings up into the retrospect, will have many thoughts like those of Jacob, when he said, "With my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become two bands!" Our missions, which fifty years ago, began to be planted in feebleness and fear, are now, whether we consider the influence and strength enlisted and organized for their support, or the multitude of laborers in the home and foreign field, become two great and noble armies, sent forth, under the commission from the King of Kings, to win the nation and the world to Christ.

We have no space to enlarge upon other very important matters illustrated in this work, or to attempt any analysis of its merits, or the manner of its execution, as a whole. It will be found highly interesting and instructive on a great variety of points which belong to our unwritten ecclesiastical history, as well as to the development of what are now some of the grand characteristics of the age. We could wish that this faithful and discriminating record of the life and labors of Dr. Worcester might be placed in the library of every one of our Home Missionaries,—as doubtless all the Missionaries of the American Board will in some way be put in possession of it. Any friend to Home Missions, to whom God should give the heart and hand to such an act of liberality, would ultimately confer a benefit upon the churches, through their ministers, beyond our power to estimate.

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL, Mark xvi. 15.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

VOL. XXV.

OCTOBER, 1852.

NO. 6.

The American Church.

THIS is the general title of a Discourse by Rev. LEONARD BACON, D. D., of New Haven, Ct., preached in the cities of New York and Brooklyn during the season of the Anniversaries, in May last, in behalf of the American Home Missionary Society. This able discourse, listened to with profound interest in the delivery, is now published by the Society, and will be read with instruction and pleasure by all intelligent observers of the causes operating so auspiciously in this country, to work out the great problem of a truly Christian Civilization. It is founded on Titus, 1: 5.—That thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee. This, and other passages of the same sort, the preacher considers as describing “one essential point in the primitive propagation of the Gospel.” His view is concisely given in the following introductory paragraph, designed to unfold the import of the text:

In the great island of Crete, Paul seems to have labored in person; and he seems to have been interrupted and called away before the ordinary plan of his operations had been carried out. Some arrangements were still wanting, which Titus was expected to supply. In every town or local community where converts had been made, he was to organize the Christian fellowship by instituting elders, the proper officers of a stated worshiping assembly. In other words, the work for which the Apostle had left him in Crete was that of constituting local churches, and so completing the introduction of the Gospel there. The same thing was done wherever the Apostles performed their office. By the establishment of Churches—local Christian societies for worship and for religious instruction and discipline—Christianity became something more than a matter of individual opinion, conviction and experience; something more than a merely domestic influence, hallowing in God’s name the relations of household love and duty; something more than a new element infused into literature and philosophy, and taking effect upon the progress of human intelligence from age to age. It became an incorporated and organized religion, with its own arrangements and institutions for self-perpetuation, and for aggressive influence. Christianity, establishing itself in local churches, became a new and social institute within the State, yet not of it; a new order and form of human association, with an independent life of its own, and yet connected by a relation of constant action and reaction with that old order of things into which it had been cast.

In this connection, Dr. Bacon adverts to the work in which this Society is engaged.

The American Home Missionary Society devotes itself to a work of the same kind as that for which Titus was left in Crete. It has for its own special department of effort, on the broad field of christian activity in our country, not merely the work of diffusing christian knowledge, not merely the work of winning individuals to faith in Christ, not merely the work of multiplying and sending abroad the living preachers of the Gospel, but the work of planting Christianity as an organized religion and an organizing power. Books, however excellent, and however profusely distributed; the itinerant and desultory preaching of the Gospel, whether by book-venders and tract-distributors, or by professional and authenticated ministers of the word; Sunday-schools with their apparatus of libraries, teachers, and traveling missionaries, may coöperate powerfully for the advancement of christian knowledge and experience; but such efforts, if they are all, work no organic change in society. Another kind of effort must accompany them, or follow them, to "set in order the things that are wanting," or else, so far as permanent influence is concerned, their labor is in vain.

Allow me to say, in this place, that, in respect to ecclesiastical arrangements, the Home Missionary enterprise, as represented by the Society for which this service is performed, is not a sectarian undertaking. It attempts nothing more than to establish local churches—churches in the New Testament sense of the word—organized parochial societies of christian people, for the support of public worship, and for the various duties of christian neighborhood and communion. With the internal arrangements of these churches for the management of their own ecclesiastical affairs, with the relations which associated churches may see fit to establish among themselves for the sake of mutual recognition and intercourse, or of mutual helpfulness and authority, it does not intermeddle. The particular church may or may not conduct its own affairs on purely democratic principles; it may or may not incorporate itself with some larger and more comprehensive organization; the Home Missionary Society does not concern itself with such questions. The plan of our great charity is essentially opposed to the denominational or sectarian spirit. So long as the churches which it plants, or which it aids in the period of their weakness, are evangelical in worship and doctrine, holding that view of the christian system of which the word evangelical has become, in modern times, the recognized and current designation; so long as they are essentially self-governed, and not priest-governed; so long as they do not formally exclude from fellowship with them the great body of churches on which this charity depends for its resources, so long it cares not what regulations and arrangements, or what denominational standards may be adopted by any particular congregation. It has to do, not with the extension of organized sects or denominations, but only with single churches, local churches. As a purely American institution, called into existence by an exigency in the growth of this great American people, and operating to extend the dominion of Christ over all the territory of our Union, it devotes itself to the one work of setting up Christianity in the form of local christian churches, that shall operate from age to age upon the character and destiny of the countless millions of our population.

Here the subject of the discourse opens, which is more fully stated thus:

THE CHRISTIAN INSTITUTION OF LOCAL CHURCHES, AS RELATED TO OUR AMERICAN CIVILIZATION.

The first position taken is, that "religion, embodied in religious institutions, is an essential and potent element in every form of civilization." Next the preacher calls to mind "the distinctive characteristics of our American civilization," and shows by a few great outlines, "how it differs from the civilization of other ages, and from the existing civilization of other countries." The substance of this portion of the discourse may be readily apprehended by our readers; but a single passage, touching the manner in which the vast immigrant population coming to our shores becomes speedily Americanized, is too beautiful to be withheld.

We see an unparalleled diffusion of intelligence and of the spirit of inquiry and free thought, stimulated continually by the genius and working of our political institutions. We see twenty five millions of people, spread over a territory of various and boundless resources, and trained to the habit of relying on themselves rather than on the government for guidance and control, and of exercising their own faculties of thought and private judgment on matters of public, not less than private interest. We see this teeming population increasing every year by a stupendous immigration from all regions of the ancient world; the immigrant myriads bringing with them from beyond the ocean their own languages and fashions, and their own forms of religion or of irreligion, yet mingling with the mighty mass, unable to resist its tendencies, and slowly but surely losing their foreign peculiarities,—as the waters of the Mississippi, poured into the Gulf and the Atlantic, and slowly mingling with the rolling tides, lose their freshness, deposit the soil that they have brought from distant plains and mountains, and are gradually lost and undistinguishable in the world-embracing ocean, without discoloring by one shade or turbid stain its boundless azure.

After illustrating these topics, Dr. Bacon takes the position, that "in our country, and under our social and civil organization, the strength of free and Protestant Christianity, considered as an organized religion and an organizing power, must reside in local and self-governed churches." This is established, first, by a reference to the identity of Protestant Evangelical Christianity in this country, in its beginning and growth, and its present position and influence, with the origin and progress, the prosperity and efficiency of local churches,"—and, second, by the fact, that "in all ecclesiastical organizations within the scope of our American civilization, there is a steady tendency towards the increase of what we may call the parochial element in ecclesiastical order, as opposed to the element of consolidation."

Our remaining extracts will be taken from the first of these illustrations, and from the concluding sentences of the discourse:

It is worthy of notice that the history of the origin and progress of christian institutions in this country, hitherto, is almost wholly bound up in the history of the origin and growth of local churches. In New England, as you are well aware—which has had, by its religious and political institutions, and by the character which those institutions have wrought into its people, so wide an influence upon the political and religious organization of the country as a whole—the institution of local churches, self-constituted and self-governed, was at first the end for which every thing else was instituted. The Puritan emigration from old England was an emigration for the express purpose of founding in the wilderness local, separate, independent churches, which should control the founding of every thing else; and around which, as so many distinct centers of vital power, there should arise the laws and magistracies, the order, the industry, the justice, the popular virtue, the universal education and intelligence, the frugal plenty, and all the stern and saintly beauty of a Puritan civilization. Whatever there is in New England that warms the heart of the New Englander with glad and reverent affection at the thought of her gray rocks and green hillsides, when his filial regards turn eastward from the prairies, or from beyond the Rocky mountains,—is most intimately associated with the influence of these New England churches. Whatever errors there may have been in the ancient legislation there, whatever violations of the principle of religious liberty, whatever unwise attempts to make men religious, and to keep them in the right ways of thinking by the force of law, there was never in those Puritan commonwealths a centralization of ecclesiastical power; never a priestly corporation independent of the people; never any religious organization higher or stronger than that of local churches; and at this moment all the embodied and organized religious influence there, is summed up in the fact, that in every township, and in every parochial district, the local church is present, the organized congregation of free christian men, the self-governed christian society, with its stated worship, with its house of prayer, with its teaching ministry, and with all its apparatus of instruction and influence.

But I would not be understood as speaking of that particular form of church-order which is called Congregationalism, or as claiming for the churches thus denominated a special advantage, in this respect, over churches bearing other names. What was the origin of Presbyterianism on our soil? It did not begin here, as it began under the hands of the Reformers in Scotland, in a General Assembly, distributing and parceling itself out into synods and presbyteries, and ending in the organization of parochial arrangements. On the contrary, it began in local, separate, Presbyterian congregations, each with its own arrangements for worship, discipline, and the ministry of the word; and it was the voluntary confederation of congregations previously independent of each other, which gave being to presbyteries, synods and general assemblies. So with other churches of similar faith and order, but of a different genealogy—the Reformed Dutch, the German Reformed, the Lutheran,—trace their history back to its earliest sources, and, in each instance, you find a particular congregation in one place, and another particular congregation in another place, and then another and another, till at last these many congregations, drawn together by special affinities of faith and order, of ancestral feeling and perhaps of language, are confederated for mutual helpfulness in classical and synodical assemblies. But in all these instances, and even in others which are very unlike to these in some respects, but of which I could not speak without entering into explanations which the limits of this discourse preclude, the strength of the organization, its efficiency in maintaining and extending the kingdom of Christ, and especially the efficiency with which it dispenses the Gospel, as a vital and organizing force in society, molding the character of the people, the efficacy with which it works to carry into households, and into the experience of individual souls, the light and life of holiness, must be found, not in its supposed or attempted centralization of power, but in the strength, the number, and the spiritual health and activity of its local churches. And to a thinking, generous, christian mind, the value of all these ecclesiastical confederations, by whatever name they may be called, and whatever may be the theory on which they are constituted, lies in their ability to subserve the true interests, and to promote the legitimate efficiency, of parochial churches, and to provide for the multiplication of such churches in a just proportion to the wants of the population. The presbytery, the consociation, the classis, the convention, the synod, is for the churches; not the churches for it. Its strength is not in itself, but in the churches whose confederation has created it. Its value is measured exactly by what it contributes to their edification and efficiency. If the churches which it includes are, by virtue of their relation to it, more peaceful, more prosperous, more potent in their local influence, then it answers a legitimate and important purpose, and deserves to be honored accordingly. But if, instead of this, the churches gather from it only a thorny harvest of strife and debate; or if it becomes a mere arena for feats of logical and theological gladiatorship, then let Diotrephes admire it and rejoice in it as he may, it answers no good end, and forfeits its right to existence.

Under the last head of the discourse the preacher presents a graphic and delightful picture of the results of our entire system of social organization, including both the political and the religious element, in their natural harmony and mutual dependence. With an eloquent and forcible allusion, then, to the blighting effect of an opposite system upon all this, as seen in the spiritual despotism of the Papal Church, and to the "gigantic efforts which that system is making to achieve for itself the dominion on this hallowed soil," he thus concludes:

With such an enemy working against us—an enemy so powerful in his resources, so unwearied in his diligence, and so deadly in his hostility to all that we value for ourselves, or hope for in behalf of our children, and our country, and the world,—we are to "set in order the things that are wanting," and to spread the organized form and the organizing spirit of free and pure Christianity, from beautiful New England, from this imperial New York, from the Atlantic shore adorned with cities to which the commerce of the world brings riches, westward through the disappearing forests, westward over the prairies, westward still, beyond the mountains so soon to be pierced and threaded by the iron path of commerce, westward even to where our remotest west, in its golden pride, looking forth upon the Pacific, confronts the farthest and eldest orient, and is already making China and India tributary to the greatness of its future. How inspiring is the thought of effort and achievement in such a field! "Time's noblest empire," with resources that shame the riches of the world, with capabilities of power and progress that defy all calculation, and with a position of preëminent grandeur, in relation to the destinies of the human race, is to be saved from the dominion of darkness and of sin, and is to be filled with the freedom of the sons of God!

This, then, is the work of the American Home Missionary Society. It undertakes to carry the Gospel with all its quickening and sanctifying influences, the Gospel, with its institutions and social order, the Gospel, not only as the offer of divine grace to the individual soul, but also as an organizing power in the commonwealth, through all the length and breadth of this great empire. Wherever it goes, it puts its hand to the foundation, and helps to shape the structure of society. It does not merely scatter the seed of the word here and there in the wide and tangled wilderness, its work is to subdue the wilderness, to spread new order over its neglected vastness, to change its gloomy waste into the garden of the Lord. Where various currents of population, from the north and from the south, from the old world and from the new, with habits and tendencies as diverse as their origin, meet to mingle and be confounded, it sets up in that confusion of influences an organic self-perpetuating force that shall act upon unborn generations; and where the pioneer might, perhaps, have left to his posterity an inheritance of barbarism, it spreads over the subdued and renovated soil the light, the bloom, the living and perennial beauty of a christian civilization.

General View of Missionary Fields.

IOWA.

This State, lying between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, has been beautifully called the "Mesopotamia of the West." It has sprung up as if by magic, and taken its	place in the constellation of republics. The rapidity with which its settlement has been effected is truly astonishing. Twenty years ago, the first strip of Indian territory, the "Black Hawk Purchase," extending about forty miles in width up and down the Mississippi, was ceded by its aboriginal occupants to the white man. Up to that time not a solitary white inhabitant was there, save a few scattered Indian traders and Canadian French. In 1837 another strip, twenty five miles in breadth was purchased; and in 1842, the remaining area, extending to the Missouri, and embracing 15,000 square miles, was peaceably relinquished to the Government by the Sac and Fox Indians, in exchange for other lands south and west of that river.

The settlement of this new territory, which commenced in 1833, went on with greater rapidity than that of almost any other portion of the West. During the two years previous to its organization as a Territorial Government, the population mounted from 10,531, to 22,859; and at the end of two years more, in 1840, it had again nearly doubled. Iowa became a sovereign State in 1846; only fourteen years from the date of the first Indian purchase.

A peculiar interest has attended the progress of Home Missions in Iowa from the first. So rapid was the increase and spread of population, that it was impossible at first to implant religious institutions there in any ratio corresponding to its growth. Great obstacles were encountered, too, from the character of some of the influential portions of the early emigrants to the Territory. It seemed as if the ruler of the spirit of wickedness had determined, by a strong preoccupation, to take and hold possession of this virgin soil. Not only Romanism, whose legions are everywhere present, but Mormonism, and Infidelity in its most rancorous forms—the atheism and blasphemy of Abner Kneeland—rushed in, in organized battalions, expecting here to forestall Christianity, and entrench themselves in perpetual defiance of the Prince of Peace. There were also Campbellism and other fanatical errors, under the name of religion, scarcely less difficult to be contended with, in seeking acceptance for the pure and searching truths of the Gospel.

In 1837 the first Congregational minister commenced preaching in Iowa; but he remained only a few months. During the ensuing season a Presbyterian minister was located at Fort Madison. One Methodist preacher had been in the Territory for some time, and perhaps some of other evangelical denominations. Only six missionaries had been sent into Iowa, by the American Home Missionary Society, previous to 1843. But now the loud and oft repeated appeals of the Society in its behalf were heard and nobly responded to. In September of that year a band of young men at Andover, consisting of eleven members of the Senior class, who had devoted themselves with one heart to missions in this destitute field, received their instructions in the chapel of the Seminary. To this number two were added, by their own desire, from other institutions; and on the 2nd of November, having arrived in Iowa, this company were set apart to the work of the ministry, at Denmark, in Des Moines county. From this time the Home Missionary work received a new impulse in this State. Although much land remains to be possessed, yet Protestant Christianity has been established here; and the most important centers of influence are occupied by true and faithful ministers of Christ. In 1844, the year after this missionary band arrived, both Joe Smith and Abner Kneeland died; and with them the glory departed from their boasted systems of anti-christian philosophy and freedom. From that time a general progress has been made in all the moral movements of society. The observance of the Sabbath, the cause of temperance and social order, the interests of primary and public education, have all been steadily advancing. Those who have these and other great interests of the church and the commonwealth at heart, now find their numbers relatively much increased; and are conscious of possessing a greatly augmented power, from the more general concurrence of all classes of the people, in their principles and measures. This is true, notwithstanding there is so much of ignorance and evil yet to be deplored.

Present State of the Missions.

During the last year this Society sustained 50 missionaries in Iowa. Besides these there are eleven other Congregational ministers in the State, six of whom are wholly supported by their own people. There are 10 settled pastors, all of whom have once been missionaries of this Society, and five are so still.

There are in Iowa 71 Congregational and Presbyterian churches, containing about 2,600 members. Five of the Congregational churches are composed of Germans, and one of French. Six new churches were gathered during the last year. Twenty nine houses of worship have been dedicated, and ten others are in process of erection.

Benevolent Contributions.

The churches of Iowa are already beginning to return into the treasury of the Lord the fruits of what has been bestowed upon them. They contributed last year to the different benevolent objects, something over $2,800. The Congregational church at Dubuque stands second only to the 2nd Presbyterian church in Chicago, in the northwestern district of the American Board, in the amount of its contributions to that object.

These statistics are given from the last annual report of the Agent of the Society in this State, Rev. Julius A. Reed; from whose communication the following extracts will be perused with interest.

Revivals.

Revivals of religion have been enjoyed only to a limited extent during the year under review, but conversions have occurred in many of the churches. In the German churches at Garnaville, Tipton, Iowa City and Toddborough, several have been converted, and those feeble churches have been much encouraged and strengthened thereby. The churches at Denmark and Montrose have been highly favored; with them the past year has been a year of mercy. But we have reason to humble ourselves before God, and prayerfully inquire why he so hides his face from us.

Outward Prosperity.

The churches, however, have been prosperous externally. They are increasing slowly in pecuniary strength; they are building meeting-houses; also prayer-meetings, monthly concerts and Sunday schools are maintained with more constancy and efficiency; and the question, we trust, is settled, with respect to most of the churches which the Society is aiding, that they will become permanent and influential.

Instrumentality of this Society.

All that has been accomplished for Christ in Iowa, by our denominations, has been done under the fostering care of the American Home Missionary Society. All but four of the 61 Congregational and New School Presbyterian ministers who are laboring in various capacities in this State have been aided by that Society, and all but two of the 71 Congregational and Presbyterian churches which have been organized, have been maintained by it. We are confident that if left to themselves our churches would not have attained their present strength in half a century. We are led to admire the piety and good sense of the Puritan fathers, who would not suffer a colony from Boston to emigrate to Newtown, till they could take with them a minister of the Gospel.

Remaining Destitutions.

In Iowa there are 100 counties. In June, 1850, the population in 45 of them ranged from 338 to 18,930. The least populous of these 45 counties, we may now safely say contains 500 souls. Two of these counties are supplied by the missionary of another Society. Only 26 of these remaining 43 counties have resident missionaries; 11 others are occasionally visited; leaving 6 counties, each of which would be a sufficient field for a missionary, wholly unprovided for. The labors of your missionaries are virtually confined to 28 counties; so little labor is expended upon other counties that it does little good, and we may say that there are 17 counties, containing from 500 to 5000 inhabitants each, besides 6 other counties containing some hundreds of inhabitants, for which we are doing almost nothing. There are now needed, to supply fields where churches are already organized, 8 missionaries, and 7 more are needed to enter new and promising fields. These destitutions we fear are destined to increase faster than they are supplied. The emigration to Iowa during 1851, according to a statement recently made on the floor of Congress, was 60,000; and we believe it will be as great annually till 1860.

Physical Resources soon to be Developed.

The soil of three quarters of the State is superior to that of the best river lands in New England. Lead abounds in some parts of the State, and coal is found throughout half its extent. The ratio of mortality is little more than half what it is in Massachusetts, and according to the late census it is the third State in the Union in point of healthfulness. It is bounded on the east and west by the two largest rivers in the Union, and is intersected by the Des Moines, which will soon afford slack-water navigation to the heart of the State. It is confidently expected that a railroad will be built in a few years, across the State, connecting these three rivers. A railroad is already constructed half of the distance from Chicago to Dubuque, and another from Chicago to Rock Island, is now under contract to Peru, both of which will be completed in two years. The attention of emigrants is turned by these circumstances to Iowa, and the population of this State must increase more rapidly than ever. If its annual increase continues to be as great till 1860 as it is estimated to have been the last year, it will then amount to 750,000; and if it is only half as great, it will amount to 500,000.

One Hundred Ministers Needed.

We now need 70 laborers to reap these fields which are already white to the harvest; and we really need one hundred ministers of the Gospel to care for all the waste places. In eight years we shall need twice that number. An annual increase of 18, making no allowance for deaths or removals, will be needed for years to come, which is about four times the net annual increase in our ministry for the last five years.

Thus the work of Home Missions is growing upon our hands throughout the whole west, and we should despair of final success, were we not permitted to pray to him to send forth laborers into the harvest to whom the gold and the silver belong, and in whose hands are the hearts of all men.

WISCONSIN.

This noble State embraces an area of 54,000 square miles, which is filling up, in almost every part, with an enterprising and thriving population. The more advanced settlements, occupying the southeastern sections, adjacent to Illinois and along the border of Lake Michigan, are becoming compact and populous places; increasing faster, at present, however, in population, than in wealth which can be consecrated to the support of religious institutions. The mining region on the Mississippi below the mouth of the Wisconsin, is receiving large accessions of laborers; and the extensive forests of valuable timber, lying farther north are being peopled with hardy lumbermen and their families, in such numbers that they now begin to flow together in considerable settlements in the wilderness. Every portion of this fine region offers inducements of no ordinary kind to the occupancy of enterprising emigrants and adventurers from the older States. Wisconsin has had, and must continue to have a rapid growth, and the utmost exertion will be necessary on the part of the friends of education and religion, in order to meet in any good degree, the advancing demands of the people, for an intelligent christian culture. Happily this work was begun early and energetically in this new State; and there is, probably, no other part of the western field where the increase of ministers and churches, and the supply of the subordinate means of instruction which invariably follows in their train, has so nearly kept pace with the growth of the towns and villages, and the progress of every social improvement. The missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society were among the first to explore this important field, and, as one on the ground has said, "to mark it as a land of promise for Messiah's kingdom." In 1836, when the first missionary commenced his labors here, only a single organized church existed among the white inhabitants of the Territory.

The following extracts from the annual report of the Rev. Dexter Clary, Agent of the Society in Wisconsin, transmitted to the Executive Committee in March last, will give the reader the means of understanding, in some degree, what has been done, and also what remains to be done, in carrying out the purpose of these evangelical labors.

Labors of the Agent.

As to my own labors the past year, I find by reference to my journal, that I have traveled 3859 miles, preached 78 sermons, made about two hundred visits, including calls on ministers to consult and advise, attended 12 conventions and ecclesiastical meetings, received and distributed 16 boxes and barrels of clothing, &c., to missionaries, and performed an indefinite amount of miscellaneous labor in the various departments of my agency duties. I have completed a general survey of my field, except the region of Fox river.

north of Appleton, the pinery, and the country on the Mississippi and its tributaries in Wisconsin north of Prairie Du Chien. Those parts I hope to visit next summer.

I have acquainted myself with the condition of nearly all the churches and particular localities of interest where there are no churches in our connection, and am personally acquainted, I believe, with every minister in the State.

Statistics of the Churches and Ministers.

Wisconsin is divided into 39 counties, in most of which we have churches and ministers. The following statistics I have prepared with considerable care, and I believe they are in the main, if not in every particular, correct. They may be more full than you care to receive, as they include not only the missionaries and the churches aided by the Society, but also, all the N. S. Presbyterian and Congregational churches and ministers in the State, with the Welsh and Germans dependent on the Society. Yet they show the state of things in Wisconsin.

The following statistics are compiled chiefly from the report of the Agent.

The whole number of N. S. Presbyterian and Congregational churches reported last year, was 126. The number organized the past year is 15. The Welsh have 12 churches and the Germans 6; making the whole number of churches connected with the Presbyterians and Congregationalists in the State, 159. These churches contain about 5,400 members, including the few Welsh and German churches aided by the Society. More than 100 of the churches in Wisconsin were organized through the agency of the American Home Missionary Society, and nearly all in the State have been assisted by its funds. Fifteen have already passed through the period of their dependence, and become able to sustain their own pastors. Eighty four missionaries were sustained, in this State, by the funds of this Society during the past year.

The whole number of ministers in the State, including those employed as Professors, Teachers and Agents, is 122. Among these are 6 Germans and 8 Welsh. Only about 106 ministers in Wisconsin are steadily occupied in supplying the churches; and there are thirty or more churches in different parts of the State, which are destitute of stated preaching. Many settlements, also, where no churches have been formed, are entirely unsupplied, or enjoy only the occasional labors of missionaries settled in the neighborhood.

Condition of the Churches.

In general the churches are prosperous. Much harmony and peace prevails. In 19 of our churches there have been revivals of religion, including those now in progress, and varying in extent and power from gentle refreshings to copious showers. Gospel truth is making decided progress in the State, amid all the opposing elements of sin and Satan.

There is considerable financial depression at present, owing to repeated failures of the wheat crop, and the emigration to California. Consequently the applications for missionary aid are greater and contributions less. Change for the better is looked for. The vast resources of the country, and the energy of the people will soon repair the losses sustained.

The churches need your help. With few exceptions they are in their minority, and many are even in their infancy. Having come into being through the instrumentality of the Society, they depend on you for a time, as children do on their parents, for support. Yet they are looking forward to the dignity of manhood, and a few years of prosperity will place them in a condition to support themselves and to extend aid to others.

We think it true policy for the Eastern churches to sustain the feeble churches and missionaries in the West. I have said that the churches here are the offspring of those of the East. So I may say of the Western States in relation to the Eastern; and we need, as a young community, that moral training which the East can give us, and which it is their interest to give us. We are having a large and rapid growth; the spirit of a young giant animates us; we shall one day be stronger, if not wiser, than our fathers. And if we reach our manhood without the moral training which you can give us, who can tell what power we shall wield for evil to Christianity and to our common country? Aid, then, these feeble churches and their missionaries, and send us more men of God, so that the Gospel may mold our whole character and fit us to be strong for the right, to guard and foster our own best interests and our country's also.

We have many young men, and every year adds to the number, who might be useful in the ministry. Our churches cannot and ought not always to rely on those at the East for ministers. We have Collegiate, and may have Theological Institutions; and with continued aid for a few years we will endeavor to raise up among us ministers for ourselves and for others also.

Character and number of Missionaries needed.

As to their character, men are needed who will make large "claims" for Christ in the newer portions of the State. In the northern counties there are great destitutions. For example:

Washington Co. has not one minister in our connection; Manitowoc Co. has but one, Brown Co. one, Outagamie one, Waupaca, Waushara, and Portage Co.'s together but one, Adams Co. none, La Crosse one, Bad Axe, and Crawford Co.'s none, Richland one. Yet in these counties there are many settlements of New England people; villages are springing up, farms are under cultivation, and an extensive lumber business is carried on. The report of the Committee of Public Works in the State shows that 73½ millions of feet of lumber have been produced the first year, exceeding by 24 millions the quantity produced the preceding year. The people there need the Gospel, and such men are wanted as will break up the fallow ground of sin, and like John the Baptist in the wilderness, say to the people, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Great numbers of professors of religion are located in these regions, and ministers are wanted who will go after the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." In a word, such men are needed as most of your missionaries in Wisconsin are. As to their numbers I need only say abundance of work can be furnished for all who will come.

MINNESOTA.

From Rev. E. D. Neill, St. Paul, St. Croix Co.

Interesting Donation.

It is with great pleasure that I report a donation to the funds of the Society from the Oak Grove Presbyterian Church. This is the old Fort Snelling Church, which was organized before the city of Milwaukee and other large places in Wisconsin sprang into existence. Since I have labored in Minnesota, different members of this church have transmitted, through me, about two hundred dollars to the Home Missionary Society.

The following extracts from a letter of Rev. G. H. Pond, Pastor of the church, may perhaps be perused with interest, by some of the readers of the Home Missionary:

"I herewith transmit, through you, to the Home Missionary Society, twenty five dollars, which was lately contributed for that purpose, by the little Oak Grove Church and Congregation, of the Dakota Mission, which, you may be assured, is accompanied by the earnest prayers of this church for the success of the Home Missionary enterprise."

The Foreign becoming the Home Field.

Especially do we feel a deep interest in the operations of the Home Missionary in this Territory at this time, as he will very soon have possession of the same region of country, in which the Foreign Missionary has, for seventeen years, labored in behalf of the Dakotas, and gathered so little "fruit unto eternal life." As blind worshipers of "four-footed beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air," wrapping still more closely about themselves the filthy garments of savagism, recede before the advancing host of Mammon's votaries, may the well-directed efforts of the Home Missionary be rendered efficient by the mighty energies of the Divine Spirit, and win the Territory to Christ!

History of the Church at Fort Snelling.

The following statements concerning the history of the Oak Grove Church, may not, perhaps, be uninteresting in this connection.

On the 4th of June, 1835, this church was organized by the Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, at Fort Snelling. The persons of whom it was composed were the families and associates of Messrs. T. S. Williamson and J. D. Stevens, Missionaries of the A. B. C. F. M. (the latter is now a Home Missionary in Wisconsin), Colonel (then Captain) G. Loomis and family, Henry H. Sibley, S. W. and G. H. Pond, and eight soldiers, who had during the previous winter been hopefully converted to the faith of the Gospel, through the blessing of God on my efforts at Fort Snelling. The church continued under the pastoral care of Rev. J. D. Stevens, who was stationed at Lake Harriet, until the summer of 1839, during which time three persons were added by profession. In 1840 the Rev. S. W. Pond was elected Pastor. While he filled the office three natives were received into the communion of the church on the profession of their faith.

The following extract is from the records of Dec. 26, 1849. "The Rev. S. W. Pond, former Pastor of this church, having removed from this place, one of the Ruling Elders having withdrawn himself from us, and the other (G. H. Pond) having been ordained to the Gospel ministry, by a committee appointed by the Dakota Presbytery, a meeting was called at the residence of Philander Prescott for the purpose of re-organizing the church at this place." * * *

"Colonel G. Loomis, U. S. A., and P. Prescott were elected to the office of Ruling Elder." * * *

"G. H. Pond was chosen Pastor, and, on motion, the church was called the Oak Grove Church."

"Since that period two men have been received to the fellowship of the church on profession."

Progress of Civilization Westward.

Within a few weeks the treaties for the Dakota lands have been ratified, and where we used to see the smoke issuing from the skin lodge of the savage, we already see rude board shanties, with families living therein, and washed clothes hung out to dry,—a sure sign that civilization is there. Within a week the first horse ferry boat has commenced her trips across the Mississippi, at this point; and a steamboat owned in this place has commenced running up the Minnesota to the junction of the Blue Earth River, 150 miles above Fort Snelling. Already one of the families of my church has emigrated to the Indian Country, and soon we shall hear the cry, "Come over and help us."

As the first of the Home Missionary band in this Territory, I feel a deep responsibility resting upon me, to make provision for those who will soon come in and occupy the old mission stations of the Dakota Presbytery; and never have I more felt the need of guidance from above, and the prayers of my fathers, in the ministry, that I may prove a wise master builder, and lay a permanent foundation upon the rock, Jesus Christ.

IOWA.

From Rev. John Summers, Potato Hill, Benton Co.

From the Frontier.

This missionary commenced his labors in this remote and destitute portion of Iowa, in January last, and has shared largely in the trials and difficulties peculiar to the frontier settlements.

There are six different settlements in this county where I now preach statedly on the Sabbath. I divide my Sabbath morning labors equally between Fremont and the neighborhood where I reside; and my afternoon labors between the other four neighborhoods, one of them two miles distant, and the others from five to six miles from the above named places. In nearly all of these settlements the only preaching they have is what I am able to give them. My meetings still continue to be well attended.

Popular Expurgation.

There has been, however, and still is a large amount of immorality in some of the settlements. When I commenced my labors in this field six months ago, there was a gang of horse thieves living in it, whose depredations had long been a cause of annoyance and terror to the surrounding country, and whose immoral influence has been very injurious to some of the settlements. But, a few months ago, a large number of citizens said to belong to this, and a neighboring county, assembled for the purpose of lynching or driving them away. The thieves promised that if a reasonable time was given to them to dispose of their property, they would leave; and it is supposed that most of those who were actively engaged in the gang, have either left or will soon leave.

Political Meetings on the Sabbath.

The Sabbath day is much desecrated among us. Political meetings have been held at Fremont on the Sabbath. And but recently a meeting of the citizens of that place was called, to take into consideration the propriety of having (as it was termed) a Sunday school celebration on Sabbath, the 4th of July, and to appoint a person to read the Declaration of Independence, and another, as Orator of the day. I requested that the celebration might take place either on Saturday or Monday; but I was told by one of the leading men of the place that if the Sabbath was not a suitable day on which to celebrate the 4th of July, it was not a suitable day on which to preach the Gospel. I then urged some of the friends of the school, and of the Sabbath, to attend the meeting, and exert their influence to have the celebration take place on some other day. This they did, and Monday was appointed instead of the Sabbath.

He next speaks of the great prevalence of intemperance in the community, and relates an instance in which, under the influence of passion produced by intemperance, a husband made a murderous assault upon his wife, "to whom, one year ago, he was kind and affectionate."

From what I have already stated, you will perceive how important it is that this people should have the Gospel preached unto them. Truly the friends of the Redeemer here have cause to be thankful for the aid which they have received from the American Home Missionary Society. But for that Society this inviting field of missionary labor would still be unsupplied.

What the Missionary is doing:

Since my last report we have commenced three Sunday schools in the county. Each of these schools has a library containing from 100 to 150 volumes of the American Sunday school Union's publications. The school at Fremont has three Bible classes of adults, and recently contributed for Sabbath school purposes $15.50, ten dollars of which was to aid other Sabbath schools in the county.

At my request a committee was appointed by the Des Moines Presbytery to organize a Presbyterian Church at Fremont, the county seat of Benton County. The committee according to previous arrangements organized a church there, on the Sabbath, June 27th, consisting of nine members, four males and five females, all of whom are heads of families.

WISCONSIN.

From Rev. F. Lawson, Fulton, Rock Co.

The labors of Mr. Lawson are divided between the church in Fulton and another infant church in Evansville. From each of these points as a center his more occasional efforts are extended to the surrounding settlements.

Our church is blest with as good a degree of prosperity as we can reasonably expect in the ordinary providence of God. At our last communion season, in July, we received an addition of seven to our little communion, for which we desire to "thank God and take courage." But our work is all new as yet. For about three years only has Fulton had regular preaching, so that we have not fully established (as in many places) what may be described as a religious influence, so as to make Sabbath-breaking unpopular, and "the sound of the rifle unheard." Yet I am cheered by the assurance that the number of attendants upon the worship of the sanctuary has more than doubled within the past few months.

We have three Sabbath schools within the bounds of the congregation, which are all superintended by a young man from New Jersey, whose assiduity is untiring in labors for the benefit of our youth. These schools are exerting a powerful influence for good, which, as bread cast upon the waters, shall be found after many days. They are well sustained by the children, if not by the parents also.

Our church, at my instance, have appointed the first Monday afternoon in each month as a season of prayer for the spread of the Gospel through the whole world, in our own midst, and in our own hearts. These meetings are refreshing and interesting. A goodly number of our scattered brethren meet on the occasion, leaving their business avocations to "come to the house of prayer." In all my visits among this people, I have observed that there is, after all, a strong moral sentiment, far more favorable to religion than in many places.

I have preached regularly three times every Sabbath (except four), since I have been in Wisconsin. On all appointments for preaching there is uniformly a good attendance. One of my appointments is among the Universalists. I feel encouraged to hope that there good will be done. Our meetings for prayer in the week.

are regularly attended by a few, with a degree of profit.

The church at Evansville is small in point of numbers, still they are a praying people. This church also have set apart the 2nd Monday of every month as a meeting for conference and prayer for the spread of the Gospel through the whole world.

This community is thoroughly committed to the temperance enterprise, and no intoxicating drinks can be procured here. If obtained, they must be brought in from a distance.

In this field, as well as in Fulton, the leading influences are Eastern. Men from central and southern New York are the old settlers. I look forward to the realization of good things here, with the blessing of the divine Spirit, so that God may be glorified and many souls be saved through Christ.

The disadvantage of which the missionary speaks, arising from want of age and maturity, to give a certain dignity and weight of influence to christian institutions, may very naturally impress itself upon the mind of one placed among the rising communities of the West; since this and other elements of the moral power of the Gospel in the social state, are as truly, though in a less degree, subservient to its restraining, and even its saving influence, as are the more immediate effects of the preached word. But this consideration strongly enforces the duty of doing, without delay, whatever may be done in the enterprise of Home Missions. It is indeed committed to this agency to build again the "old wastes," and repair the "desolations of many generations;" and this is one efficient and hopeful department of its labors. But how much more hopeful and effectual another great department, in which much the largest part of its means and energies are expended; wherein it goes before, and prevents the causes of these moral desolations, by supplying an evangelical influence to mold all the elements of Society while in its plastic state.

From Rev. L. Foote, Delavan, Walworth Co.

Attendance on the Word.

There has been no time, perhaps, since my coming among this people until now, when the attendance on the Sabbath ministrations has been so general and apparently satisfactory, as during the last few months. Numbers are now constant listeners to the word preached, who seldom or never were seen at the house of God. It is sometimes difficult for all our congregation now to find seats on the Sabbath, and our people begin seriously (notwithstanding most of them are in debt) to talk about enlarging our house of worship. This I think will need to be done at no distant period. After all, we who have lived long at the West, have learned not to put all confidence in apparent prosperity, in a land where, like her "prairie winds," we are subject to sudden and never-ending fluctuations. The time will come, however, if right means are used, when general stability and firmness will form an important feature in the character of western men and churches; and when this is added to their indomitable perseverance, and the vast natural resources of the country, we shall no longer (with God's blessing) wonder where is the place of prosperity!

In addition to the increase of our congregation on the Sabbath, there has also been an increase in the numbers who attend our Sabbath school and Bible class; and now a new stimulus is given by the addition of nearly a hundred volumes to our S. S. Library, which our congregation have just purchased by contribution.

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. Joseph Butler, Albion, Edwards Co.

Report of an Itinerant.

On the first of October, when my six months commenced, I was on my return from Synod at Springfield. I turned aside to St. Louis, for the purpose of attending a Sabbath school Convention. Owing to circumstances, however, I immediately left for home, without staying to attend the convention, which I found would have detained me nearly a week longer from the direct business of my mission.

Labors in Effingham County.

I remained at home just to preach on the Sabbath to this now destitute church and congregation, and then set out for Effingham County, in order to assist in two protracted meetings in that very discouraging field; and to attend another similar meeting with the newly organized and weak church at Long Point, Cumberland County.

The first meeting was held in a private house. It was attended with the blessing of God to some extent. Nine were added to the church by profession. This was twelve miles east from Ewington, the County seat. Eight discourses or more were preached in another branch of the same church, about ten miles south of Ewington.

At the meeting in Ewington, the Holy Spirit was evidently present, with his awakening and convicting influences,—if anxious countenances, tears, and serious conversation are indications of it; but there were no hopeful conversions while the meeting was in progress.

Humble Accommodations.

The same was essentially true of the third protracted meeting at Long Point. The meeting was held in a private house without any window, which, of course, rendered it very inconvenient. Besides this, two of the sons of a large family living within two or three rods of the meeting, were sick with the typhus fever, which also operated unfavorably for the meeting. We trust, however, that some good was done, even if no sinner was then converted. Some, who were left inquiring, may have been led, or may yet be led to the Savior. At the places of meeting already mentioned, we visited many families.

Visit to Vermillion and Iroquois Counties.

I then returned home, and preached on the Sabbath, and set out for Vermillion and Iroquois Counties, up the Wabash. My intention was to assist in several protracted meetings among the newly organized churches and destitute settlements in that wide northern portion of our Presbytery. But the severe cold and consequent difficulty of getting people together, especially on these large prairies, and the subsequent rains and wind, and also high water, prevented our holding regular protracted meetings. We preached, however, most of the evenings, at candle-lighting, and visited families when circumstances would permit, during the day. In Iroquois County, we made arrangements for organizing a Church.

During this quarter I have preached fifty-nine sermons in ten different counties, and traveled 830 miles, not reckoning my travel home from Synod.

Such "protracted meetings" as are herein described, in the circumstances of a new and scattered population, almost wholly destitute of the stated ministry of the word, if improved for the instructive and earnest enforcement of the truths of the Gospel, are doubtless to be approved. They are surely adapted, in some degree at least, to meet the pressing spiritual necessities of the people; and must have a tendency to awaken and nourish, rather than to pervert, a wholesome desire for the established ordinances of the Sabbath. Many, also, will be the gracious fruits of the Spirit, vouchsafed to those who wait, as in the primitive period of the Gospel, on these unadorned and simple "rites of our holy religion."

INDIANA.

From Rev. A. H. Scherer, New London, Howard County.

Light and Shade.

My labors during the last quarter have been attended with a good degree of interest. The attendance upon Sabbath preaching has been good, but during the week quite small. The Spirit of the Lord is working upon the hearts of the people at some of my stations. The young, especially, are becoming inquirers after salvation.

But I have many evil influences to contend with. The desecration of the Sabbath is, perhaps, one of the greatest evils prevailing on my field. The laws of the land, as well as the law of God, are trampled under foot by many that profess the name of Christians. Hunting, fishing and all kinds of sports, and even chopping fuel and doing the ordinary work of the week day, are practiced here in many neighborhoods; so that the man of God has his heart pained as he travels to and from the house of God on the Sabbath. Universalism and the "Rochester Knockings" are two of Satan's successful instruments here by which poor, ignorant souls are deceived. The temperance reform, however, is gaining ground, and scores of petitions have been sent to the legislature of this State, praying for a law to be enacted similar to that of the State of Maine, to protect our people from the evils of intemperance.

MICHIGAN.

German Mission at Detroit.

In many parts of the Middle, Western and Northwestern States, the Germans constitute, if not the largest, yet, in some respects the most important portion of our foreign population. As they incline, to a great extent, to retain their own language and literature, especially in the cities and large towns where their numbers are sufficient for the purposes of intercourse and business among themselves, they are not easily accessible to evangelical influences, even the Protestant portion of them, from the institutions of the Gospel by which they may be surrounded. So far as they are in the enjoyment of any religious privileges in this country, they are, for the most part, gathered into churches of their own. But the great body of those composed of the immigrants more recently arriving in America, are, like those in the father land, rationalistic in their views and formal in their worship, scarcely recognizing in practice the necessity of a work of grace wrought in the soul by the power of the Holy Spirit. There are among them, however, many experimental believers; and there are some godly men in the ministry, who are doing what they are able to bring the truths of the Gospel, in their purity and power, into contact with the masses of the German mind. Great interest must be felt by all Christians among us, in every form of effort which is employed for their spiritual instruction; but especially in the labors of missionaries among them of their own nation, who are themselves converted men, and whose aim it is to gather and build up churches upon the same evangelical basis with our own, to be composed only of members giving evidence of a spiritual renovation of heart, and bringing forth fruits meet for repentance.

The American Home Missionary Society the last year aided in the support of thirty nine such missionaries, preaching to German congregations in their own language; all of whom are men "well known and approved for their doctrinal views and experimental piety," whose desire and purpose it is strictly to adhere to the instructions of the Committee in requiring credible "evidence of regeneration by the Spirit of God as a qualification for church membership."

Among the missions of this class, one of the most interesting and important is that named at the head of this article. The population of Detroit is now estimated at 25,000; of which more than 6,000 are Germans. The leading instrumentality in gathering the German Reformed Church in that city, to which the aid of this Society is now granted, was exerted by Rev. ABRAHAM BERKY; whose zealous and persevering devotion to the spiritual welfare of his countrymen in America, and whose eminent qualifications to minister to their instruction, with acceptance and success, have led to his recent appointment, by the Missionary Board of the Reformed Dutch Church, to labor among the German population in a destitute part of the city of New York. His place has been supplied at Detroit by Rev. CHARLES BECKER, who is also well approved as an able and faithful minister of the "grace of God which bringeth salvation." The church now embraces over sixty members, and will probably very soon be able to sustain its own christian ordinances. "The enterprise," writes Dr. Duffield, "in which Mr. Berky has been engaged, notwithstanding many difficulties and embarrassments, and chiefly those arising from the want of a place of public worship, has thus far succeeded beyond our expectations. The condition of the German population in our city is, at present, peculiarly favorable for efforts such as the church applying for the aid of the American Home Missionary Society, is now making."

Origin and Progress of the Mission.

The following succinct account of the origin and progress of this mission, was published in the columns of the German Reformed Messenger, printed at Chambersburg, Pa., as communicated by a clergyman of that denomination who was present and took part in the very interesting services at the dedication of their house of worship, on the 23d of May last:

After Rev. A. Berky had, in the fall of 1849, made his missionary tour to Milwaukee and other portions of the State of Wisconsin, he returned as far as Detroit; and, at the instance of Rev. Dr. Duffield, he determined to commence laboring as a missionary under commission from the American Home Missionary Society, in the latter place. Being a German Reformed minister, he set out with the determination of raising a German Reformed Church in full connection with Synod. To this design there was no objection; for the Society proposes to aid feeble churches that are organized on strictly evangelical principles, without particular regard to the denomination with which they may be connected. Accordingly, Rev. Mr. Berky began to preach in the City-Hall on the 2nd of December, 1849. By the 10th of February following, the way had been prepared for a more decided step, and he organized a church with twenty one members, adopting as the constitution of the congregation, the Form prepared and recommended by the Eastern Synod. Subsequently, May 22nd, 1850, the church was incorporated; the most important features of the constitution were also embodied in the charter. It was soon felt that the enterprise labored under serious disadvantages for want of a suitable place of worship. The regular meetings were sometimes interrupted, the Hall having been occupied for other purposes, and at other times they had to be held in private houses. This has been the case particularly during the past winter. As early, therefore, as the fall of 1850, an effort was begun to build a church. A lot was purchased in a central location, at a cost of $500. The laborious pastor immediately went to work to gather funds to pay for the lot and put up the building, and succeeded in collecting altogether $1,740. Of this sum about $600 were obtained in Detroit, mainly from the First Presbyterian and Congregational churches, that have from the start manifested a deep interest in the enterprise. The balance was collected chiefly in New York and other cities and towns in the East, about $100 having been contributed by the German Reformed Churches in Ohio. The entire cost of the edifice, as nearly as can be ascertained (not including the lot, however), was $2,680. A debt of about $940 still rests upon the church.

The writer proceeds to describe the building, which is of brick, 65 feet long by 42 feet wide, with sittings for about 500 persons. The interior is finished in a neat and chaste style, in which good taste and economy are combined.

Altogether, this promising missionary church is both without and within, very agreeable to the eye, and rejoices my heart.

It is a gratifying illustration of what the self-denial, diligence and perseverance of one man, with the blessing of God, can do, who has fully made up his mind to do something. The funds of the American Home Missionary Society have been wisely expended; and if God continues to bless the enterprise, it will soon become the center of a powerful evangelical influence among the foreign population of Detroit.

On the day of the dedication, a German audience of about 200 was assembled at 10 o'clock, A. M. The writer preached; the pastor conducted the liturgical service of dedication, and Rev. Mr. Bielfeld of Buffalo, N. Y., offered the dedicatory prayer. The Presbyterian and Congregational churches having omitted their afternoon public worship, a large audience assembled at 3 o'clock, P. M., when divine service was conducted in the English language, and a liberal collection taken.

This German Reformed Church at Detroit, like those at Cincinnati, Louisville, and other places, illustrates what we could accomplish for the cause of Christ in nearly all our Western cities and towns, could we but command the right men and sufficient means.

Letter from Rev. Mr. Berky.

The following is from the last report of Rev. Mr. Berky, extending to the date of the discontinuance of his labors at Detroit:

I have been enabled to pass through my labors during the past quarter with some degree of delight and encouragement. Our church is finished, and was opened for worship on the 18th day of April, and dedicated on the 23d of May. Having a convenient place of worship now, our congregation has been increasing since then, and averages about 100 hearers. We have had two communion seasons since I reported last, at which we received twenty one members, thirteen by profession, and eight by letter. Our little church now numbers sixty one members. The eight members received by letter, consist of a pious family from Holland, viz: a father with four sons and three daughters. The Lord has seen proper to visit this family with severe affliction since they have been in this country. The oldest son, who came to this country sometime before the father, buried his wife shortly after his arrival. The father buried his wife eleven days after his arrival; and on Friday last, we were called to follow to the grave one of his daughters, who died after only about eleven hours' sickness. It was a mournful occasion, yet they mourned not as those without hope. This was also a solemn occasion to all the members of our church, for she was the first of its members who has died since our organization.

As soon as we opened our church for worship, we also commenced a Sabbath school, which averages about forty scholars. We did not remove the Union school to our church as we had intended to do, as mentioned in my last report, for as we found, from the encouragement we received, that a large school could be gathered, we thought it best to keep this school especially for the children of the emigrants. The prospects of our Mission Church are in general very encouraging.

Mr. Berky then refers to the subject of his appointment by the Missionary Board of the Dutch Reformed Church, and says:

After mature and prayerful deliberation I consented to accept said appointment, provided we could obtain a suitable man to supply my place here. We have finally found such a man, the Rev. C. Becker; who, we think, is in every respect very suitable to take charge of this mission. I discontinued my labors here on the 26th of June, and my successor entered upon his labors on the 27th. I would recommend Mr. Becker to your favor as a good and pious man, and well calculated to labor in this field; and I hope the Society will grant him the necessary aid.

Conflicts with Error and Fanaticism.

Through multiplicity of cares my quarterly report has been somewhat delayed. During this time there has been a deeper and more general interest on the subject of religion. Such a season is full of anxiety and more abundant labors to the missionary. In the regions of darkness, where various forms of religious error prevail, what is termed a revival of religion is often but the hot-bed of serious and fatal delusion. On this account we dread such false excitements, as the approach of a moral mania or destroying pestilence. Having no direct control of these elements which destroy men's souls, we attempt to disseminate the truths of God's word with greater earnestness.

Western Characteristics.

The western mind under excitement moves along impetuously, breaking away from all restraint. It seems to imbibe something of the wildness and roughness of the country. The sober old doctrines of the Bible are too stale and common place. A preacher, to "get up an excitement," must be a stranger; his peculiarities must be odd and strange, his interpretations of Scripture must be huge and distorted. The latest type of error, succeeding Mormonism and producing the greatest excitement, is the "Spirit Rappings." One family altar has been erected as the professed result of these communications from the spirit land. Connected with this we are experiencing some of the bitter fruits of Arminianism.

The Bible the Preacher's Weapon.

Feeling that the Bible was a neglected book, I gave a course of lectures in which the Bible itself was most conspicuous, speaking by quotation after quotation designed to teach some vital truth, so that for each doctrine advanced, the Bible appeared as the foremost and only advocate. The result seemed to be somewhat analogous to the "back fires" which the inhabitants of the wide prairies often set to stay the progress of the devouring flames, borne on by the tempest till they outstrip in speed the fleetest horse. When divine truth itself consumes the rank weeds and stubble of error, these "strange fires" go out. I have a growing confidence in the Bible. As a missionary, to do the work of the Society here, I want the Bible—the Bible spirit—the Bible doctrine—the Bible language. While in New England, under Bible instruction at home, at the Sabbath school, at the sanctuary, I did not realize its worth. Neither was I fully aware of its precious value as I looked out from the walls of the College and Theological Seminary, upon a community molded by its power. But since my residence here, I have been led to bow most reverently before its great and glorious author, and to praise and adore him for these revelations of himself, made through his dear Son, and the inspired Apostles and Prophets. It is my prayer that he will be pleased to afford me large measures of his grace, while I endeavor to bathe my spirit in this living fount, as in the healing pool of Bethesda; that he will open my eyes to understand its teachings, and be especially near, by his presence, while I attempt to proclaim its blessed truths. I feel assured, if "High Heaven" will deign to answer this my petition, that I shall not labor here in vain. Although my heart often sinks within me under the weight of accumulating cares and anxieties, and ever and anon I am constrained to bemoan myself with the bitter conviction of my utter worthlessness, yet I feel the consciousness of renewed strength as I go through these western wilds with the Bible in my hands, for the purpose of lodging its truths in these immortal minds. God will bless his own word. It is not my work to make the seed germinate and grow; if it be sown, God will himself take care of that.

Faith Triumphant.

Sometimes I do feel as if the promise was my own—I love to sit down and read it over and over again—"He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Mine is indeed but a poor claim. Still my faith looks upward, my spirit finds much to cheer me while I watch and pray and labor in anticipation of the harvest. Perhaps the time is not very far distant when I shall be permitted to point many anxious sinners to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. My life may be prolonged to witness even here the abundant fruits of righteousness. For the accomplishment of such an object, I trust my heart will lead me to engage all my strength. For the approach of that happy hour, would that my prayer may be fervent and effectual.

A Missionary Farewell.

I bless the Lord that you guided me to this field. It is one of much promise. Can you not send me a co-laborer? The calls upon me are more than I can meet.

This terminates, in all probability for ever, my relations as a missionary under the care of the Society of which you are the Secretary. Allow me to say, in taking my leave of you, that I have ever been treated by the Secretaries with all that courtesy, confidence and brotherly love that I could possibly have looked for; and I assure you that my attachment to the Home Missionary Society has been increasing ever since my connection with it. I love it more and more; I regard the terms of its organization admirably adapted to the theater of its action. By changing them to do more good, it seems to me you would do less good.

I have been a Home Missionary nearly three and a half years, and in that time I have organized two Presbyterian Churches, for one of which I have succeeded in obtaining a stated supply. I have organized four Sabbath schools; have baptized over fifty children and received over seventy five members into the different churches to which I preach. But for your Society little or none of this might have been accomplished.

Miscellaneous.

The American People.

Under this title we present our readers with a few brief extracts from the Address of Rev. EDWARD N. KIRK, of Boston, delivered at Newark, N. J., October, 1851, before the Society for the promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West.

The People are Many and Great.

Speaking of the wants of Society in this country, as affected by its more recent history, he says:

Its unparalleled growth in population, and its geographical expansion, have made these wants the more intense and urgent. Society outstrips the natural growth of its own institutions, like a luxuriant vine lifting its bold and vigorous branches beyond all the supports which an ordinary foresight had provided. And the very districts in which the higher instruments of civilization and of evangelization are most needed, are often the most unlikely to provide them; the adventurous settlers of new countries being generally most regardless of their material necessities. Besides this rapid growth and expansion from domestic causes, we have likewise opened a wide door to every foreign influence, friendly or unfriendly.

The evil from abroad, thus combining with the native ignorance and wickedness, makes a formidable power among us, against the kingdom of Christ and social order.

But this disadvantage is attended with an advantage of much importance. The servants of Christ can enter this field and occupy its length and breadth, without any obstruction. The voluntary principle, in which we glory, has indeed no value to an indolent, selfish and worldly church. It will even prove an immeasurable evil to our land, if the sense of personal responsibility is not found in some of our citizens, to such an extent as to secure a comprehensive survey and observation of the entire field; watching, with a patriotic and christian solicitude, the progress and the perils of particular sections, and of the whole country; and if there be not a hand outstretched to help the weak, and to work for the indolent, so far as to give the whole country all the institutions necessary to form a christian civilization.

One and Indivisible.

The whole field must be regarded as one. Whatever may be our sectional prejudices, local attachments, or local duties, the whole country, though divided for civil purposes into thirty one sections, for spiritual purposes must be regarded as one. Its interests are a unit. Vital bonds connect its remotest parts to each other. It is not a mechanical agglomeration of masses, having no mutual affinities; but a living body, whose remotest members are bound to one another, and to the whole body, by living cords of nervous sensibility, to report to the head and heart its weakness or its pains; and by living cords of nervous energy, to carry the strength of the strong to the weak, the skill of the instructed to the help of the untaught, that the body may preserve its symmetry and its health. Our country is a living body, with its arteries and veins, making a moral circulation complete; by which one life, one type, one tone is secured to the whole. If there is blood at the heart, it will soon be found coursing out to one extreme member here, and another there. If there is blood, healthful or poisoned, in some remote member now, it will soon be brought back again, to affect the heart and lungs. It will be therefore but a poor, short-sighted selfishness, that shall make the central organs indifferent to the kind of circulation going on at the extremities.

A Political Community.

The education of the Western people is a common want—as really important to us as to them. Not, indeed, if life's great work is a mere scramble for the chief places at its feasts; not, if the love of country has become an obsolete phrase; but really so, if there are such moral units as one's country, the church of God, the human race. Our kindred have not severed the ties of nature by changing their apartment in the great family mansion. Our neighbors have not expatriated themselves, so long as the eagle is their ensign, and the stripes and stars wave over them. Their wants are still ours; their welfare and their woe are still a portion of our own. Nor can we afford, on even more selfish grounds, to suffer a low type of civilization to prevail in the new States; and especially those which contain the elements of great commercial enterprise. Every year is drawing us into a closer contact with our remotest neighbors. Our relations to that common compact, the Constitution; the common interest we have in the National Legislature and Executive, are realities which call upon our prudence to take part with our patriotism, and look after the condition of society in these new and growing States. If great ignorance prevails there, except on the one absorbing subject of trade; if great moral and social evils take root there, we inevitably feel it in every fibre of our civil, social and religious being. Mighty enemies have sworn, like Hannibal, undying enmity to our Republic. Popery, Infidelity, Luxury and Pride, are formidable Princes leagued under one mightier than them all. If they succeed in sapping any portion of the wall, they weaken the whole length of our line of defense. Through the extent, freedom and facility of intercourse; through the vast power of Legislation committed to the Congress, a body that bears in itself the local impress of each section; through the prerogative of the Executive and Legislature, chosen as they are by all the people, to control all our relations with foreign powers, we can never, as men, as Americans, or as Christians, look with indifference on the intellectual and moral condition of any State or section of our vast country. All this people bear the same sacred trust of freedom, of Christianity, of the rights and hopes of man, and of unborn millions. All have an equal power, whether native or foreign in birth; whether friends or enemies of civil and religious freedom; whether vir-tuous or vicious ; whether friends or enemies of the Gospel,—all have an equal power to carry out or defeat the great ends of our Fathers, and the higher ends of our Redeemer-King.

I speak rather as a man and a Christian, than as a citizen, when I say, that next to the bond of brotherhood in Christ, and the ties of kindred, I deem nothing on earth more sacred than the bond which gives political unity to twenty five millions of people under such a constitution, on such a territory, and in such a period of the world's history. And I speak of it before this Society, because our success depends upon the degree to which our people believe and feel the unity of the American Republic.

We have, then, one country. There are with us family governments by millions, town governments by thousands, state governments by tens ; but the American Republic is one ; its interests are one. "The eye cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee." Mackinaw may be north, and New Orleans south ; Maine may be east, and California west ; but, east or west, south or north, "if one member suffer, all suffer with it ;" if one is weak, all have an interest in strengthening it. We must, then, fellow citizens, fellow Protestants, fellow Christians, we must take lofty ground, broad views ; broad as our territory, broad as our circle of political influence on the nations ; broad as our circle of missionary operations. We must devote time to a careful survey of our whole country ; we must volunteer for Christ and our people and our race, to survey the whole field, and estimate all wants as common wants, and all interests as one.

There are two forms of migration in our country, having results fully corresponding to their spirit. One is purely secular and selfish ; the other is christian. It has been so from the beginning. We had on one side the Puritan and the Huguenot, and on the other the Cavalier and Merchant Adventurer. So many other causes have come in to modify the character of the older States, that we cannot refer to their present character in illustration of this point. But in the recently organized communities it is very striking. Galesburg, Oberlin, Marietta, and many others, were christian colonies ; and they, like the Pilgrims, commenced their existence with churches, schools and colleges. But the great majority of villages, cities and States, being founded in a merely adventurous spirit of business, the consequence is, that, to a great extent, it is long before the common school can be established ; still longer is the interval before a supply of competent teachers can be furnished ; still longer, before a high literary institution can be organized and sustained. Depending on a precarious foreign supply of teachers and of pastors, there is a fearful period of financial prosperity, without a corresponding intellectual and religious progress. A few men, educated under more favorable influences, feel the urgent want, but they can do little to remove it.

A Christian Brotherhood.

"We that are strong," said one taught and commissioned of Christ, "ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." The Western churches are weak. This may be seen by comparing their circumstances with those of the early settlers in the Atlantic colonies, and of missionaries to the heathen. The missionaries to the heathen are weak, because they are a few persons laboring in the midst of a mighty organization, which they are to overthrow, and a venerated public sentiment, which they are to change. The early churches of the colonies were weak, because they partook of the infancy of society around them. But time, with the foreign missionary, is not precisely what it is with our new settlements. The sooner, indeed, he begins to labor successfully, the more individuals may be blessed by his influence. But a delay of one generation, painful as it is, is merely delay. It will not determine the question whether that community is to become christian or infidel. And the early colonial churches could afford to grow slowly, because society was growing slowly. But in our new States it is not so. Society is taking shape, with a rapidity probably never known in man's history. While natural increase is taking place under the most favoring circumstances, the nations abroad are hastening the work by importing stones and timber for constructing independent and confederated empires. The molding and shaping these tribes of our Israel must come, either from accident and selfish passions, from the emissaries of anti-Christ, or from Christ's servants. And what is done must be done quickly. Ten years is a long business life in their great commercial towns. It is this peculiar fact that gives such painful prominence to the inability of the Western churches to meet the demands of society around them. This feebleness consists in their limited numbers, and the want of money. They are really called on by their circumstances to do in their infancy, what belongs to churches fully developed.

And we that are strong, should bear their infirmities. If they are in painful want, we should realize the sense of it as our own; for that is the spirit of Christ. If they come to us with importunate exhibitions of their necessities, we should remember where we go daily with our importunate requests; and recalling the reception we meet with, as the Holy Writ expresses it, "be ye therefore followers, (imitators) of God, as dear children." Their case should be particularly surveyed, their burden cheerfully shared; for that is another law of the kingdom, "bear ye one another's burdens." We are strong in the maturity of our religious and social institutions; in the ability to sustain them; in the facilities for affecting public sentiment; and strong in the means of aiding our brethren.

Home Missions in Ireland.

At a late meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, Dr. Edgar gave in the Report on Home Missions, containing the following statements: "It has been repeatedly published that the single district of Connaught contained 10,000 converts from Rome, and an appeal has been made to public charity to build eight new churches to accommodate them. In a district where, a few years since, 60,000 men assembled, at the command of the priests, to prevent a cow, protected by police, soldiers, and artillery, from being sold for tithe, there are now 800 converts from Rome, while 200 more have emigrated or died. A single mission in Ireland has in connection with it, fifty congregations of converts, and 30,000 children of Roman Catholic parents. Within the last sixteen years we have organized about 160 new congregations; and now, with about 550 ministers, and more than 480 congregations, we hold ourselves pledged to use our best energies for establishing Christ's kingdom over all the land. Missions to Romanists in the North of Ireland are still maintained at Cushenden, Six-mile-cross, and Pettingo. In Tyrone, 30 teachers, with 250 scholars, from sixty years of age and downwards, use the English Bible. Our missionary in Galway superintends forty two Irish schools, having 360 scholars, and a Sabbath school, and has Sabbath and week-day services, commanding an average attendance of forty, almost all Romanists. In Connaught we have thirteen missionaries and nine catechists, with the teachers of our schools; eleven congregations, consisting of 750 hearers, of whom 400 were, or still are, Romanists; eighteen preaching stations (at stated times), where the attendance is equally numerous; and in thirty six schools, containing 1580 pupils, of whom 1400 are the children of Romanists, our missionaries have had opportunities of giving religious education to 4300 individuals.

The following may fitly be appended to the above, as confirmatory of its general statements; while it also alludes, in the same cheering strain, to the zeal and success of several other Societies in that important field:

During the last year, in the month of September, hearing that a very great change had taken place in the Roman Catholic mind in various parts of the country; and I will confess, being very skeptical as to the extent of that change, and as to the nature of those circumstances to which I refer—I determined, when an opportunity should enable me, to visit those localities and see really what the effect of God's Word—for it was nothing else, the effect of that Book, which you distribute—had been upon the minds of thousands upon thousands of my Roman Catholic fellow-subjects. With this determination in my mind, in the month of September last, I visited the western parts of Ireland, where these great events are taking place, so that whole sites of the country had come over out of the Church of Rome, and, through the medium of the Scriptures, had been led to join the Protestant Church. I went, therefore, in the first instance, to the west of Galway; from thence I proceeded to visit the various missionary stations, some under the Irish Church Missionary Society, some under the Irish Society, some under the Coast Society, some under the Reformation Society, and some under the Presbyterian Church Society, but all of them working together for the same object, all of them imbued with the same harmony—and no kind of attempt to meddle one with the other, except to give each other all the assistance they can in the great work in which they are all engaged. I could mention many schools which I visited. Go where you will amongst them, the cost of that Book is not to be told. Teachers and pupils will thank you for no other book—they will take no other book—they will read no other book. They value that book—they love that book—and I believe the greatest enemy of the country will not be able to take that book away from them.

"Jumpers."

A very interesting circumstance happened, showing the quickness of some of the children, and the knowledge which they have of Scripture. There were two boys, the one about fifteen, and the other about twelve or thirteen years of age, walking along the road, as they generally do, with their Bibles under their arms. They met with the priest of the parish. The priest asked them if they were "Jumpers." That is the name people are called by when they leave the Church of Rome. They answered, "Yea, sir, we are." "Well, then," said the priest, "how comes it that you have left the church of your fathers, and joined this system of heresy?" "O, sir," said he, "we have left the Church of Rome because she teaches us wrong." "Teaches you wrong?" the priest said, "where does she teach you wrong?" "She teaches us, sir, to worship the Virgin Mary, and the Book says, 'there is but one Mediator between man and God.'" Upon which the priest said to the eldest of the little boys, "Come, now, put up your Bible, and let us have a little conversation on theology." Upon which the little boy gave a nudge to the eldest boy, to whom the priest was speaking, and said, "Say to him, 'Get thee behind me, Satan!'"

THE HOME MISSIONARY.

Go, PREACH the GOSPEL, Mark xvi. 15.

How shall they preach except they be SENT? . . . Rom. x. 15.

VOL. XXV.

NOVEMBER, 1852.

No. 7.

Encouragements in the Work of Home Missions.

A very interesting and encouraging view of the progress and ultimate success of this great work is presented in the able Discourse of REV. PRESIDENT HITCHCOCK, of Amherst College, delivered before the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, at its last Anniversary, in Boston. The discourse is upon the text in Matthew xiii. 33—The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. We transfer to our pages the following eloquent and instructive passages:

Diffusive Energy of the Gospel.

Those engaged in the work of missions need not be discouraged, though the common principles by which men judge of the probable success of their enterprises should show their chance to be small. The fact that they are following a divine command, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, may, indeed, be sufficient to give them courage and perseverance amid powerful difficulties. But it is important, also, to know what an extraordinary instrument they possess for carrying on the enterprise; how it works its way into the hearts of men and silently changes their characters, and the whole aspect of society; and sends down an influence, they cannot tell how far, into generations unborn. It is, indeed, quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. It takes a stronger hold of society than all other influences, and abides longer. Its secret energy rouses human society into action, and propagates the change from individual to individual, from family to family, from community to community, and sometimes from kingdom to kingdom. Nor can the missionary tell, when he deposits the leaven of the Gospel in one spot, even though scarcely heeded there, but he has started a process which shall go radiating outwards over a whole continent; for thus it has often done.

Our Country most favorable for the Diffusion of the Gospel.

But though thus adapted to cheer the missionary in every land, this principle affords much more encouragement in some countries than in others ; and most of all, on American soil ;—to the Home Missionary here.

Attempt to propagate its truths in a country where Heathenism, or Mohammedanism, or corrupt Christianity, is firmly established ; is sustained by the learned few, and the ignorant and superstitious many, and by wealth and influence ; is linked inseparably to the government, and can show a long list of illustrious defenders. By such causes the false system has been knit firmly together, and is settled down into a hard, impenetrable mass, which resists all change. Without a miracle, you would expect that if the truth should make any headway, it would be slow and difficult. Whereas in a nation where a false religious system sets loose upon the people, and has little social or governmental support, and especially where commerce, education and free principles are breaking up the torpid and indurated mass, the way is prepared for the power of the Gospel to show its mighty transforming energy.

Facts, now, corroborate the truth of these principles. For never has the Gospel made rapid progress in any country where a false system of religion has entrenched itself behind the prejudices, the social habits, the pecuniary interests, the splendor of rites and forms, and governmental favor ; and its most signal triumphs have been witnessed where the false system has but a feeble hold upon the public mind, or men have begun to think for themselves. Certain conditions seem necessary, in order that this leaven may work ; nor where these are wanting are we to expect success, any more than that the laws of chemistry will be set aside in the process of bread-making. God does sometimes, indeed, give unexpected success by the power of his Spirit ; to show that, after all, the efficiency lies with him. But such cases are exceptions, which we cannot calculate upon, and are not our rule of judgment or of duty.

From these principles we should confidently infer, that Mohammedanism, and especially Popery, would offer more powerful obstructions to the spread of the Gospel than any other systems of error. Hence it is, that while missionary stations are multiplied among the heathen, they are yet so few in the great centers of Mohammedan and Papal influence in Asia and Europe. Nor can we doubt, that long after every heathen pagoda has been converted into a Christian temple,—nay, long after the Bible shall have supplanted the Koran in every mosque and minaret,—will the perverted Christianity of forms, propped up by leagues and bayonets, present its yet unbroken front, to be breached only in the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

On the other hand, from these same principles, we infer that nowhere on earth is there such a preparation for the spread of pure Christianity as in our own land. Here we have no inert and indurated mass of dead formalism to break up ; no frozen and petrified system of rites and ceremonies to arrest the leavening process ; no iron arm of government to check the onward movement. But the genial light and warmth of free institutions and of general education, have brought the community into a state most favorable for receiving the Gospel and giving it free course. Wherever faithfully planted, it is sure to communicate and spread its vitalizing influence outward and onward ; and if Christians will only do their duty, they may be sure that the whole land will be leavened.

The wide world does not furnish another field of missionary labor so promising. I mean not by this, that other countries are not open to the Gospel, or that missionary efforts should be limited to our own land. God bless these efforts and increase them a hundred fold in every land. But I do mean, that our country preëminently invites and demands efforts for its evangelization. I do mean, that it is a more promising and a more important field than any other on the globe, and, therefore, calls for every heart and every hand to engage in it.

Impressions from Observation Abroad.

Do I seem to any to be taking too strong ground? Let me propose to them an experiment, which I sincerely wish all my hearers could try, to test this opinion. Let them take the next steamer across the Atlantic, and in one fortnight they would find themselves on ground very favorable for a comparison. They would be traversing lands where state religions exist, with all their pompous and imposing rites and ceremonies, with their exclusive and intolerant spirit, and their hostility to freedom of opinion, and to all that is vital in personal piety. Religion there, is sustained by governmental decrees and by bayonets. Throttled in the embraces of the State, its lifeless form is made use of as a speaking-trumpet, through which are proclaimed, not the doctrines of God, but of man; such as the divine right of kings, the duty of unreserved submission to the Government and the Church; the infallibility of the Church, not of the Bible. The sweet countenance of gospel charity has been changed into that of a persecuting fiend; and the snaky locks of a gorgon cover her head, freezing and petrifying all around. All places are full of religious forms, but alas, to find its power you must search long and deep. The very highways are studded with crosses and crucified Christs, with oratories and images of the virgin, while the towns abound with vast and venerable cathedrals and chapels, full of golden images, splendid paintings, sacred relics; and the magnificent organ peals along the sounding arches and thrills the wondering soul, as the gilded priests chant their "te deums," their "pater nosters," and their "ave marias." You enter the convent at the sound of the vesper bell, and a thousand white veiled nuns are kneeling around you, and gorgeous music lends enchantment to the vesper hymn. Every where in the streets you meet the cassocked priest, and often the imposing procession, while the multitudes uncover their heads as it passes. In short, to an American, accustomed to the simplicity of our modes of worship, the most prominent feature in European lands, save in the glorious fast-anchored isle,—and even there to a great extent,—is, that in spite of the most imposing externals, the whole is little more than heartless formality,—a wretched substitute for the bread of life. Yet when he sees how firmly rooted is this system in the pride and prejudice, the worldly interest, the interests of despotic governments and a swarming priesthood, and how it is woven into the very texture of society, he cannot but feel that little short of a miracle will be required for effecting a revolution. With what deep interest, then, after only a few weeks of such observation in those lands, will the heart of the Christian American turn towards his own country. In the hallowed language of our gubernatorial proclamations he will exclaim, "God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts!" Save her religion from the base alloy of formalism, superstition and intolerance. Save her system of education from the blighting touch of aristocracy and priestcraft. Save her free institutions from the savage ferocity of the ignorant and unprincipled many, and the grinding oppression of the despotic few. Save her, for the sake of the country. And God save that whole country for her own sake, and for the sake of the world. For to save her, is to save the world; and to lose her, is to lose the world.

It needs only a short pilgrimage through the old world to excite such sentiments as these in the heart of a Massachusetts American. And his prayer to God will be, that he may live to go back and labor harder than he has ever done, to build up the cause of pure religion, of learning, and of freedom, in that land which he has now learnt to be the only one on earth where, for the present, this indissoluble trio of noble institutions has any chance of wide-spread success. And if this man learns only this lesson by his foreign tour, it is worth all the sacrifice and expense of ten thousand miles of voyage and travel.

Privilege and Responsibility of American Christians.

What a noble work, then, is committed to our hands! What an inviting field has the Home Missionary Society before it! The man who enters it finds society not only in a state more favorable for casting in the leaven of the Gospel, but that the influence of his labors is felt almost to the ends of the earth. Let him be laboring to build up some obscure waste place, say in Massachusetts. He may seem to be unnoticed and neglected. But he is doing his part towards sustaining and perpetuating the free and the religious institutions of the country, and, therefore, in fact, the eyes of many millions in Europe are watching his labors with deep interest, and with earnest prayers for his fidelity; for their chief hope of the world's emancipation rests on the success of civil and religious liberty here. And if the true Gospel be not preached and received among us, free institutions must for the present fail. In preaching the Gospel, therefore, in the obscurest nook of the land, a man may feel that he is working for the whole country, nay, for the whole world. Indeed, Providence is sending representations from the whole world to our doors. By multitudes they pour in upon us from every European land, and swarms of Asiatics are crowding into the valleys of California. So that in fact we may become missionaries to Papists, Mohammedans, Boodists and other heathen, without leaving our own shores.

What responsibility, then, attaches to the name and position of an American. When, in foreign lands, I have met kings and queens, dukes and marquises, counts and viscounts, they appeared to be men and women of only the ordinary stature; but when I first set my foot again upon our own shores, and met free-born Christian Americans, it seemed to me that I was looking upon giants, because God has given them the power of giants to bear up the pillars of freedom, of education, and of religion, and to cast down the pillars of ignorance, superstition and despotism.

God has committed to American Christians the noblest enterprise which he has given to the present generation in any part of the world. And he has put into our hands an instrument with which to accomplish it, a thousand times more efficacious than those employed in commerce, in manufactures, in agriculture, or indeed any ordinary art or pursuit. How dwarfed must be our piety, how low our standard of patriotism, how contemptible our philanthropy, if we do not supply the means necessary to prevent the leaven of the Gospel from being overpowered and neutralized by ignorance and depravity. Ought we to be satisfied to expend $50,000,000 annually for railways, and only one thousandth part as much in working out the grandest problem in politics, in education and religion, of this generation! Oh, if any cause has motives powerful enough to rouse men to action, it is this. If we enter into the work resolutely and cheerfully, with humble reliance on God's help, we are sure of success. And success will bring such a day of brightness and blessing to this wide continent, as never yet has visited any other. Though the deluge of ignorance, despotism and false religion, should engulf every other land, ours shall stand high above the flood and beat back its angry waves; and, ere the close of the present century, one hundred millions of Christian freemen shall here be found richly enjoying those social, political, educational, and religious rights and privileges, which God originally gave, but which man has hitherto unrighteously withheld.

Anniversaries of Auxiliaries.

CONNECTICUT MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Missionary Society of Connecticut, Auxiliary to the American Home Missionary Society, held its annual meeting in the First Church in Danbury, on Wednesday, June 16, 1852, at half-past 7 o'clock, P. M. The Reports of the Treasurer and Directors were read by Rev. HORACE HOOKER, Secretary of the Society; and were ordered to be printed with the Minutes of the General Association. Addresses were then made by Rev. Constantine Blodgett, of Pawtucket, R. I.; Rev. Harvey D. Kitchel, of Detroit, Mich.; Rev. John W. Chickering, of Portland, Me.; and Rev. Walter Clarke, of Hartford. The meeting was one of deep interest, evincing, on the part of the people of Danbury, and the General Association in attendance, the strong hold which the cause of Home Missions has upon the affections of the churches in this State.

The Treasury.

The expenditures of this Society for the year ending June 1, 1852, in aid of thirty five feeble Churches in Connecticut, were $5,096 76. An appropriation of $1,000 was made, from its Treasury, to the Rhode Island Home Missionary Society; and a remittance of the same amount sent to the Parent Society; making the disbursements of the year, $7,096 76.

The receipts for the same period were $7,711 81. In addition to the remittance of $1,000 from the treasury of this Auxiliary, the Parent Society received from Connecticut, during the year, $17,790 69; making the whole amount of receipts from Connecticut, $25,502 50.

The following extracts are presented from the Annual Report of the Directors:

Results in Connecticut.

With few exceptions, the churches aided by the Society are gathering strength. Old meeting houses are repaired or replaced by new ones; parsonages are provided; permanent funds for the support of the Gospel are increasing; while the various means for rendering public worship comfortable and attractive are introduced. Several of these churches were refreshed, the past year, with the effusions of the Holy Spirit. The different objects of benevolence are patronized, frequently to a greater amount than is received from our treasury. Some return to it a large share of their appropriations, and in one case, last year, the whole was returned. Groton and Humphreysville have voluntarily withdrawn from our list, and two or three others we expect will need no further assistance after the present year. Most of these churches enjoy the services of pastors; the rest have stated supplies. Two pastors were dismissed during the year, at their own request, and one installed.

Continued Claims of this Field.

The originators of Home Missions for New England had but a faint conception of the magnitude of the work in which they were about to engage. And well was it that they had not; for though men of wide views, and large hearts, and firm purpose, they might have hesitated to undertake the work. They thought that if the feeble churches were sustained until the existing causes of weakness and decay ceased to act, their labors would be lessened, and, perhaps, before many years become needless. But new causes of weakness have come into being, and will continue to arise for an indefinite period, even in New England. They have been specified in former reports of the Directors, and it would be superfluous to notice them again on this occasion. A remark or two on this point may not, however, be out of place. When from the increase of population or some other permanent change, a new church of our order is demanded in Connecticut, and there is a fair prospect that a little temporary aid will set it on a firm basis, why is not such a church as fair a candidate for patronage, as one at the West, which is strong only in anticipation? Why should the former, more than the latter, be required to stand forth at once in full panoply to meet unaided the battle of life? To call the one Church Extension, and the other Home Missions, will not alter the result.

Extensive Reach of this Instrumentality.

Through the favor of Providence, Home Missions, if they have not kept pace with the unexampled growth of our country, have rapidly increased both in extent and efficiency of operations. Some of the founders of the Domestic Missionary Society of Connecticut, now Auxiliary to the A. H. M. Society, live to see the institution which they formed specially for this State, and whose feeble infancy they cherished with parental care, scattering, with a goodly company of fellow helpers, its bounties among the young churches of California and Oregon. Heaven speed their united agency among these outposts of our country; for the spirit which nourishes truth, liberty, and christian institutions in our own land, may leap from these shores over the broad ocean, and repeat the glorious work on another continent. For attaining such a result, the purest doctrines and forms of Christianity are at this moment imperatively demanded on our Western borders. If the light there be darkness, how great darkness will settle down for other long ages over the nations on the opposite side of the Pacific? To convert the heathen, we send missionaries—not money seekers; men who have felt the love of God in their souls, and will exhibit the principles and temper of the Gospel in their lives—not men who make “gold their hope and fine gold their confidence.” But now the heathen are rushing by thousands to our country, and will receive their first impressions of what Christianity is, from its exhibition in the cities and among the gold mines and placers of California. These impressions they will carry back to their own land, and the name of Jesus will be magnified or defamed according as they witness in our countrymen the fruits of holy living, or the disgusting scenes enacted by depravity, quickened through the want of social restraints and religious institutions.

Action and Reaction in Missionary Labors.

There is a mutual connection between all the benevolent agencies for extending Christianity. Especially is there, at the present day, such a connection between Foreign and Domestic Missions in this country. If ever there was room for preferring one of these causes to the other, that time is past. Both are now Foreign—both Home. Among the Catholics of Europe, Foreign Missions are not only preparing residents for the Western Valley, but shaping the hearts and minds of those who are to be our own neighbors and fellow citizens. In the Celestial Empire, the Foreign Missionary is training the heathen to preach the gospel to their countrymen in California; while Home Missions on our Western borders will send back Chinamen to their own land “with abundant blessings of the Gospel of Christ.” If intercourse with the opposite coast of Asia shall be permitted to continue—as in some form and to some extent it undoubtedly will—we might find difficulty in deciding whether a portion of the missions for our own country would not best have their seat in China; and a part of the work of missions for the Oriental nations be best accomplished in California.

In the movements of the Divine government to extend the true religion, sometimes the teacher is sent to his pupils; as when the Apostles and primitive Christians, “scattered abroad” by persecution, “went every where preaching the word.” Sometimes the pupils are sent to their teachers; as when whole nations were brought down from the North and planted in the midst of christian institutions. And sometimes masses of heathen, removed to a christian land by force, or allured to it by the hope of gain, become imbued with the principles and spirit of the Gospel, and return to enlighten and reform their ignorant countrymen. To accomplish such a result seems to be one reason why Providence kept so long in reserve the treasures of the golden West. Let the Gospel be proclaimed through all its cities and villages, its valleys and mountains,—then shall the day spring from on high break upon the teeming millions of Asia, and the song of salvation wafted over the wide waters prove that our labor has not been “in vain in the Lord.”

MAINE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Forty Fifth Annual Meeting of the Maine Missionary Society was held in Seaport, June 23, 1852. Rev. WILLIAM T. DWIGHT, D. D., of Portland, President of the Society, took the chair, and the exercises were opened with reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. EDWARD S. DWIGHT, of Saco, from 2 Cor. 15: 3,—Now, for a long season, Israel hath been without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law. The truth inculcated, in an interesting and impressive manner, was, that “a Teaching Ministry, an order of men officially charged with the stated and frequent religious instruction of the people, is indispensable to the permanent welfare of society." Then followed the Report of the Treasurer, JOHN HOW, Esq.; and the Report of the Trustees, which was read by Rev. BENJAMIN TAPPAN, D. D., Secretary of the Society. Addresses were made by Rev. S. H. Hayes, Rev. Dr. Pomroy, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Rev. Dr. Carruthers, of Portland, Dr. Pond, of Bangor Theological Seminary, Dr. Adams, of Brunswick, and several others, both clergymen and laymen; all expressive of the lively interest in this object which continues to be felt by the ministers and churches of Maine.
